H. R. 6034. An act to make available a portion of the appropriation for the immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for such counters, booths, screens, railings, seats, bunks, kitchen and laundry equipment, etc., as necessary in connection with said station;

H. R. 10989. An act making appropriation for the preservation, improvement, and perpetual care of Huron Cemetery, a burial place of the Wyandotte Indians, in the city of Kansas City, Kans.;

H. R. 11707. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War," approved April 19, 1908, and for other purposes;

H. R. 12889. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell the unsold and unappropriated portions of lands within the town site of Newell, S. Dak., and for other purposes;

H. R. 13046. An act to consolidate certain forest lands in the Oregon National Forest, in the State of Oregon;

H. R. 14533. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee simple to the district school board numbered 112, of White Earth Village, Becker County, Minn., for a certain tract of land upon payment therefor to the United States in trust for the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota;

H. R. 14824. An act to prevent fraud at public auctions in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 15807. An act to provide for holding sessions of the United States district court in the district of Maine and for dividing said district into divisions, and providing for offices of the clerk and marshal of said district to be maintained in each of said divisions, and for the appointment of a field deputy marshal in the division in which the marshal does not reside;

H. R. 16532. An act authorizing an adjustment of the boundaries of the Whitman National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 173. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of September salaries to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the day of adjournment of the present session; and

H. J. Res. 252. Joint resolution authorizing the transfer of the Government exhibit, or such portion thereof as the President may determine is advisable, now at the Panama-California International Exposition, at San Diego, Cal., to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition, at Gulfport, Miss.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the consideration of this report?

Mr. FALL. For a conference report, I yield.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17645) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 11, 13, 17, 19, 20, 29, 30, 31, 37, and 38.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 6, 9, 12, 14, 15, 18, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, and 51, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For refund of internal-revenue taxes to the J. L. da Roza Estate (Inc.), of Elk Grove, Cal., in accordance with private act numbered 83, approved August 7, 1916, $1,158"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit lines 4 and 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the sum "$200,000," and in line 9 strike out the sum "$200,000," and insert in lieu thereof the sum "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, and on page 9 of the bill in line 8 strike out the word "purpose" and insert in lieu thereof the word "purchase"; and after line 18 insert as a new paragraph the following:

"The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate the methods of transacting the public business in the Bureau of Internal Revenue and prepare recommendations for the improvement thereof and submit the same to the Secretary of the Treasury as early as practicable for his approval and to Congress at its next session."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit all of lines 9 to 14, inclusive, of said amendment and in lieu thereof insert as a separate paragraph the following:

"One-half of the two foregoing sums shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of the Treasury of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"National Memorial Celebration and Peace Jubilee, Vicksburg, Miss.: For expenses, within the limits of this appropriation, in connection with the celebration to be held at Vicksburg, Miss., in the year 1917, by the survivors of the Armies of the Tennessee and of the Mississippi who participated in the Battle of Vicksburg in July, 1863, in commemoration of a half century of peace and good fellowship which happily exists throughout the Republic, to be expended under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of War as follows: For necessary sewerage, sanitation and hospital service of persons attending said celebration, for necessary camp and garrison equipment, rations and supplies for veterans of the Civil War attending said celebration, $150,000, no part of which shall be available until after January 1, 1917: Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to fully complete all arrangements herein authorized before October 14, 1917, and that all camp equipment, including tents, supplies, and rations shall be fully ready for use by that date: Provided further, That the National Association of Vicksburg Veterans, formed in Chicago, Ill., August 9, 1913, shall have charge of the order of exercises during the celebration; the physical control of the camp and grounds and the movement of troops and marching bodies shall be in the hands of the Secretary of War, under such officers as he may detail for that purpose: Provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized to reimburse and pay, out of the amount herein appropriated the traveling expenses of not exceeding seven members of the council of administration or of the executive committee of the National Association of Vicksburg Veterans for journeys authorized by him to be taken in attendance upon any one meeting in the interest of said celebration."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "boards," insert the following: "fiscal year 1917"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of the amendment after the word "for" insert the words "the first Tuesday after"; and the Senate agree to the same.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
N. P. BRYAN,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. J. FITZGERALD,
T. U. SISSON,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

APPROPRIATIONS AND EXPENDITURES.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, in order to meet misrepresentations which are constantly being made and to give to the country in convenient shape the appropriations made by Congress for the year ending July 31, 1917, and a comparison of the same with like appropriations made for the year ended July 31, 1916, I have gone carefully over the matter and have prepared some tables, which are as accurate as I have found it possible to make them. I send them to the desk and ask that they may go into the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Appropriations for 1916 compared with 1917.

Title of bill.	Law of 1916.	Amount for 1917.	Increase 1917 over 1916.	Decrease 1917 under 1916.
Agriculture	$22,971,782.00	$24,948,872.00	$1,977,090.00
Army	101,974,195.87	267,596,334.19	165,622,138.32
Diplomatic and Consular	4,061,280.01	5,355,096.66	1,293,816.65
District of Columbia	11,859,584.45	12,841,707.10	982,122.65
Fortifications	6,060,216.90	25,748,050.00	19,687,833.10
Indian	9,771,902.76	10,967,644.88	1,195,742.12
Legislative, etc	38,904,799.75	37,925,690.25	1,021,890.50
Military Academy	1,069,813.37	1,225,043.57	155,230.20
Navy	149,661,864.88	313,300,555.84	163,638,690.96
Pensions	164,100,000.00	158,065,000.00		6,035,000.00
Post Office	313,364,667.00	322,937,679.00	9,573,012.00
River and harbor	30,000,300.00	40,598,435.00	10,598,135.00
Sundry civil	126,922,750.79	128,299,285.24	1,376,534.45
Total regular annuals	978,722,857.78	1,349,809,289.64	377,121,414.86	6,035,000.00
Deficiencies	12,316,343.90	[1] 68,555,266.99	56,238,923.09
Miscellaneous	2,330,803.34	[1] 85,000,000.00	82,669,196.66
Permanent annual and indefinite appropriations	121,567,207.00	123,074,673.00	1,507,466.00
Grand total	1,114,937,012.02	1,626,439,209.63	517,537,197.61	6,035,000.00
Deduct appropriations for defense of the country	[2] 4,786,757.99	[3] 423,170,024.07	[3] 418,383,266.08
Deduct extraordinary appropriations	1,110,150,254.03	1,203,269,185.56	93,118,931.53
		[4] 85,240,940.43	[4] 85,240,940.43
Current appropriations	1,110,150,254.03	1,118,028,245.13	7,877,991.10

Increase of appropriations for current expenses of the Government; 1917 over 1916 ..... $7,877,991.10

[1] This amount is approximated

[2] The items making up this sum are as follows:

Transportation of the Army and its supplies	$3,597,575.21
Transporting interned Mexican soldiers	71,253.13
Incidental expenses, Quartermaster Corps, water and sewers at military posts, and care of hospitals	222,313.30
Provisions, Navy	133,553.79
Coal and transportation, Navy	617,767.85
Freight, military stores, and contingent expenses, Marine Corps	231,300.00
Total	4,786,757.99

[3] The items making up this sum for increases for Army and Navy purposes for defense of the country, 1917 over 1916, are as follows:

Army act	165,622,134.23
Naval act	163,638,230.95
Fortification act	19,687,833.10
Military Academy act	155,230.20
Training the Organized Militia or National Guard (Public Act 92)	400,000.00
Extraordinary appropriations for defense of the country in various acts for Military and Naval Establishments made during the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, less $4,786,759.99 made for same purposes during the third session of the Sixty-third Congress	42,091,855.89
Nitrate plant, Army reorganization act	20,000,000.00
Panama Canal fortifications, sundry civil act	1,895,951.70
Armories and arsenals, sundry civil act	4,024,895.03
Military posts, sundry civil act	1,061,935.00
Total	418,383,266.08

[4] The items making up this sum for appropriations for extraordinary purposes, 1917 over 1916, are as follows:

Ship purchase act, to carry out the provisions of	50,100,000.00
Construction of rural post roads	6,000,000.00
Alaskan Engineering Commission	6,247,623.00
Post Office act, including increase in deficiency acts of first session Sixty-fourth Congress over third session Sixty-third Congress	12,144,270.43
Federal Farm Loan Board	6,100,000.00
Collecting internal revenue	1,674,053.00
Lincoln Memorial Commission	300,000.00
Legation buildings at Shanghai, China, and Habana, Cuba, heretofore authorized by law	455,000.00
Emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service, post allowances to consular officers, and contingent expenses of United States consulates, all increases due to existence of hostilities abroad	432,000.00
Relief of sufferers from storms and floods in certain States	340,000.00
To carry out the provisions of the act to provide compensation of employees of the United States suffering injuries in the performance of their duties	550,000.00
Physical valuation of the property of carriers	500,000.00
Public Health Service, infantile paralysis outbreak (Public Act 179)	135,000.00
Total	85,240,940.43

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. For each of the two years I have taken first the total of the amounts appropriated. I have then deducted for each year the amounts appropriated for preparedness or for the defense of the country, and extraordinary appropriations, so as to find for each year the true amount of appropriations made for the current expenses of the Government.

For the year 1916 I find the total appropriations made amounted to $1,114,937,012.02. From that total I deduct the extraordinary appropriations made for the defense of the country, amounting to $4,786,759.99, leaving $1,110,150,254.03 as the amount appropriated to meet the current expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1916.

For the year ending July 31, 1917, I find the total of all appropriations amounts to $1,626,439,209.63. From this I deduct all the extraordinary appropriations made for the defense of the country, amounting to $423,170,024.07, leaving a balance of $1,203,269,185.56. From this I deduct the other extraordinary appropriations amounting to $85,240,940.43, leaving a balance of $1,118,028,245.13 as the total of amounts appropriated for the current expenses of the Government for the year 1917. Deducting the amounts appropriated for the current expenses of the Government for the year ended July 31, 1916, from the aggregate amount appropriated for the year ending July 31, 1917, for the current expenses of the Government we find that the amount for 1917 exceeds that for 1916 by $7,877,991.10.

This very moderate increase of current expenses for 1917 over those for 1916 does not more than represent the normal and natural growth and development of the country. This is a showing of which the Democratic Party may well be proud. It may be distinctly understood, too, that the Democratic Party does not pose as a party of small appropriations. It stands for economy in appropriations, but this country is big enough and rich enough to furnish the necessary money for the progressive activities which must be supplied in order to prevent retarding the growth of the country.

There has never been such a period of constructive legislation as has been shown during the present administration. The stand-pat inertia of successive Republican administrations has been supplanted by progress in almost every department of the material life of the country. In taking care of those activities it will be noted that we have appropriated over $50,000,000 for the purchase of ships to restore the American merchant marine on the high seas, $6,000,000 for the construction of rural post roads, over $6,000,000 for the Alaskan railroad, $6,100,000 for the Farm Loan Board, $455,000 for the purchase of legation buildings in China and Cuba, and many other lesser sums for other necessary activities of the Government.

The increased appropriations to put the Army in efficient shape amount to more than $165,000,000, and for the Navy more than $163,000,000, and for fortifications about $20,000,000 in excess of the amounts heretofore annually appropriated.

We have appropriated $20,000,000 for a nitrate plant in order that this country might not be entirely dependent on Chile for the nitrates necessary for the manufacture of explosives. The total increases over last year for the defense of the country amount to $418,383,266.08, and the total amount of extraordinary appropriation for the necessary activities of the Government is $85,240,940.43.

The Democratic Congress has simply appropriated the necessary money to make effective the progressive constructive legislation which was absolutely necessary for the protection of the country and the development of its material interests. The prosperity which the country is now experiencing is a result of Democratic constructive legislation and the appropriations made to make the same effective.

Mr. President, if time were available I would gladly go into detail in explanation of this table; but the table is so constructed as to furnish full information as to all details in connection with all of the appropriations made during the year 1917. That statement or statements—it is all on one paper, but contains quite a number of statements—will go into the RECORD as a part of my remarks, and will explain more in detail than I have explained the several appropriations made for the conduct of the business of the Government.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. WARREN. I assume that the Senator from Virginia has included the permanent appropriations.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They are set out in this statement which I have filed.

Mr. WARREN. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has made the best statement he could, and is making the best of a very bad matter. The Committee on Appropriations, of course, must provide for what the laws state shall be expended.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption, I will say that he is a member of the Committee on Appropriations; and if any of these appropriations were extravagant or improper it seems to me he ought to have made his voice heard in the committee. I do not recall, however, that in a single instance his voice has been raised to protest against a single appropriation that has been brought before the Senate from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator had waited a moment, until I had proceeded further, he would not have had occasion to say what he did. I was about to say that it has been quite usual in years past for the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to make a careful statement, to present it on the last day of the session, and to give to the ranking Senator of that committee on the minority side a copy, as early as convenient, so that he can make any observations or criticisms that he sees fit to make.

I was about to say, when interrupted, that the Committee on Appropriations considered it its duty, and I have considered it such, as the chairman has also considered it, to appropriate money to fulfill the engagements or obligations of the Government called for by the various treaties and bills that have been passed into laws. In other words, we are to provide the means to pay what the Congress of the United States has engaged to pay.

But, Mr. President, it is a pretty sad commentary, not upon the Committee on Appropriations—for they have simply done their duty under the law and in the way provided by the law—but upon the great Democratic Party that came into power with a blaze of trumpets and with promises galore of what they could and would do to decrease or exterminate extravagance, to economize in expenditures, to reduce the annual outlay for running the Government, to reduce the cost of living, and various other reforms.

The thing itself makes the showing of what that party has done when put in the best possible light that figures can be arranged to show. I happen to have some figures at my desk which show that during the past eight years the appropriations are as follows:

The annual appropriations, less Panama Canal expenditures, were—

1910	$994,868,750.94
1911	838,887,924.46
1912	930,822,852.53
1913	935,336,409.06
Total	3,799,915,756.99

The 1913 appropriations were made by a Republican Senate and Democratic House.

For the last four years under Democratic rule—

The appropriations, less Panama Canal expenditures, have been as follows:

1914	$1,032,407,588.41
1915	1,094,275,613.55
1916	1,095,357,963.72
1917 (incomplete)	1,624,543,257.93

Accepting the figures given by the able chairman of the committee, which he will admit are not exactly complete because they could not well be on account of bills and treaties not yet laws which are continually being added, as, for instance, claims bills and others not yet enrolled or signed passed to-day, and also the $25,000,000 for certain islands.

As I understood the figures presented by the Senator from Virginia, the deficiency appropriations for the year amount to nearly $70,000,000. As the appropriations for the next fiscal year—already commenced—are larger for various purposes so will the deficiencies be larger than for past years, and the total amount necessary for the fiscal year will actually run away above $1,700,000,000. And this, too, without mentioning the millions upon millions—up into several hundred millions—that we are committed to for increased river and harbor improvements, Navy, and other outlays to follow in later years.

I am perfectly willing, instead of following the usual course of having been provided with a copy and the time to perhaps prepare some extended remarks, to leave the matter as the chairman of the committee and the members of the majority party have made it. He has done the best he could. He has made as good a showing as he could. He is an able and conscientious chairman with a most able assistant in his chief clerk. He has made the only showing that he could, and that is to state the amount as nearly as may be that we have spent or that we have engaged to spend; and the committee have only fulfilled their functions in providing the means.

I repeat, I am willing to let it stand as a monument to the party that after three or four years of great effort in lowering the price of living and to lower the expenses of the Government, to look upon the list of appropriations just as the chairman has presented it and as it will appear in the RECORD to-morrow. Everybody knows the cost of living has not been reduced, and the chairman has not raised that point, so I forbear discussion of it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr President, I want just to say one word of explanation. The Senator spoke of the chairman having to submit a statement.

Mr. WARREN. I laid no blame on that point.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have never known such a custom. This is my individual statement. I have not submitted it to Democrats or Republicans. I am responsible for it, and nobody else is. I have not submitted any statement on behalf of the committee, but I have submitted a statement that is supported by the records of the Senate. Every single item in it is beyond doubt correct and is fully verified by the record.

Mr. WARREN. That is what I have said; and if I have not said it plain enough, I want to bear witness as to the fact. As to the matter of furnishing a copy of the statement, if the Senator will look back in former years, he will find that it was generally the custom and sometimes led to long debates in the House and Senate. But I absolve the Senator from any desire to withhold anything from me or from any Senator or from the public.

THE REVENUE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. FALL. For a question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to ask the Senator if he will not yield to me for the purpose of presenting a conference report and asking for its immediate consideration.

Mr. FALL. I yield for that purpose, with the understanding that I will not lose the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, on behalf of the conferees of the Senate, I present the report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill 16763, to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the conference report.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 9, 14, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 72, 77, 82, 103, 110, 134, 159, 160, 161, 168, 169, 170, 172, 175, 178, 191, 212, 218, 220, 227, 230, 234, 254, 268, and 269.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31½, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 38, 39 41, 42, 43, 46, 47, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 55½, 56½, 62, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 73, 75, 76, 78, 79, 81, 83, 85, 86, 87, 88, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 104, 105 107, 108, 108½ 109, 117, 121, 122, 123, 124, 126, 127, 128, 130, 131, 138, 143, 145, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 162, 167, 171, 173, 174, 176, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 188, 189, 190, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 207, 223, 224, 225, 233, 236, 238, 239, 241, 243, 244, 247, 252, 255, 258, 259, 260, and 261, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(c) For the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived from the sale or other disposition of property, real, personal, or mixed, acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of March 1, 1913, shall be the basis for determining the amount of such gain derived."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In addition to the matter inserted by said amendment insert, on page 8 of the bill, line 6, after the word "school," the word "district"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Eighth. (a) In the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof, which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made, such reasonable allowance to be made in the case of both (a) and (b) under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That when the allowances authorized in (a) and (b) shall equal the capital originally invested, or in case of purchase made prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value as of that date, no further allowance shall be made."

And, on page 9 of the bill, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words ": Provided, That no" and insert a period and the word "No."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In addition to the matter inserted by said amendment, insert on page 10 of the bill, line 19, after the word "school," the word "district"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Fifth. In transactions entered into for profit but not connected with his business or trade, the losses actually sustained therein during the year to an amount not exceeding the profits arising therefrom, in the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(a) In the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made, such reasonable allowance to be made in the case of both (a) and (b) under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That when the allowance authorized in (a) and (b) shall equal the capital originally invested, or in case of purchase made prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value as of that date, no further allowance shall be made."

And on page 11 of the bill, lines 21 and 22, strike out ": Provided, That no" and insert in lieu thereof a period and the word "No"

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 7. (a) That for the purpose of the normal tax only, there shall be allowed as an exemption in the nature of a deduction from the amount of the net income of each of said persons, ascertained as provided herein, the sum of $3,000, plus $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a head of a family, or a married man with a wife living with him, or plus the sum of $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a married woman with a husband living with her; but in no event shall this additional exemption of $1,000 be deducted by both a husband and wife: Provided, That only one deduction of $4,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of both husband and wife when living together: Provided further, That guardians or trustees shall be allowed to make this personal exemption as to income derived from the property of which such guardian or trustee has charge in favor of each ward or cestui que trust: Provided further, That in no event shall a ward or cestui que trust be allowed a greater personal exemption than $3,000, or, if married, $4,000, as provided in this paragraph, from the amount of net income received from all sources. There shall also be allowed an exemption from the amount of the net income of estates of deceased persons during the period of administration or settlement, and of trust or other estates the income of which is not distributed annually or regularly under the provisions of paragraph (b), section 2, the sum of $3,000, including such deductions as are allowed under section 5."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "he has sufficient knowledge of the affairs of such person, trust, or estate to enable him to make such return and that the same is, to the best of his knowledge and belief"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That the term 'dividends,' as used in this title shall be held to mean any distribution made or ordered to be made by a corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, out of its earnings or profits accrued since March 1, 1913, and payable to its shareholders, whether in cash or in stock of the corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, which stock dividend shall be considered income, to the amount of its cash value."; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the last line of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "by sale of such property"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "and cooperative banks without capital stock organized and operated for mutual purposes and without profit" and a semicolon; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "(a) in the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made, such reasonable allowance to be made in the case of both (a) and (b) under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That when the allowance authorized in (a) and (b) shall equal the capital originally invested, or in case of purchase made prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value as of that date, no further allowance shall be made; and (c) in the case of insurance companies, the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds and the sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts:"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In addition to the matter inserted by said amendment on page 33 of the bill, line 13, after the word "school," insert the word "district"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(a) of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made, such reasonable allowance to be made in the case of both (a) and (b) under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That when the allowance authorized in (a) and (b) shall equal the capital originally invested, or in case of purchase made prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value as of that date, no further allowance shall be made; and (c) in the case of insurance companies, the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds and the sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts:"

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In addition to the matter inserted by said amendment on page 36 of the bill, line 25, after the word "school" insert the word "district"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That upon the examination of any return of income made pursuant to this title, the act of August 5, 1909, entitled 'An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,' and the act of October 3, 1913, entitled 'An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' if it shall appear that amounts of tax have been paid in excess of those properly due, the taxpayer shall be permitted to present a claim for refund thereof notwithstanding the provisions of section 3228 of the Revised Statutes" and a semicolon; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(d) That section 3225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3225. When a second assessment is made in case of any list, statement, or return, which in the opinion of the collector or deputy collector was false or fraudulent, or contained any understatement or undervaluation, no tax collected under such assessment shall be recovered by any suit unless it is proved that the said list, statement, or return was not false nor fraudulent and did not contain any understatement or undervaluation; but this section shall not apply to statements or returns made or to be made in good faith under the laws of the United States regarding annual depreciation of oil or gas wells and mines.'"

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "21"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "22"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "23"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "24"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 116, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "25"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 118, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "200"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "201"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "203"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 125, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "202"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 129, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "203"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "205"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 133, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "204"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 135, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "205"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 136, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "203"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "203"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 139, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Return shall be made in all cases of estates subject to the tax or where the gross estate at the death of the decedent exceeds $60,000, and in the case of the estate of every nonresident any part of whose gross estate is situated in the United States. If the executor is unable to make a complete return as to any part of the gross estate of the decedent, he shall include in his return a description of such part and the name of every person holding a legal or beneficial interest therein, and upon notice from the collector such person shall in like manner make a return as to such part of the gross estate. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall make all assessments of the tax under the authority of existing administrative special and general provisions of law relating to the assessment and collection of taxes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 140, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "206"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 141, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "205"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 142, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "207"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 144, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "208"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "209"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 154, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "210"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numberd 155, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "205"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 156, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "211"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 157, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "212"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 158, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "300"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 163, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 301. (1) That every person manufacturing (a) gunpowder and other explosives, excepting blasting powder and dynamite used for industrial purposes; (b) cartridges, loaded and unloaded, caps or primers, exclusive of those used for industrial purposes; (c) projectiles, shells, or torpedoes of any kind, including shrapnel, loaded or unloaded, or fuses, or complete rounds of ammunition; (d) firearms of any kind and appendages, including small arms, cannon, machine guns, rifles, and bayonets; (e) electric motor boats, submarine or submersible vessels or boats; or (f) any part of any of the articles mentioned in (b), (c), (d), or (e), shall pay for each taxable year, in addition to the income tax imposed by Title I, an excise tax of 12½ per cent upon the entire net profits actually received or accrued for said year from the sale or disposition of such articles manufactured within the United States: Provided, however, That no person shall pay such tax upon net profits received during the year 1916 derived from the sale and delivery of the articles enumerated in this section under contracts executed and fully performed by such person prior to January 1, 1916.

"(2) This section shall cease to be of effect at the end of one year after the termination of the present European war, which shall be evidenced by the proclamation of the President of the United States declaring such war to have ended.

"SEC. 302. That in computing net profits under the provisions of this title, for the purpose of the tax there shall be allowed as deductions from the gross amount received or accrued for the taxable year from the sale or disposition of such articles manufactured within the United States, the following items:

"(a) The cost of raw materials entering into the manufacture;

"(b) Running expenses, including rentals, cost of repairs and maintenance, heat, power, insurance, management, salaries, and wages;

"(c) Interest paid within the taxable year on debts or loans contracted to meet the needs of the business, and the proceeds of which have been actually used to meet such needs;

"(d) Taxes of all kinds paid during the taxable year with respect to the business or property relating to the manufacture;

"(e) Losses actually sustained within the taxable year in connection with the business of manufacturing such articles, including losses from fire, flood, storm, or other casualty, and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise; and

"(f) A reasonable allowance according to the conditions peculiar to each concern, for amortization of the values of buildings and machinery, account being taken of the exceptional depreciation of special plants.

"SEC. 303. If any person manufactures any article specified in section 301 and during any taxable year or part thereof, whether under any agreement, arrangement, or understanding, or otherwise, sells or disposes of any such article at less than the fair market price obtainable therefor, either (a) in such manner as directly or indirectly to benefit such person or any person directly or indirectly interested in the business of such person, or (b) with intent to cause such benefit, the gross amount received or accrued for such year or part thereof from the sale or disposition of such article shall be taken to be the amount which would have been received or accrued from the sale or disposition of such article if sold at the fair market price.

"SEC. 304. On or before the 1st day of March, 1917, and the 1st day of March in each year thereafter a true and accurate return under oath shall be made by each person manufacturing articles specified in section 301 to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which such person has his principal office or place of business in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, setting forth specifically the gross amount of income received or accrued from the sale or disposition of the articles specified in section 301, and from the total thereof deducting the aggregate items of allowance authorized in section 302, and such other particulars as to the gross receipts and items of allowance as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may require.

"SEC. 305. All such returns shall be transmitted forthwith by the collector to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall, as soon as practicable, assess the tax found due and notify the person making such return of the amount of tax for which such person is liable, and such person shall pay the tax to the collector on or before 30 days from the date of such notice.

"SEC. 306. If the Secretary of the Treasury or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have reason to be dissatisfied with the return as made, or if no return is made, the commissioner is authorized to make an investigation and to determine the amount of net profits and may assess the proper tax accordingly. He shall notify the person making, or who should have made, such return and shall proceed to collect the tax in the same manner as provided in this title, unless the person so notified shall file a written request for a hearing with the commissioner within 30 days after the date of such notice; and on such hearing the burden of establishing to the satisfaction of the commissioner that the gross amount received or accrued or the amount of net profits, as determined by the commisioner, is incorrect, shall devolve upon such person.

"SEC. 307. The tax may be assessed on any person for the time being owning or carrying on the business, or on any person acting as agent for that person in carrying on the business, or where a business has ceased, on the person who owned or carried on the business, or acted as agent in carrying on the business immediately before the time at which the business ceased.

"SEC. 308. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized, personally or by his agent, to examine the books, accounts, and records of any person subject to this tax.

"SEC. 309. No person employed by the United States shall communicate, or allow to be communicated to any person not legally entitled thereto, any information obtained under the provisions of this title, or allow any such person to inspect or have access to any return furnished under the provisions of this title.

"SEC. 310. Whoever violates any of the provisions of this title or the regulations made thereunder, or who knowingly makes false statements in any return, or refuses to give such information as may be called for, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall, in addition to paying any tax to which he is liable, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 311. All administrative, special, and general provisions of law relating to the assessment and collection of taxes not specifically repealed are hereby made to apply to this title so far as applicable and not inconsistent with its provisions.

"SEC. 312. The commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make all necessary regulations for carrying out the provisions of this title, and may require any person subject to such provisions to furnish him with further information whenever in his judgment the same is necessary to collect the tax provided for herein."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 164, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 165, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 401. That natural wine within the meaning of this act shall be deemed to be the product made from the normal alcoholic fermentation of the juice of sound, ripe grapes, without addition or abstraction, except such as may occur in the usual cellar treatment of clarifying and aging: Provided, however, That the product made from the juice of sound, ripe grapes by complete fermentation of the must under proper cellar treatment and corrected by the addition (under the supervision of a gauger or storekeeper-gauger in the capacity of gauger) of a solution of water and pure cane, beet, or dextrose sugar (containing, respectively, not less than 95 per cent of actual sugar, calculated on a dry basis) to the must or to the wine, to correct natural deficiencies, when such addition shall not increase the volume of the resultant product more than 35 per cent, and the resultant product does not contain less than 5 parts per thousand of acid before fermentation and not more than 13 per cent of alcohol after complete fermentation, shall be deemed to be wine within the meaning of this act, and may be labeled, transported, and sold as 'wine,' qualified by the name of the locality where produced, and may be further qualified by the name of its own particular type or variety: And provided further, That wine as defined in this section may be sweetened with cane sugar or beet sugar or pure condensed grape must and fortified under the provisions of this act, and wines so sweetened or fortified shall be considered sweet wine within the meaning of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 166, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "402"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 177, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the words "or section four hundred and one of this act" and a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 187, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "1½ cents"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 201, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the section number proposed by the Senate amendment strike out "55" and insert "403"; and the Senate agree to the same

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 202, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the section number contained in the Senate amendment strike out "56" and insert "404"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 203, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert at the beginning of the amendment the following: "SEC. 405"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 204, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the section number proposed by the Senate amendment strike out the numeral "57" and insert "406"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 205, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "407"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 206, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Every corporation, joint-stock company or association, now or hereafter organized in the United States for profit and having a capital stock represented by shares, and every insurance company, now or hereafter organized under the laws of the United States, or any State or Territory of the United States, shall pay annually a special excise tax with respect to the carrying on or doing business by such corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, equivalent to 50 cents for each $1,000 of the fair value of its capital stock, and in estimating the value of capital stock the surplus and undivided profits shall be included: Provided, That in the case of insurance companies such deposits and reserve funds as they are required by law or contract to maintain or hold for the protection of or payment to or apportionment among policyholders shall not be included. The amount of such annual tax shall in all cases be computed on the basis of the fair average value of the capital stock for the preceding year: Provided, That for the purpose of this tax an exemption of $99,000 shall be allowed from the capital stock as defined in this paragraph of each corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company: And provided further, That a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, actually paying the tax imposed by section 301 of Title III of this act shall be entitled to a credit as against the tax imposed by this paragraph equal to the amount of the tax so actually paid: And provided further, That this tax shall not be imposed upon any corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company not engaged in business during the preceding taxable year, or which is exempt under the provisions of section 11, Title I, of this act.

"Every corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company, now or hereafter organized for profit under the laws of any foreign country and engaged in business in the United States, shall pay annually a special excise tax with respect to the carrying on or doing business in the United States by such corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company, equivalent to 50 cents for each $1,000 of the capital actually invested in the transaction of its business in the United States: Provided, That in the case of insurance companies such deposits or reserve funds as they are required by law or contract to maintain or hold in the United States for the protection of or payment to or apportionment among policyholders shall not be included. The amount of such annual tax shall in all cases be computed on the basis of the average amount of capital so invested during the preceding year: Provided, That for the purpose of this tax an exemption from the amount of capital so invested shall be allowed equal to such proportion of $99,000 as the amount so invested bears to the total amount invested in the transaction of business in the United States or elsewhere: Provided further, That this exemption shall be allowed only if such corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company makes return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under regulations prescribed by him, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, of the amount of capital invested in the transaction of business outside the United States: And provided further, That a corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company, actually paying the tax imposed by section 301 of Title III of this act, shall be entitled to a credit as against the tax imposed by this paragraph equal to the amount of the tax so actually paid: And provided further, That this tax shall not be imposed upon any corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company not engaged in business during the preceding taxable year, or which is exempt under the provisions of section 11, Title I, of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 208, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Sixth. Proprietors of theaters, museums, and concert halls, where a charge for admission is made, having a seating capacity of not more than 250, shall pay $25; having a seating capacity of more than 250 and not exceeding 500, shall pay $50; having a seating capacity exceeding 500 and not exceeding 800, shall pay $75; having a seating capacity of more than 800, shall pay $100. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls or armories rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theater: Provided, That in cities, towns, or villages of 5,000 inhabitants or less the amount of such payment shall be one-half of that above stated: Provided further, That whenever any such edifice is under lease at the passage of this act, the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to said lease."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 209, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the said amendment insert the following: "except in private homes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 210, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "408"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 211, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert a comma and the following: "including small cigars weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 213, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "409"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 214, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "410"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 215, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "411"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 216, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "412"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 217, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 413. That all internal-revenue agents and inspectors be granted leave of absence with pay, which shall not be cumulative, not to exceed 30 days in any calendar year, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 219, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 221, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Group I. Acenaphthene, anthracene having a purity of less than 25 per cent, benzol, carbazol having a purity of less than 25 per cent, cresol, cumol, fluorene, metacresol having a purity of less than 90 per cent, methylanthracene, methylnaphthalene, naphthalene having a solidifying point less than 79 degrees centigrade, orthocresol having a purity of less than 90 per cent, paracresol having a purity of less than 90 per cent, pyridin, quinolin, toluol, xylol, crude coal tar, pitch of coal tar, dead or creosote oil, anthracene oil, all other distillates which on being subjected to distillation yield in the portion distilling below 200 degrees centigrade a quantity of tar acids less than 5 per cent of the original distillate, and all other products that are found naturally in coal tar, whether produced or obtained from coal tar or other source, and not otherwise specially provided for in this title, shall be exempt from duty."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 222, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the said amendment insert:

"Group II. Amidonaphthol, amidophenol, amidosalicylic acid, anilin oil, anilin salts, anthracene having a purity of 25 per cent or more, anthraquinone, benzoic acid, benzaldehyde, benzylchloride, benzidin, binitrobenzol, binitrochlorobenzol, binitronaphthalene, binitrotoluol, carbazol having a purity of 25 per cent or more, chlorophthalic acid, cumidin, dimethylanilin, dianisidin, dioxynaphthalene, diphenylamin, metacreosol having a purity of 90 per cent or more, methylanthraquinone, metanilic acid, naphthalene having a solidifying point of 79° C. or above, naphthylamin, naphthol, naphthylenediamin, nitrobenzol, nitrotoluol, nitronaphthalene, nitranilin, nitrophenylenediamin, nitrotoluylenediamin, orthocresol having a purity of 90 per cent or more, paracresol having a purity of 90 per cent or more, phenol, phthalic acid, phthalic anhydride, phenylenediamin, phenylnaphthylamin, resorcin, salicylic acid, sulphanilic acid, toluidin, tolidin, toluylenediamin, xylidin, or any sulphoacid or sulphonacid salt of any of the foregoing, all similar products obtained, derived, or manufactured in whole or in part from the products provided for in Group I, and all distillates which on being subjected to distillation yield in the portion distilling below 200° C. a quantity of tar acids equal to more than 5 per cent of the original distillate, all the foregoing not colors, dyes, or stains, photographic chemicals, medicinals, flavors, or explosives, and not otherwise provided for in this title, and provided for in the paragraphs of the act of October 3, 1913, which are hereinafter specifically repealed by section 502, 15 per cent ad valorem."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 226, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "501"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 228, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 229, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "(except natural and synthetic alizarin, and dyes obtained from alizarin, anthracene, and carbazol; natural and synthetic indigo and all indigoids, whether or not obtained from indigo; and medicinals and flavors)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 231, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 232, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "502"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 235, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"TITLE VI. PRINTING PAPER.

"SEC. 600. That paragraph 322, Schedule M, and paragraph 567 of the free list of the act entitled 'An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' approved October 3, 1913, be amended so that the same shall read as follows:

"'322. Printing paper (other than paper commercially known as handmade or machine handmade paper, japan paper, and imitation japan paper by whatever name known), unsized, sized, or glued, suitable for the printing of books and newspapers, but not for covers or bindings, not specially provided for in this section, valued above 5 cents per pound, 12 per cent ad valorem: Provided, however, That if any country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government shall impose any export duty, export license fee, or other charge of any kind whatsoever (whether in the form of additional charge or license fee or otherwise) upon printing paper, wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp, there shall be imposed upon printing paper, valued above 5 cents per pound, when imported either directly or indirectly from such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government, an additional duty equal to the amount of the highest export duty or other export charge imposed by such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government, upon either printing paper or upon an amount of wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp necessary to manufacture such printing paper.

"'567. Printing paper (other than paper commercially known as handmade or machine handmade paper, japan paper, and imitation japan paper by whatever name known), unsized, sized, or glued, suitable for the printing of books and newspapers, but not for covers or bindings, not specially provided for in this section, valued at not above 5 cents per pound, decalcomania paper not printed.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 237, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 240, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "701"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 242, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "702"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 245, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "703"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 246, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "704"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 248, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "705"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 249, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "706"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 250, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "707"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 251, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "708"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 253, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "709"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 256, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 257, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "801"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 262, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "802"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 263, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert: "Provided, That the above shall not be interpreted to prevent the establishing in this country on the part of a foreign producer of an exclusive agency for the sale in the United States of the products of said foreign producer or merchant, nor to prevent such exclusive agent from agreeing not to use, purchase, or deal in the article of any other person, but this proviso shall not be construed to exempt from the provisions of this section any article imported by such exclusive agent if such agent is required by the foreign producer or if it is agreed between such agent and such foreign producer that any agreement, understanding, or condition set out in this section shall be imposed by such agent upon the sale or other disposition of such article to any person in the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 264, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "803," and on page 100 of the bill, line 15, strike out the words "six hundred and two" and insert in lieu thereof the words "eight hundred and two"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 265, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 804. That whenever any country, dependency, or colony shall prohibit the importation of any article the product of the soil or industry of the United States and not injurious to health or morals, the President shall have power to prohibit, during the period such prohibition is in force, the importation into the United States of similar articles, or in case the United States does not import similar articles from that country, then other articles, the products of such country, dependency, or colony.

"And the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, shall make such rules and regulations as are necessary for the execution of the provisions of this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 266, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 805. That whenever during the existence of a war in which the United States is not engaged the President shall be satisfied that there is reasonable ground to believe that under the laws, regulations, or practices of any country, colony, or dependency contrary to the law and practice of nations, the importation into their own or any other country, dependency, or colony of any article the product of the soil or industry of the United States and not injurious to health or morals is prevented or restricted the President is authorized and empowered to prohibit or restrict, during the period such prohibition or restriction is in force, the importation into the United States of similar or other articles, products of such country, dependency, or colony as in his opinion the public interest may require; and in such case he shall make proclamation stating the article or articles which are prohibited from importation into the United States; and any person or persons who shall import, or attempt or conspire to import, or be concerned in importing, such article or articles into the United States contrary to the prohibition in such proclamation, shall be liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $50,000, or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, in the discretion of the court. The President may change, modify, revoke, or renew such proclamation in his discretion."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 267, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 806. That whenever, during the existence of a war in which the United States is not engaged, the President shall be satisfied that there is reasonable ground to believe that any vessel, American or foreign, is, on account of the laws, regulations, or practices of a belligerent Government, making or giving any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage in any respect whatsoever to any particular person, company, firm, or corporation, or any particular description of traffic in the United States or its possessions or to any citizens of the United States residing in neutral countries abroad, or is subjecting any particular person, company, firm, or corporation or any particular description of traffic in the United States or its possessions, or any citizens of the United States residing in neutral countries abroad to any undue or unreasonable prejudice, disadvantage, injury, or discrimination in regard to accepting, receiving, transporting, or delivering, or refusing to accept, receive, transfer, or deliver any cargo, freight or passengers, or in any other respect whatsoever, he is hereby authorized and empowered to direct the detention of such vessels by withholding clearance or by formal notice forbidding departure, and to revoke, modify, or renew any such direction.

"That whenever, during the existence of a war in which the United States is not engaged, the President shall be satisfied that there is reasonable ground to believe that under the laws, regulations, or practices of any belligerent country or government, American ships or American citizens are not accorded any of the facilities of commerce which the vessels or citizens of that belligerent country enjoy in the United States or its possessions, or are not accorded by such belligerent equal privileges or facilities of trade with vessels or citizens of any nationality other than that of such belligerent, the President is hereby authorized and empowered to withhold clearance from one or more vessels of such belligerent country until such belligerent shall restore to such American vessels and American citizens reciprocal liberty of commerce and equal facilities of trade; or the President may direct that similar privileges and facilities, if any, enjoyed by vessels or citizens of such belligerent in the United States or its possessions be refused to vessels or citizens of such belligerent; and in such case he shall make proclamation of his direction, stating the facilities and privileges which shall be refused, and the belligerent to whose vessels or citizens they are to be refused, and thereafter the furnishing of such prohibited privileges and facilities to any vessel or citizen of the belligerent named in such proclamation shall be unlawful; and he may change, modify, revoke, or renew such proclamation; and any person or persons who shall furnish or attempt or conspire to furnish or be concerned in furnishing or in the concealment of furnishing facilities or privileges to ships or persons contrary to the prohibition in such proclamation shall be liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $50,000 or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"In case any vessel which is detained by virtue of this act shall depart or attempt to depart from the jurisdiction of the United States without clearance or other lawful authority, the owner or master or person or persons having charge or command of such vessel shall be severally liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000, or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, and in addition such vessel shall be forfeited to the United States.

"That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 270, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "IX"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 271, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by Senate amendment insert "900"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 272, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the section number proposed by said amendment strike out "107" and insert "901"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 273, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 902. That unless otherwise herein specially provided, this act shall take effect on the day following its passage, and all provisions of any act or acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

F. M. SIMMONS,
HOKE SMITH,
JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
WILLIAM HUGHES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CLAUDE KITCHIN,
HENRY T. RAINEY,
LINCOLN DIXON,
CORDELL HULL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I merely want to make a statement in a few words regarding the position of the minority.

The minority conferees were not invited into the deliberations of the majority members of the conference, and therefore did not participate in any way in the discussions concerning the adjustment of differences between the two Houses on this measure. Therefore the minority conferees have not signed the report. The bill is distinctly a measure for which the majority must take the responsibility before the American people.

As a record vote has been taken already upon the final passage of this bill, and as I am informed that the matters adjusted in the conference are not of a radical nature, I do not intend to detain the Senate by asking for a yea-and-nay vote upon the conference report. I will content myself with a statement of the position of the minority and with a reference to the fact that the minority is already on record on the revenue measure.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if section 105, Title IX, of the bill as reported by the committee to the Senate was eliminated in the conference? I refer to the amendment offered by me having reference to the shipment of halibut into the United States through any foreign country.

Mr. SIMMONS. To what page is the Senator referring?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Page 154 of the bill referred to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator from Oregon that very reluctantly, after much discussion, the Senate conferees were forced to recede on that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I took very little time, and in fact no time, in the discussion of this bill when it was up for consideration before the Senate; but I desire to enter my very vigorous protest against the elimination of section 105 from this bill. I feel a good deal as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] did the other evening, Mr. President, when he opposed the Tariff Commission provision which is contained in this bill, that no matter what I may say in reference to the provision now under consideration, it will not have the effect of inducing the Senate or the Congress to change its position with respect thereto. That provision is as follows:

That from and after 90 days after the passage of this act no fresh or frozen halibut or salmon from the north Pacific Ocean or its tributary waters shall be admitted into the United States through any foreign country, except when the same shall be in bond from an American port.

The elimination of that provision, Mr. President, was and is a disgraceful and a humiliating surrender to the demands of the Canadian Government of a most valuable American industry and American interest. I do not charge that the Senate conferees could have maintained this section in the bill if they had continued their efforts to retain it there. I am willing to concede that they did all in their power to keep it there. But, however that may be, Mr. President, it is an absolute surrender upon the part of the American Congress to the demands and threats of the Canadian Government.

We have spent $35,000,000, or propose to spend $35,000,000, in the development of Alaska by the construction of a railroad into that magnificent undeveloped Territory of the United States; and here, at the very first opportunity open to Congress to assist in building up the greatest industry in Alaska, it surrenders to the demands, or possibly the threats of a foreign Government and strikes it down. There is absolutely too much Toryism in the Congress of the United States, both in the House and in the Senate; and I, for one, propose to voice my protest against surrendering what I conceive to be one of the greatest interests in the Northwest and one of the greatest possibilities for this country.

Mr. President, I am speaking by the book when I say that this surrender has been consummated by and through the demand or threats of retaliatory legislation on the part of the Canadian Government or its officials. Talk about a lobby, Mr. President, and about driving lobbies from the Congress of the United States when distinguished gentlemen—representatives, I assume, of the Canadian Government, Sir Joseph Pope, who, I believe, occupies the position of undersecretary of external affairs, and another distinguished member of the Canadian Government, Mr. Found, superintendent of fisheries of that Government—while they may not have attempted directly to influence Congress, have been beseiging the officials of the Government in this country in order to discourage this legislation, and that without protest of any kind from Congress or elsewhere. Only this afternoon a little paper called the Bulletin, which is published here in the city, and which gives the current news and gossip of the Capital City, had this to say:

Sir Joseph Pope, Canadian minister of external affairs, much disgruntled, arranged to leave Washington to-day without any assurances from Secretary Lansing that the administration would alter its stand as embodied in the Chamberlain bill, aimed to counteract attempted British control of the Alaska fishery industry.

Be it said to the credit of the administration, Mr. President, that the Secretary of State, Mr. Lansing; the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield; and the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, each and all of them said that there was nothing objectionable in this legislation, and each and all of them, in effect, recommended its enactment and in the very language that has been embodied in this bill, because when the matter was taken up with them a bill couched in the language of this amendment was submitted to these several distinguished heads of the Government of the United States and they knew what was in it. Yet, notwithstanding the fact that this measure has had the approval of those who understand the situation, we find the conferees of the Senate and House, in the face of the recommendation of these distinguished officials, eliminating from the bill a provision which had for its sole purpose the protection of a great American industry in the Northwest.

To show to you, Mr. President, that what I say is absolutely true, and that this measure had the qualified, if not the express, approval of the distinguished officers of the Government to whom I have called attention, I am going even at this late hour and at the expense of tiring an already tired Congress to quote the language of these gentlemen. In a letter under date of May 6, 1916, written by Mr. Redfield, Secretary of Commerce, to the President of the United States, he says:

I beg respectfully to inclose original report of the Commissioner of Fisheries to me on the conditions which threaten serious economic loss, if not disaster, to the important town of Ketchikan in southeastern Alaska. A copy of this has been submitted to the Department of State, who advise under date of May 1 as follows:

"As you probably already know, there is no legal objection to the proposed legislation. There is a question of policy involved, and as to that it would seem that the Treasury Department had better be consulted. As far as this department is concerned, I can see no objection to the proposed legislation."

It was then referred to the Treasury Department, and here is what Mr. McAdoo said about it:

"I have received your letter of May 3, inclosing a memorandum from the Commissioner of Fisheries to you, dated March 30, 1916, in regard to the effect of the order in council of the Canadian Government of March 9, 1915, relaxing restrictions previously in effect in respect to the landing of and transshipping of fresh fish by American vessels at Canadian-Pacific coast ports on the industries of Ketchikan and other towns in the United States, and asking if the enactment of a proposed law as follows would be objectionable from the viewpoint of this department.

Mr. President, I ask for order in the Senate. I am going to finish this if it takes all night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JAMES in the chair). The Senate will be in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No one dislikes any more than I do to trespass upon the time of the Senate, but I propose to get in the RECORD my views on this subject if it takes all night, because, not only is it a matter of very great importance to the United States, Mr. President, but it is a matter of still greater importance to the people of my section of the country.

The Secretary of the Treasury had before him this very provision, and here is what he said about it:

This is a matter which does not affect the revenues of the Government and I can see nothing objectionable in the proposed legislation.

The Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield, then proceeds in his letter to the President to say:

I beg respectfully to ask that the report of the Commissioner of Fisheries, with copy of this letter which is sent for that purpose in duplicate, may be transmitted to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives for incorporation, if possible, in the proposed revenue bill. If, however, this matter should in your judgment be treated otherwise, I shall be glad to be advised and will follow your wishes.

Let me add to what the Commissioner of Fisheries has stated that the subject has been discussed between the counselor for the State Department, Mr. Frank L. Polk, the British ambassador, and myself, and I have also taken it up briefly with the deputy minister of fisheries of the Canadian Government at a recent call upon me.

Mr. H. C. Strong, of Ketchikan, advises me that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway has informed him that they would take steps to put Ketchikan on a satisfactory basis as regards Prince Rupert if and when they were forced to do so. This would mean running a ferry steamer three times a week at present for the 90 miles from Ketchikan to Prince Rupert. They are not now doing so, however, with the result that by reason of the specially tempting privileges extended to fisherman at Prince Rupert the commercial existence of the port of Ketchikan is seriously threatened. I have tried to make clear through the British ambassador the unwisdom on the part of the railroad authorities of antagonizing our Alaskan interests, to whom they must inevitably look in the future for a considerable part of their business, but they show no sign of action.

This letter of Mr. Redfield to the President of the United States, inclosing the letter from Mr. H. M. Smith, of the Bureau of Fisheries, was sent by the President of the United States to Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. While it would not probably be correct to say that the President approved it, he did not disapprove it, because his letter of transmission simply said, in effect, that he submitted it to Mr. KITCHIN for his very earnest consideration.

The letter of the Commissioner of Fisheries discloses exactly the condition of this great industry in the Northwest, describes its genesis and its gradual evolution in the Territory of Alaska and in the Northwest, and then shows in express terms how that industry has been and is being destroyed. How? Not by any act of Parliament of the Canadian Government but by orders in council, pursuing the same course in Canada that the British Government pursues in England and on the high seas for the purpose of destroying not only the commerce of our own country but the commerce of any other neutral country that it sees fit to destroy.

The letter of Mr. H. M. Smith, Commissioner of Fisheries, is so illuminating and states the facts so concisely that I can not resist the temptation to read the same into this address as a part thereof, and it is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 30, 1916.

THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE:

In compliance with the instructions in your letter of the 15th instant to prepare a report, for consideration, if necessary, by committees of Congress, upon the halibut fishery of the Pacific coast, particularly in respect to conditions which have developed within the last year or two in the way of diverting the industry from American ports to Prince Rupert, British Columbia, it seems not inappropriate to review briefly a few of the more important historical facts and submit a statement of the methods pursued in regard to the halibut fishery of the Pacific coast.

From the records it appears that beginning about 1888 there was some desultory halibut fishing, chiefly on banks which were beginning to become known in the vicinity of Cape Flattery, on the northern coast of Washington, and extending from there northward, most of the fish being landed at Seattle and Tacoma. It was not until 1894 that the industry assumed any noteworthy commercial importance. From that time until the present its growth has been such that now approximately 95 per cent of the halibut consumed in the United States comes from the Pacific coast, where the catch amounts to more than 65,000,000 pounds a year. Only a small part of the output has come from waters south of Cape Flattery, although in recent years increased attention has been given to grounds lying off the Oregon and Washington coast, and considerable quantities of fish have there been taken. The more important banks, however, are to the northward, and now the larger proportion of the entire catch is from the banks off the coast of Alaska. It is the Alaskan banks to which attention is now chiefly directed, for it is believed that upon these banks there exists the greatest supply of halibut known to the world.

METHODS.

In describing briefly the methods pursued in the Pacific halibut fishery it may be noted that halibut are caught on hooks attached to long lines or trawls and baited with herring. The lines are set from dories operated from steamers or power schooners of commodious and seaworthy capacity, so as to enable the vessels to weather gales while out on the fishing banks. There are now upward of 150 American vessels thus engaged. Halibut fishing is generally conducted in water of from 40 to 100 fathoms in depth, although halibut are sometimes taken at a depth of 250 fathoms. The steamers are generally equipped with 12 to 14 dories, while the power schooners, as a rule, carry from 4 to 8 dories. Each dory is manned by two fishermen. The fishermen on steam vessels usually receive 1¼ cents a pound for the halibut caught, clear of all expense of operation, board, etc. As a rule, in schooner operations the vessel takes one-fifth of the gross catch, while from the remaining four-fifths there is deducted all cost for fuel, stores, supplies, and other items, and the remainder is then divided equally among the crew. Sometimes the captain receives in addition a small commission.

A modification of dory fishing has been adopted recently to a rather limited degree. It consists of setting the trawl lines directly from the deck of the vessel and hauling them in by means of a power winch. This enables vessels to operate when the weather is too stormy to permit of dory fishing.

CENTERS OF INDUSTRY.

The halibut industry of the Pacific coast has always centered at Seattle, Wash. The greater portion of the catch has been brought to Seattle by the fishing fleet, but there have been approximately 14,000,000 pounds per annum discharged at Alaska ports, and there iced, boxed, and shipped to dealers in Seattle; but the unsatisfactory steamer service and the disadvantages arising from the inability of the fishermen to deal in person with the buyers have made this practice unpopular. The price in the year 1915 has varied from about 12½ cents per pound in winter to 2½ cents per pound in the late spring, when the catches have been heaviest, the average for the year being about 5½ cents a pound. This is the price received by the independent fishermen for halibut as delivered at the docks in Seattle, and is for first-grade fish in good condition. The average weight of the best grade of halibut is about 30 pounds per fish. The so-called chicken halibut, those running usually about 10 to 15 pounds in weight, and the larger halibut, weighing from 50 to 100 pounds or more, are not regarded with as much favor as those averaging about 30 pounds.

The cold-storage plants at Juneau, Sitka, Wrangell, and Ketchikan receive some fish throughout most of the year, but it is chiefly when halibut are plentiful that most of the freezing is done. The largest of these plants is that of the New England Fish Co. at Ketchikan. This establishment was completed in 1909 and was enlarged three years later, so that at present it has a storage capacity of approximately 4,000,000 pounds of frozen halibut and represents an investment of about $300,000. The other plants referred to are smaller and depend upon independent fishermen for receipts of halibut, whereas the New England Fish Co. operates vessels on its own account.

At Seattle and Tacoma there are five cold-storage establishments where halibut are handled, and in addition there are several buyers who receive the fish as landed by the fishing vessels. At certain seasons of the year the fish are frozen and stored, but at other times they are iced for immediate shipment, the chief distributing centers being Boston and New York. In the winter months when the arrivals of fresh fish are comparatively limited—so small in fact at times that it is only the local demand or requirements of the western States that can be supplied—the shipments of frozen halibut are made to the eastern markets.

For many years halibut have been landed at Tacoma, Wash., though in nothing like the quantity landed at Seattle, and also in a less degree at Grays Harbor and Everett, Wash., and Stevenson, Hayesport, and Vancouver, British Columbia.

The foregoing is an outline of the halibut fishery of the Pacific coast as it existed up to a year or two ago, when Prince Rupert, British Columbia, came to the fore and now bids fair to become the chief center of the industry, unless early steps of a definite character are taken to retain it in American ports.

ENTRY OF PRINCE RUPERT AS HALIBUT CENTER.

It is understood that dominant Canadian interests for a number of years had been carrying out a logically conceived policy to make Prince Rupert one of the chief fishery centers of the Pacific coast. This carefully arranged plan had its culmination in the completion of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, followed by the order in council of March 9, 1915. It is reported that the Canadian Government subsidized the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway and in addition gave a subsidy for the construction of a fish-freezing establishment at Prince Rupert, which is said to be the largest of its kind on the Pacific coast.

With the completion of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway through to Prince Rupert, British Columbia, the halibut situation became acute. Since that time an active campaign has been waged between the American cities on the one hand and Prince Rupert and, to a less degree, Vancouver on the other hand for control of the industry. The seriousness of the situation as seen from the American point of view may be recognized from the fact that during the year 1914 American fishing vessels landed no fish at Prince Rupert, but from March, 1915, to the end of the year American vessels landed more than 7,000,000 pounds of halibut at that port and Canadian vessels 8,000,000 pounds. It is reported that 80 per cent of the Canadian-caught fish were shipped to American markets.

This active entry of Prince Rupert into the field for the trade in American as well as Canadian caught halibut was made possible through a Dominion order in council on March 9, 1915, relaxing restrictions previously in effect in respect to the landing and transshipping of fresh fish by American vessels at Canadian Pacific coast ports. This order was as follows:

"During the present calendar year (1915) foreigners or foreign corporations bringing fresh fish in vessels registered in the United States of America to any port in British Columbia shall be permitted to land such fresh fish at such port without payment of duties and transship the same in bond to any port in the United States, or to sell such fish in bond to such local dealers or dealer as may be properly and duly licensed therefor, under the regulations and conditions in compliance with the bonding requirements (without the right, however, in either instance, to sell in Canada for consumption therein, or otherwise except in bond, any of such fresh fish so landed); and such foreigners and foreign corporations bringing fresh fish in vessels registered in the United States of America to any port in British Columbia, shall be permitted to purchase supplies and ship crews for such vessels at any port in the said Province of British Columbia, the whole under such regulations and conditions as the minister of customs may determine."

The chief feature of this order is that it altered Canadian regulations to such an extent as to make it possible for Canada to receive the benefits of the American fishing industry, and yet it does not benefit American trade, as the fish so landed by American vessels are prohibited from going into consumption in Canada.

Although Seattle has felt to a certain extent the new order of things, it has nevertheless, by reason of being the headquarters of the large fishing firms owning their own steamers, held a considerable volume during the year 1915; but three of these companies have announced that they will find it necessary to establish themselves at Prince Rupert in 1916 unless conditions change.

So far, Ketchikan has suffered most. Prior to the promulgation of the order in council hereinabove cited, Ketchikan enjoyed a profitable halibut fishery. In fact, it was regarded as the center of the industry in Alaska. At certain seasons of the year many cargoes of halibut were landed at Ketchikan, and there was the incidental industrial activity due to the purchase of supplies and the outfitting of the vessels as well as paying off crews. It is reported that soon after the Canadian order in council became effective the American fishermen almost entirely discontinued the landing of cargoes at Ketchikan for shipment to Seattle, finding it advantageous to accept the inducements offered at Prince Rupert where they were able to meet and do business directly with buyers for the American markets. Thus the Canadian port became their headquarters.

The present hold of Prince Rupert, by reason of its more direct transportation facilities to the halibut markets of the East and because of privileges and inducements offered to American fishermen through the order in council of March 9, 1915, is so firmly established that American fishermen and American companies handling fresh halibut have literally been forced to transfer their chief activities to Prince Rupert. American fishermen are taking up their residence there, and the United States is thus suffering the loss of a class of citizens who have done considerable toward the development of Alaska, particularly southeastern Alaska. At the same time there is the attendant loss which other lines of industry suffer as the result of the removal of these fishermen and their families to Prince Rupert.

INVESTMENT IN THE HALIBUT FISHERY.

Exact figures as to the investment in the halibut fishery of the Pacific coast are not available. Upon the basis of very careful estimates, however, the total investment in the American halibut fishery on the Pacific coast may be stated as approximately $3,500,000, which sum includes the packing and refrigerating plants, valued in excess of $1,500,000, and a fishing fleet of approximately 150 vessels worth about $2,000,000. These vessels include both large and small, varying in value from $5,000 to $100,000 each. Approximately 2,000 persons are engaged and the value to the fishermen of the American-caught fish in 1915 is estimated to be $2,500,000. The estimated investment in the Canadian halibut fishery is $1,000,000, and it gives employment to about 500 persons, the value of the product to Canadian fishermen being about $750,000. At the present time the Canadian fleet numbers about 30 vessels. Combining these estimated figures covering the American and Canadian halibut fishery, there is a total investment of $4,500,000, employment is given to 2,500 persons, and the annual value of the product to the fishermen is $3,250,000. The retail value is four times this amount.

COMPARISON OF HALIBUT CATCH OF 1914 AND 1915.

The total catch of halibut from Pacific waters landed at both American and Canadian ports was approximately 64,000,000 pounds in 1914 and 66,000,000 pounds in 1915. Less than one-fourth of these catches was made by Canadian vessels. Of the 1914 catch arrivals in British Columbia ports amounted to about 17,000,000 pounds, but in 1915 when the total production of all Pacific waters was only a little larger than the previous year the arrivals of halibut in British Columbia increased to nearly 28,000,000 pounds, an increase in receipts for British Columbia in 1915 of 11,000,000 pounds. This increase represents halibut landed by American vessels as a result of concessions made by the Canadian Government to draw the American fleet to its ports. As was obviously intended by Canada, Prince Rupert has been the chief beneficiary, for it was at that port that American fishing vessels landed more than 7,000,000 pounds of halibut in 1915 as against nothing in 1914. Vancouver also shows a notable gain in 1915, when American vessels landed about 4,000,000 pounds. These gains in trade for Canada have been at the direct expense of American ports, chiefly Ketchikan and Seattle.

FROZEN SALMON.

There is also a trade in frozen salmon that is passing from southeastern Alaska to Prince Rupert that demands consideration in order that it may be continued as an American industry. At present it is small as compared to the halibut trade, but it may be developed considerably. It is estimated that it produces a quarter of a million pounds of frozen salmon annually, valued at $25,000, and gives partial employment for two or three months in the year to about 1,000 persons, whose catch, however, is chiefly used for mild curing. Most of the salmon frozen are caught in waters contiguous to the Alaskan coast, and the trade rightfully belongs to Alaska.

GENERAL RATHER THAN LOCAL INJURY TO AMERICAN INTERESTS.

The opening of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway to Prince Rupert, which prompted the order in council of March 9, 1915, has in reality been the all-important cause back of this loss of American trade, and as its effect is felt both at Ketchikan and Seattle as well as other less important American ports, the injury may with propriety be regarded as of a general character rather than of a local nature. It is not only the American fishing industry which is harmed, but there are extensive collateral interests represented by firms engaged in outfitting and supplying the fishing fleets with ice, bait, foodstuffs, fishing gear, and distillate, the trade in which is lost to the United States when vessels land their catch at Canadian ports. It is estimated that the loss of such collateral trade to America in 1915 amounted to $500,000. Unless conditions are changed speedily, this diversion will increase rapidly. Already one large Seattle firm, whose chief business has been the outfitting of halibut vessels, has been forced to establish a branch at Prince Rupert. Two large American corporations operating cold-storage plants at Seattle have recently stated in communications that the Bureau of Fisheries has seen that unless prompt action is taken to relieve the existing condition it will be necessary for them to build plants and make other heavy investments at Prince Rupert. These companies have clearly indicated that they do not care to enter this field, preferring to make their northern investments in Alaska, but that they will be forced to do so in order to retain their share of the business unless the situation changes.

Another serious phase of the situation is the fact that America is losing a valuable citizenry in those who will move to Canada and in the course of a few years will be assimilated completely by that country. Thus the diversion of Pacific halibut trade through Canadian ports means not only a pecuniary loss to American interests, but also the loss of good citizens and their families, who will eventually become alienated from the United States. There may be stout denials of this alienation, but the insidious workings of time and environment will unquestionably produce this result.

SUGGESTED REMEDIES.

Various suggestions more or less important have been made to improve conditions affecting the Pacific coast halibut fishery, but at the present time and after full and careful consideration of the problem it is believed that the enactment of the following measure offers the best solution:

"No fresh or frozen halibut or salmon from the North Pacific Ocean or its tributary waters shall be admitted into the United States through any foreign country except when the same is in bond from an American port."

This measure seems simple in its terms and easy of application, and its adoption is believed to be an efficient means of reserving the halibut fishery to American cities on the Pacific coast and at the same time will not admit readily of retaliatory measures or acts of reprisal by the Canadian authorities. Its effect on the fishermen will simply be that the fish they now land at Canadian ports will be landed chiefly at Ketchikan where they will have market facilities equaling those now at Prince Rupert, and they will save the 90-mile trip to the Canadian port. It will necessitate the inauguration by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway of a ferry service suitable for the transportation of fish from Ketchikan, where the shipments would be accepted in bond for our eastern markets. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway will, if the measure hereinabove suggested is adopted, undoubtedly grant such facilities, as it needs the business of southeast Alaska. Prince Rupert is bound to benefit by the shipment of halibut even though originally landed at Ketchikan, but over and above this the fact stands forth plainly that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway undoubtedly needs this business as halibut is the road's most profitable factor in the eastbound freight.

It is not deemed expedient that the United States Government should adopt measures which will mean that fresh Alaskan halibut can not or will not be shipped to eastern markets over the Canadian railroads, but it is believed that such fish should go in bond from an American port. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is undoubtedly a shorter line to the East, probably saving at least 48 hours between Alaska and the chief distributing centers for halibut, Boston and New York. Any means which will permit of more prompt delivery of a perishable food product is of advantage to the consumer. This situation, however, only slightly affects halibut shipped to Seattle; and, as a matter of fact, according to the present schedule halibut can be laid down in Chicago more quickly from Seattle than from Prince Rupert, but shipments to Boston and New York can be made from Alaska more quickly through Prince Rupert than by way of steamer to Seattle and thence over an American railroad.

Under present regulations American fishing vessels are barred from discharging fish at Canadian ports for consumption in Canada, but Canadian vessels have the privilege of selling their catch in the United States in addition to selling in Canada. In other words, Canada discriminates against American vessels, but the United States does not place similar restrictions upon the sale of fish caught by Canadian vessels. This means that Americans are forced to add vessels of Canadian registry to their fleets if they want to participate in the Canadian trade, and without effective legislation the tendency will be to increase the Canadian fleet at American expense.

The American shipping laws require that if a foreign fishing vessel enters a port in the United States and discharges its cargo it can not clear for the fishing banks and return with its catch to an American port. Instead the vessel after landing its catch must clear for its home port. After entering there it may proceed to the fishing banks and again land its cargo at an American port. The measure herein suggested, that no fresh or frozen fish from the North Pacific shall be admitted into the United States through any foreign country except when the same is in bond from an American port, would not work a hardship upon Canadian vessels as, after discharging their catch, they can easily enter a Canadian port before returning to the fishing grounds.

So far as this office is aware no practicable plan has yet been suggested whereby the bureau, the town of Ketchikan, or the Territory of Alaska, can take any action that will be helpful. The only solution seems to be congressional action, and the best remedy that has yet been developed for consideration by Congress is the passage of a law worded as hereinabove suggested. It is not thought that this measure is open to international complications, the only possibility along this line being an attempt on the part of Canada to modify the present reciprocal relations in respect to the bonding of goods in transit through the respective countries, which is not at all probable. Such an act on the part of Canada, would not only deprive her railroads of revenue, but equally inconvenience her own people.

H. M. SMITH, Commissioner.

Mr. President, I listened a while ago to a speech in the House of Representatives by a very distinguished Member, expressing the opinion that the world will look upon this measure as retaliatory legislation, notwithstanding the fact that our commerce has practically been swept off the seas by the greatest naval power on the globe. Even if it be so looked upon, it would be justified in the eyes of most men. But it is not retaliatory legislation. It is justified by the action of the Canadian Government.

Let us see what has been the course of that Government which has resulted in destroying a growing and a thriving industry in Ketchikan and other points in Alaska, as well as in other of our northwestern ports.

Here is the order in council, and I want the Members of the Senate to consider it carefully in connection with the language of the section of the act under consideration as it was adopted by the Senate. It is almost identical with the language in the Senate bill. And yet, notwithstanding the fact that Canada more than a year and a half ago adopted a policy such as we, for corrective purposes, are attempting to adopt, in order to promote Canadian interests and for the purpose of destroying an American industry and turning it over to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway for exploitation, they now come here and through their representatives claim that we are indulging in a species of retaliatory legislation that may prove disastrous to the United States.

Mr. President, if it is to prove disastrous to the commerce of the United States for Congress to take steps for the protection of that commerce and to meet the orders made in council by the Canadian Government, then I say let retaliation come. It would be a fitting supplement and climax to what these orders in council have done to destroy the American fishing industry of the Northwest. The duty of Congress is plain, and there should not be now or at any time a shrinking from that duty.

Now, let us see what that order in council was, Mr. President. Mind you, the good people of the little town of Ketchikan, in Alaska, which was growing and thriving, had invested $300,000 in a refrigerating plant for the pufpose of carrying on this same business. Juneau, Sitka, and Wrangell had expended large sums of money for the purpose of putting in plants to handle this very industry. Seattle, Tacoma, and other western towns had done the same thing, and they were building up a splendid and thriving business in the fishing industry. In order to destroy that by transferring it to Prince Rupert, here is what the Canadian Government did by order in council:

During the present calendar year (1915) foreigners or foreign corporations bringing fresh fish in vessels registered in the United States of America to any port in British Columbia shall be permitted to land such fresh fish at such ports without payment of duties and transship the same in bond to any port in the United States, or to sell such fish in bond to such local dealers or dealer as may be properly and duly licensed therefor, under the regulations and conditions in compliance with the bonding requirements—

Now note—

(without the right, however, in either instance, to sell in Canada for consumption therein, or otherwise except in bond, any of such fresh fish so landed); and such foreigners and foreign corporations bringing fresh fish in vessels registered in the United States of America to any port in British Columbia shall be permitted to purchase supplies and ship crews for such vessels at any port in the said Province of British Columbia, the whole under such regulations and conditions as the minister of customs may determine.

Mr. President, that was the order in council adopted in March, 1915, and on the very face of it discriminations against America are disclosed as well as the purposes of the Canadian Government.

Mr. H. C. Strong, of Ketchikan, whose name is mentioned in the letter of the Secretary of Commerce, whom I have met and who impresses me as being an honorable, intelligent, and patriotic citizen of Alaska, addressed me a letter on the subject of the discriminations practiced by Canadians at their ports against the American Pacific fishing fleet. I can not vouch for the accuracy of the statements he makes to me, but I have reason to believe that they are true. He says, amongst other things:

Through order in council, they have authority to, by regulation, meet practically every situation found necessary to protect Canadian vessels and interests, which they are using in various ways to handicap American interests in favor of Canadian.

First, the fish of an American vessel discharged at a Canadian port is absolutely barred from the Canadian market. It can not go into consumption in Canada, even upon the payment of duty.

Various trade regulations discriminate. With an American vessel at their port in need of ice, bait, or other supplies they demand a declaration from the master of the American vessel that he will return to the Canadian port with his next catch of fish, to be shipped from there to the American market.

On the other hand, when one of our vessels has discharged her fish at a Canadian port, and might be inclined to proceed to an American port for supplies, her master is given to understand that their business relations will be more cordial, and that it will be to his interest to disburse the vessel receipts, buy her supplies, etc., at their port.

Early during the present summer a regulation was made putting into effect a most contemptible discrimination. The order provided that all fish discharged by an American vessel must move from the Canadian port by rail. This regulation actually placed a value on fish caught by Canadian vessels at the port of discharge of from 25 per cent to 33⅓ per cent, or approximately 2 cents per pound more than the fish of equal quality caught in the same waters under the same conditions and discharged the same day by American vessels at the same port. This order prevented the grading of American fish by denying the privilege of shipping same by coasting vessels to American ports the fish needed to supply the demand in our Pacific, Mountain, and far Western States, also the disposition of that portion of the fish not suitable for the transcontinental shipment to our Eastern States.

Fish caught by Canadian vessels have free access to all of these markets, in addition to Canadian markets, hence the increased market value on the product of her vessels.

In the opinion of Mr. Strong the situation complained of by him, and by the chambers of commerce of the Northwest as well, can be cured by the provision contained in the amendment on the subject passed by the Senate and which was eliminated in conference. On this subject he says in his letter referred to:

The legislation proposed will do all of the above, besides being an economic advantage and at the same time save to our Nation a most valuable resource and one which will develop and engage thousands of hardy seamen, of which there is no class of citizenship that our country more greatly needs. These men should be kept under the American flag, and there is no class better suited for the settlement and development of the coast of Alaska, which would be the natural result of the proposed bill.

I want to cite an incident which should impress upon you the necessity of the passage of this bill at the earliest possible date.

Two years ago the attention of official Washington was brought to the anticipated serious effect which would be had upon our Pacific fishing and commercial interests by the opening of the new Canadian port.

Over 18 months ago a delegation composed of some of the best business men from the State of Washington and Alaska cities came to Washington for the purpose of securing regulations or legislation which would have prevented the conditions which followed. The committee returned to the Pacific coast completely discouraged.

One member in particular of this committee, whose business had been confined to the Pacific fishing fleet, realized that the opening of rail transportation to a point 600 miles north of Seattle would be the means of centering this great industry in southern Alaska, providing they could secure the assistance of our Federal Government; otherwise the industry would be centered on the Canadian side at the new Canadian port of Prince Rupert.

The gentleman referred to had investigated conditions and the Alaska side and had arranged for a business location, but upon his return from Washington he was convinced that he must establish himself at Prince Rupert or lose the business which he had controlled.

This he has done, investing at the Canadian port a sum which to him is large.

The bill which is now before you will have a serious effect upon the interests of this man at Prince Rupert, which he had been forced to make through the lack of our Government in appreciating the serious situation, yet he is too good an American citizen to protest against the legislation we are now seeking.

At the present time there are hundreds of thousands of dollars invested by Americans in Canada affected the same as the case illustrated, yet we do not know of a single protest originating from these people.

If Congress will not give us immediate relief we shall within a short time find American capital to the extent of millions instead of hundreds of thousands invested in Canada and Canadian vessels, going to the up building of Canada; thus to save additional embarrassment to these people we should have immediate action.

I wish to call to your attention the fact that this is not increasing business opportunities for Americans but is actually taking a vast amount of business and some of our best citizenship from the United States to a foreign port, where they are obliged to submit to discriminations against the United States.

The Commissioner of Fisheries, Mr. President, in his letter which I have embodied in my remarks, discusses the whole subject, and his letter shows that the injury to American interests is general, rather than local, although these halibut fisheries are off the banks of Alaska and in the waters of the north Pacific. He suggests certain remedies, and the most forceful remedy that he suggests is the amendment which was embodied in this bill, and which the conferees have abandoned.

Now, the excuse is made, Mr. President, that, if the Senate conferees had insisted upon this amendment, the absence of a quorum would have been suggested in the House of Representatives, and possibly in the Senate. Mr. President, for one, I am tired of hearing these threats made. If, as a matter of fact, there was not or is not a quorum in the House of Representatives, and if, as a matter of fact, there is no quorum in the Senate when this and other important matters are under consideration or are to be considered, there ought to be a quorum. Here is a bill proposing to raise revenue of one hundred or more million dollars—I do not know how much, and I presume the members of the committee do not know how much it will raise—yet, while we are taxing the people of this country to that extent annually, we are surrendering an industry in the Northwest that in the course of a few years would have brought to the people of America more than that amount of money.

Sir Joseph Pope and the other distinguished gentleman who came down here from Canada, did not hesitate to try to influence the officials of our Government. Has there been a time in the history of this country when the Government of the United States sent its emissaries to Canada or to Britain or to any other foreign Government, in order to endeavor to influence legislation in those Governments? Talk about cleaning out a lobby from the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, Mr. President, and yet cheerfully and submissively listening to a lobby that comes here from some foreign country undertaking to influence legislation through our heads of departments!

There is entirely too much of intermeddling with our affairs by foreign governments, and proper respect for our country demands that we call a halt to it here and now. It is getting so that the timid ones are afraid to legislate upon affairs purely local for fear such legislation may in some remote and indirect way interfere with the policies or interests of some other supersensitive country. The sooner America assumes the right to act for her own interests and for her own citizens along lines that are honest and just—and she should not act otherwise—the sooner will this pernicious intermeddling come to an end.

If in moments of haste or influenced by the impulses of the moment a law, whether State or Federal, is enacted which trenches upon the legal rights of or violates our treaties with another power, the proper way to reach such a condition is through proper representations and through established diplomatic channels.

I resent as forcibly as I can this interference on the part of the Canadian Government in our affairs, as I would resent interference from any other foreign source. Without solicitation upon my part, on the 31st of August, 1916, Mr. Lansing, Secretary of State, sent me a letter with certain indorsements. He did not mark it personal or confidential, and I hope I am not violating any confidence when I read it to the Senate, because I want the American people to know that some of their Representatives either in the Senate or in the other House may be influenced by representatives of other governments who have come here, in violation of those amenities that ought to exist between nations, for the purpose of protesting against this legislation.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 31, 1916.

MY DEAR SENATOR CHAMBERLAIN: I inclose for your information and without comment a note which I have just received from the counselor of the British Embassy inclosing a memorandum from Sir Joseph Pope, the under secretary of external affairs of Canada, in regard to section 103 of the pending revenue bill prohibiting the entry into the United States from Canada of fresh or frozen halibut or salmon caught in the Pacific Ocean, except in bond.

I also inclose for your information on the same subject a telegram which I have just received from Mr. S. C. Bone, chairman of the Alaska bureau of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce. As the condition of the American fishing industry in the Northwest is well known to Members of Congress, it is unnecessary for me to comment upon Mr. Bone's telegram.

I am, my dear Senator CHAMBERLAIN,
Very sincerely, yours, ROBERT LANSING.

The Hon. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
United States Senate.

There was no need of comment, for the distinguished Secretary had already commented on the general subject of the proposed legislation in his letter to the Secretary of Commerce to which I have already made reference.

The memorandum inclosed, Mr. President, is dated at the British Embassy, Washington, and marked "Urgent," and is as follows:

[Urgent.] BRITISH EMBASSY,
Washington.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In accordance with the request made by you to Sir Joseph Pope during the interview, which you were good enough to accord to him this morning, I beg to transmit to you herewith a memorandum which has been prepared by Sir Joseph setting forth the views of the Canadian Government in regard to the question of the prohibition of the entrance into the United States from Canada of fresh or frozen halibut or salmon caught in the Pacific Ocean, except the same shall be shipped in bond from an American port.

Believe me, my dear Mr. Secretary,
Very sincerely, yours, COLVILLE BARCLAY.

The honorable ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State of the United States.

Now, let us see what Sir Joseph Pope had to say. The communication is not long, and I am going to read it. Mind you, he is the gentleman who went away disgruntled, according to a little notice I read from a paper a short time ago. He could not get the Secretary of State to recede from his position; he could not get Mr. Redfield to recede from his position; he could not get Mr. McAdoo to recede from his position; and he evidently had not been able to get the President of the United States to take a hand in his cause. There was, therefore, a very good reason why he should go away a little bit disgruntled; but here were his views, expressed in writing, before he left.

It may be I am not speaking in as diplomatic language as I ought, Mr. President, but we know that the language of diplomacy is used to conceal an idea rather than to express it; but, feeble as I am, and humble as I am, I am trying to say what I think. If I fail to make myself understood, either as to what should be our course or what that of the Canadian Government is and has been, it is my infirmity and my misfortune, and not my fault:

Memorandum expressive of the views of the Canadian Government on the measure now before Congress to prohibit the entrance into the United States from Canada of fresh or frozen halibut or salmon caught in the Pacific Ocean, except the same shall be in bond from an American port. Title IX, section 103 of the revenue bill (H. R. 16763).

The Government of Canada view with much concern the introduction of this measure as being highly detrimental to Canadian interests, and they would be glad to be informed of the causes which, in the opinion of the promoters, have rendered it necessary.

The Canadian order in council rendered it necessary. That is what made it necessary. Until that Canadian order in council was adopted Ketchikan and Washington ports were doing all the business in the Northwest. Sir Joseph Pope knew the reason. We were simply trying by the proposed amendment to protect our commerce against the action which the Canadian Government more than a year ago had taken.

From an interview which the Secretary of State was good enough to accord to the undersigned, it would appear that a principal object in view was to benefit the port of Ketchikan, which at present suffers from competition of Prince Rupert. Mr. Lansing also stated that American fishermen were not being fairly treated in respect of being denied the privilege of bonding by water from Prince Rupert to Seattle, and also in the matter of the purchase of bait.

The Canadian Government would point out that they have not been favored with any previous notice of the attitude of the United States Government upon these points, and they can not but regard it as somewhat strange that the first intimation they receive thereon should take the form of this drastic measure of nonintercourse.

Mr. President, the incorrectness of that statement must be apparent when it is remembered that for months the subject has been one of acute discussion between our own officials and the British Embassy. It can not be possible that the distinguished Sir Joseph Pope was ignorant of what was being done, too, by the Canadian Government. It can not be that he was not advised as to the purpose of that order in council which had been adopted. And the order in council was not all there was to it, because there was vested in the department of fisheries and in the customs officials the power to make further rules and regulations governing the subject. Continuing, Sir Joseph says:

The early termination of the present session of Congress and the position of the measure, appearing as it does as a rider to a revenue bill, precludes any attempt at useful discussion of its provisions and effect. The Canadian Government respectfully suggest that it be withdrawn.

In the meantime, pending an opportunity for a full examination of the points involved, they will be glad to be informed more fully of the United States Government's objections to such of their regulations governing the fishing industry on the Pacific coast as may be judged to operate harshly toward American fishermen.

JOSEPH POPE.

THE SHOREHAM HOTEL,
Washington, D. C., August 30, 1916.

The complaint, Mr. President, is against a provision practically in the language of the provision of the order in council adopted in March, 1915, by the Canadian Government. The only difference between the two was that the Canadian order in council allowed these goods to be received from American vessels in Canadian ports and transshipped in bond to American ports over the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the pending provision allowed them to be received in an American port to be shipped in bond through Canadian ports or other foreign ports. That is the only difference. They are protesting in this letter to the Secretary of State against such course on the part of Congress as they followed more than a year ago, the only difference between the two being that their action was in favor of the Canadian Government and ours is in favor of the United States. They stand firmly by their action, Mr. President, and their purposes, and the American Congress recedes at their demand and makes a most disgraceful and a most humiliating surrender.

Mr. President, the other inclosure in the letter of the Secretary of State was a telegram from Mr. Scott C. Bone, formerly editor of one of the daily papers in this city and well known here, now chairman of the Alaska bureau, Seattle Chamber of Commerce, Seattle, dated August 29, 1916, as follows:

Hon. ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State, Washington:

We are advised that a Canadian delegation has protested to you against the passage of section 103 of revenue bill, prescribing manner of movement of fish for American markets through a foreign country. Protest is said to maintain that route via Prince Rupert gives American consumer better fish than formerly. This has no bearing on proposed legislation which in no manner interferes with movement of fish via Prince Rupert, but merely requires vessels supplying American markets to bond such shipments from an American port when moving through Canada. The purpose of this measure is to prevent driving this purely American industry from southeastern Alaska ports to Prince Rupert where it would be under exclusive control of Canada.

SCOTT C. BONE,
Chairman Alaska Bureau, Seattle Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. President, the correct suggestion contained in the memorandum of Sir Joseph Pope to the Secretary of State, is that this Government proceed diplomatically to deal with this subject. There is not any treaty that prohibits this legislation; not at all. He suggests, however, by implication that it be taken up by diplomatic negotiations and in that way disposed of. Mr. President, I am ashamed for my country to say that the United States has never entered into any diplomatic negotiations with Great Britain nor with any other power that she did not get the worst of it. This is particularly true as regards the northwestern part of our country. Coming from the West some time ago to my place in the Senate, I traveled for several hundred miles over a magnificent territory between the degrees of latitude 49 and "54.40 or fight," if you please, which the United States surrendered to Great Britain or to Canada as the result of one of these so-called diplomatic negotiations.

It is the finest section of country on the continent to-day, where everything grows in profusion and all vegetation blooms and blossoms as the rose, and yet we gave that up in a so-called diplomatic negotiation.

It is said that Andrew Jackson, in his last illness and when death was fast approaching, expressed the fear that President Polk would not insist upon 54° 40′ as the northwestern boundary line between the United States and Canada. It was the old man's desire that the United States should insist upon 54° 40′ or fight, as declared in the Democratic platform of 1844. We did not fight. We diplomatically gave up a strip of magnificent territory between 49° and 54° 40′, and that country is a part of the British Columbia of to-day.

That is not our last diplomatic negotiation. The last was with respect to the Alaskan boundary, and there, too, the United States yielded up territory that she never should have yielded; pushed her boundary line back beyond the stakes that had been set a hundred years ago, and gave to Canada an outlet to the Pacific Ocean she never would have had but for these negotiations, and which in equity and conscience she ought not to have had.

Mr. President, if we follow out the suggestion contained in Sir Joseph Pope's letter and enter into negotiations with the British Government with reference to this subject, we will find that the United States will be in the same position that she has always occupied when she has entered into negotiations with the distinguished diplomats of that splendid country.

If it were not so late I would go into the subject much more exhaustively. My distinguished colleague from the Northwest [Mr. JONES] went into it at considerable length a few days ago, and I may have covered some part of the ground covered by him; but I have tried to do it in my own way. I do not want to trespass upon the time of the Senate any further than to enter my protest against this legislation. We have not been afraid to insert some retaliatory legislation, so called, in the bill, and some of our good friends are even afraid of that. For my part I approve and commend it, and I predict that it will prove most beneficial to our country.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, what is the color of the reasoning that has been urged against the position which the Senator so clearly states? I can not conceive why the Congress of the United States should yield in such a way upon such a plain question.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They threaten, I believe, that if we adopt this legislation it will result in trade disagreements, and retaliatory legislation upon the part of the Canadian Government.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. What if it does?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It does not make any difference. They can not retaliate without injury to themselves. They have done us all the harm they can with respect to this industry by the adoption of the order in council, to which I have called attention, and the proceedings that have been had under it. All in the world that American vessels do on the Atlantic coast is to go into Canadian ports for the purpose of purchasing bait and supplies for their ships. If they want to retaliate and cut that out, all right. There is no other form of retaliation they can resort to, unless they go out and pursue with greater vigor some of the very things they are doing now in other ports of the world.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator yield to let me make a suggestion in answer to the question of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I read the other day an extract from a letter I received from the Acting Secretary of State, in which he said this:

> On July 12 the department received an informal and confidential communication from the British ambassador, stating that the Canadian Government had requested him to say that the passage of House bill 15839—

That was this provision in the form of a bill—> would affect the relations of the two countries, and might cause the Canadian Government to enact retaliatory legislation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the secret of it, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. I think that is an impudent suggestion.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask a question for specific information? The subject is not a stranger to me, as the able Senator from Oregon knows. It happened to be thrown my way once.

Do I understand, from the observations of the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Oregon, that the threat or the fear is of retaliation upon the fishing industry of the Atlantic coast, and that the fear of retaliation upon the fishing industry of the Atlantic coast is such that by such fear the fishing interests of the Pacific coast are yielded?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Must suffer; yes.

Mr. LEWIS. Are surrendered?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Are surrendered.

Mr. LEWIS. In consideration of favors to be expected or in fear of retaliation to be apprehended upon the fishing industry on the Atlantic coast?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know any other reason than that very suggestion. It is the same old threat that is always made when America undertakes to assert her rights against the British Government. We do not want to get into trouble with Great Britain, nor any other country, but we do want to protect our own rights; and if in order to do it we must suffer retaliation in some other line or at some other place, why, Mr. President, let us at whatever cost make the effort to protect ourselves and let these retaliatory measures come whenever and wherever they see fit to bring them.

Why, there are some of our friends so tender-footed and so fearful of offending the majesty of Great Britain that they do not want to retain any of these so-called retaliatory provisions in this bill; and, yet, in violation of every treaty obligation, we find that Great Britain has not only been interfering with our commerce but is doing the very things that this measure is intended to relieve against; not only blacklisting our merchants but opening and censoring our mails. Only a few days ago I got a letter from a constituent of mine inclosing a letter from his good old mother in Germany, who wrote him that she had not heard from him for months, and yet he has been writing to her every week. Why? Because on the plea of military or other necessity Great Britain is invading the mails of the United States even when addressed to neutrals or neutral countries, and taking from the mail pouches private letters and every other kind, except such as may be protected not by international law—because they violate international law—but by special agreement between that country and this; not only letters but drafts and money and papers and everything else. I have letters from a prominent man in Pennsylvania who tells me that letters containing orders to his house from neutral countries are opened, the orders taken out and sent to British manufacturing establishments, and there filled; and the Government that has done these things has the impudence, as suggested by the letter addressed to the Senator from Washington, to insist that if we enact such legislation as that proposed and which we deem necessary to protect our people and our country, she will retaliate in some way. She can not retaliate any worse than she has done, Mr. President, without law, without authority, and in violation of every national and international right.

I know that there are Senators here who do not agree with me. I heard a distinguished gentleman say to-night that Great Britain was fighting our battles. If that be true, does she find it necessary, in fighting our battles, to destroy our commerce, to rifle our mail sacks, to take our money, to prevent our intercourse with neutrals, and to do everything or anything to our injury, whether sanctioned by the laws of nations or in spite of them?

I get tired of hearing this, Mr. President. Until the United States has the courage that Great Britain has always had to assert her rights and dare maintain them, the United States may expect to be imposed upon. One of my reasons for advocating preparation for self-defense was to let the world know that from this time on the United States expected to protect her citizens and her country and her country's interests at all hazards; and the very fact that she is prepared to assert those rights when occasion requires and demands is all that it will be necessary to do. She will never have to utilize her resources for war.

Mr. President, I have said all that I intended to say, and possibly more than I ought to have said; but I want to protest against this part of the conference report, and I serve notice on the Senate now that I propose to introduce a bill at the next session of Congress embodying the provision under consideration and try to call it to the attention of the Senate, and, if necessary, to the attention of the country, and to show the country who is responsible for this base surrender of our rights to the demands of the Canadian Government. I want to protest as loudly as I can against Sir Joseph Pope or any other Canadian official or the representatives of any other foreign Government coming over here, either to the Executive Chambers or to the Department of State or to any other department of the Government, unless duly accredited, and interfering with the enactment of laws by the American Congress that the American people feel are necessary for their protection and the protection of their commerce. I think if any American citizen ever dared to enter upon such a course without an invitation, there ought to be some way found to punish him for attempting to interfere with the legislation proposed by a foreign Government in its own way and for its own purposes.

I have entered my protest against this, Mr. President. That is all I expect to do. It may fall upon deaf ears in these the closing hours of the Congress, but the time will come when a reluctant Congress will hear and hearken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is just one thing that even my friend GEORGE CHAMBERLAIN can not do. He can not create war between us and the men and the women and the children of Canada. We are too near akin to one another in blood and in language and in literature and in law and in everything else that makes men and women akin to one another for that.

The greatest crime that the world could possibly witness would be a war between the people of the United States and the people of Canada. It is unthinkable from a sane man's standpoint, no matter what happens, no matter what occurs.

Mr. President, the most sublime spectacle in the world's history is the spectacle of peace that has been kept on the Canadian and the United States border for over 3,000 miles, protected only by three war vessels, I believe, on each side. The world has been given a spectacle of brotherhood and of fraternity between us and Canada that it has never witnessed anywhere else in all this universe, and by God's blessing we are going to keep it up.

The Senator says that we assert and we dare to maintain our rights. Of course we do. So do they assert and so do they dare maintain their rights, and they are weaker than we. All the more reason why we should be considerate in our treatment of them, and by God's blessing we are going to be. We are not hunting retaliation with Canada, either from her ports or from ours. We are seeking nothing except justice in the world.

There is one more thing to be said, Mr. President. A pathway of commercial retaliation is a pathway of war. In the long run it means that. It can not mean anything else. What we want is the old Democratic standpoint of the utmost free-trade relations with everybody on the earth. The utmost they grant us we ought to grant them. That spells peace; that spells amity; that spells friendship. The opposite course spells war in the long run, and to attempt to convert these 3,000 miles of boundary between us and Canada into an area of retaliation and trade hostility is to convert it ultimately into a relationship of war.

I, for one, have been opposed to it all the time, and I am opposed to it now. I can not conceive of a greater crime than having our children kill the children of the Canadians or have their children kill our children in an absolutely useless species of hostility. If we start with trade hostilities, we will wind up with warlike hostilities.

I do not care about Canada's relationship with Great Britain. That has nothing to do with the proposition, in my opinion. I am perfectly willing to go out as my forefathers did and fight Great Britain, but I am not willing to go out and fight Canada, Canadian men and women and children, and I am not willing to be put in an attitude of trade hostility to them any more than an attitude of warlike hostility.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment.

Senate amendment numbered 110 was receded from in the conference committee. This provision is practically in the present law, but it was not in the House bill. It provides that—

> Nothing in this title shall be construed to release a taxable person from liability for income tax, and any contract hereafter entered into for payment of any interest, rent, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical payment without allowing any deduction authorized to be made by this title or for the reimbursement of any amount so deducted shall be void.

I merely wish to say that I regret more than I can express that the conferees on the part of the Senate found it necessary to recede from this amendment. Its purpose was to prevent the shifting and passing on of the income tax to other people. The moment that principle is introduced into an income-tax law it ceases to be that kind of a law and becomes something else. I protest against it, and will do what I can at the next session of Congress to amend this measure so that the features of the present law may be reinstated.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has been somewhat unkind and unjust in his criticism of the Senate conferees in receding from the amendment which he has discussed. There were 273 amendments placed upon the bill by the Senate. All those amendments, with some slight emendations by the conferees, have been retained except 34. The conferees on the part of the Senate labored nearly three days and two nights in an earnest effort to come to an agreement with the conferees on the part of the House. There were many matters of difference in the beginning. Finally the matters in difference were worked down to about four or five propositions, and one of those four or five that were retained for final discussion, because of the Senate conferees' attitude upon them, was the amendment of the Senator from Oregon which was placed in the bill by the Senate. After considerable discussion in the early stages of our conference we found that we could not agree upon that amendment. We passed it over. According to my recollection, we returned to it again and still were unable to agree, the House conferees being firmly set against it. Finally we yielded to the House conferees. It was one of the last amendments on which we yielded.

Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon characterizes our action in yielding to the House upon this matter as a cowardly surrender of the rights of this country to a foreign country. I want to state to the Senator that the conferees on the part of the House did not put their opposition to his amendment upon the ground of any foreign protest. They did not ask that it be striken out because of any suggestion that it was unsatisfactory or unacceptable to the Canadian Government. They asked that it be stricken out upon what they claimed was the merits of the proposition. I am not stating our position about it; I am stating the position of the House conferees. They claimed that it was an effort by legislation to change a natural condition, an effort to force American fishermen to patronize an American town for the shipment of their fish when they preferred, as a matter of convenience and interest, to patronize a foreign town. That was their claim.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator just a moment?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Did they stop to think at all that the order in council was doing the same thing—making the American business men and American ships go to Canadian ports to do business in a Canadian port, not in our own?

Mr. SIMMONS. They claimed that the fishermen wanted to go there.

Now, here is the situation as they contended. I was not familiar with the merits of the proposition from their standpoint. The Senator from Oregon had in the regular way offered his amendment to the pending bill and it was referred to the Finance Committee. Before it was adopted by the committee the Senator conferred with me about it. I do not think the Senator has ever introduced a bill for this purpose. I do not think any Senator from the Pacific coast has ever introduced such a bill. The first time I heard of this proposition was through the amendments offered to this bill by the Senators from Oregon and Washington. These amendments were practically the same.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I know the Senator wants to be perfectly fair about it. When the Senator said the committee had determined to put it in the bill I did not think any explanation was necessary. I thought the Senator knew all about it or he would not have put it in.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was not complaining of that. I said the Senator had not introduced a bill covering this subject, nor had any Senator from the Pacific coast. I knew his side of the question, however, because I had heard the Senator from Washington discuss it at length in the Senate, and I discussed it to some extent with the Senator from Oregon.

The House conferees, as I understand, had considered the question of putting it into the original House bill, but after some investigation they decided not to put it in the bill and became opposed to it upon its merits.

Now, here was their contention with reference to it: They said here is Ketchikan, an Alaska town. Here is Prince Rupert, a Canadian town, to which runs the Grand Trunk Railroad. Here is Seattle, another American town. There is nothing in the law now to prevent American fishermen in the adjacent waters from taking their fish either to the Alaska port or to the Canadian port or to the port of Seattle. They have their choice.

Many of them live in Prince Rupert; and, exercising their choice under the present law and as a matter of convenience and as a matter of economy, and because of better transportation facilities at Prince Rupert, they chose, as they had a right to do under the law, to patronize the Canadian port of Prince Rupert rather than the American ports of Ketchikan or Seattle. They said the object of this legislation seemed to be to force these fishermen against their will to carry their fish to Ketchikan or to Seattle instead of Prince Rupert. They said that no request for this legislation had come from the fishermen. They said the request for this legislation came chiefly from people living in Ketchikan who were interested in having these fishermen make their homes in Ketchikan and patronize that port, and it had the appearance of an attempt in the interest of that town to force trade out of its natural lines for the purpose of booming that town and promoting the interest of the people who live there and who, of course, were anxious to see their town prosper and to establish there this industry.

Mr. President, further than that it was said that if this law was passed and these fishermen were not permitted to ship from the Canadian ports, but required to go to Ketchikan and ship from there in American bond, this would happen: When they took their fish to Ketchikan and assorted them and prepared them for shipment in bond, they would be forced to put them in a foreign vessel, take them to Prince Rupert, and ship them over a Canadian road into the United States. They asked, Why should these American fishermen be compelled by law to take their fish to Ketchikan, an inconvenient point, and ship them to Prince Rupert on their way to the American market instead of taking them in the first instance to Prince Rupert, as they now do from choice? Why so inconvenience and penalize these poor people to build up the town and port of Ketchikan?

The House conferees refused to agree to legislation which they thought would accomplish this unfair result. I am not discussing the question of whether they were right or not, I have simply sought to present the situation as it confronted the conferees. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I desire to supplement what the Senator from North Carolina said by stating that in addition to the feeling of the House conferees on this subject matter, so far as the Senator stated it, there was another angle that they considered, which was the condition existing upon the Atlantic coast. A Member of Congress representing the Atlantic coast came before the conference and said that those Atlantic coast fishermen were operating absolutely at the suffrance of the Canadian Government; that they had privileges extended to them there which were not guaranteed by any law or by any treaty, but were guaranteed them by a sort of modus vivendi, which had no foundation in law, a sort of gentlemen's agreement; and he convinced us that any attempt on our part to resort to retaliatory measures, however successful it might be for the Pacific coast, would result very much to the detriment of the fishermen of the Atlantic coast.

Furthermore, he called our attention to the fact that there is now in existence a statute which enables the President of the United States to act, which places in the hands of the President of the United States the power to deal with the situation as fully as Congress could possibly deal with it; that the only question to be decided by the President of the United States is whether or not the interests affected on one coast would be greater than the interests affected on the other coast. No matter which way the weight inclined the information that I, as a member of the conference committee, received inclined me to believe that it was not a matter to deal with by retaliatory methods, but that should be decided by the representatives of both countries to meet in a spirit of fairness and equity and justice.

I will say to the Senate that in the Finance Committee I was the one who offered this provision. The ex parte information at my disposal inclined me very strongly to support the view held by the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Oregon. Like the Senator from North Carolina, I was compelled to admit the justice of the claim made by the Atlantic coast fishermen and forced to the conclusion that it was not a matter to be dealt with by means of retaliatory legislation. I feel very much that the last case of the fishermen on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts might be worse than the first.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, after the Senate shall have acted on the conference report now pending, I assume that many Senators will depart from the city, that a quorum will no longer be possible, and no further transaction of business will be available.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the Senator assume that no one else has anything to say on the conference report?

Mr. OWEN. I assumed that the discussion on the conference report had terminated. If the Senator wishes to discuss the report further——

Mr. HUGHES. Is the Senator proceeding upon the assumption that we are not going to get a vote upon the report tonight?

Mr. OWEN. I am not.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we can not hear a word the Senators are saying.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from New Jersey asked if I was proceeding upon the theory that there would be no vote upon the conference report. I replied that I was not.

Mr. President, in the Democratic platform of 1908 appears this pledge:

> We pledge the Democratic Party to the enactment of a law prohibiting any corporation from contributing to a campaign fund and any individual from contributing any amount above a reasonable maximum, and providing for the publication before election of all such contributions above a reasonable maximum.

That pledge has not been carried out. In the Democratic platform of 1912 appears this pledge:

> We pledge the Democratic Party to the enactment of a law prohibiting any corporation from contributing to a campaign fund and any individual from contributing any amount above a reasonable maximum.

That has not been carried out. It is true that during the last Congress the House of Representatives passed a measure proposing to strengthen the elections of the United States against corrupt practices; it is true that the Senate of the United States, through its proper Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported that bill favorably; but it is also true that it was impossible to pass it through the Senate of the United States because of the ease with which a filibuster can be carried on in this body in the absence of a previous question.

Certainly no one can say that the Senator from Oklahoma has not been diligent in pressing the corrupt-practices act during this session. He caused a bill to prevent such practices to be introduced on the first day of the session—last December. December has gone; January, February, March, April, May, June, July, and August have gone, and yet there has been no action. The steering committee made that bill a part of the legislative program; the Democratic conference made it a part of the legislative program; and the real reason why it has not been passed has been because of the fixed and determined hostility to the passage of such a measure by Senators on the other side of the aisle, or, at least, by some of them. I would make an exception of those progressive Senators whom I have heretofore named—seven in number—who voted to take up this bill when it came before the Senate a few days ago.

Mr. President, in the United States we all know of many most egregious wrongs against the purity of our elections, against the common honesty of our elections, against the common decency in our elections. Evidence has been submitted to the Senate on account of which a Senator was removed from the Senate because of his having bought a place on this floor; yet the Senate of the United States stands here and refuses to pass an act by which the repetition of this conduct——

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. FALL. I had the floor, and I was addressing the Senate. The chairman of the conference committee came in with his report, and, as is usual, at his request I agreed to yield to the conference report, with the statement, which I think is of record, that I did not yield the floor, except purely for that purpose. Now, sir, I have listened to speeches on every subject practically. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is making a speech upon his bill, which he has had every opportunity to make at any time that he pleased. I therefore think the Senator is out of order.

Mr. OWEN. The conference report is before the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is correct. He had the floor. I interrupted him, and asked him if he would not yield to me to present the conference report and to ask for its consideration. He said he would. Of course the Senator from New Mexico understands that I am not responsible, and I can not prevent——

Mr. FALL. I do not hold the Senator from North Carolina at all responsible. I simply rely upon the point of order.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will have plenty of time to discuss the question.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, there need not be any controversy between the Senator from New Mexico and myself. Under the practice of the Senate it has been always in order to speak on anything a Senator pleased at any time he pleased, no matter what is before the Senate. That practice has been so common that it has become a uniform rule. I am perfectly willing to yield the floor to the Senator from New Mexico and let him proceed with his remarks if he wishes to do so.

Mr. FALL. If I have not a right to the floor under the rules of the Senate, I do not ask the Senator from Oklahoma to yield to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state that though the Senator from New Mexico yielded the floor for the purpose of the consideration of the conference report, while the conference report is yet before the Senate there is no way with which the Chair is familiar in which he could decide what might be discussed or what might not be discussed by any Senator who might obtain the floor pending the consideration of the report.

Mr. FALL. Certainly, if the Senator from Oklahoma is discussing the conference report——

Mr. OWEN. I shall feel bound by what the Senator from New Mexico understood when he gave up the floor—because that was what he did say—and I think he is within his rights to ask that he should have the floor. I therefore will withhold any further comment until he has concluded.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I will say that had I been allowed to continue, I do not think that my remarks would have occupied to exceed more than 10 minutes of the time of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have had a lesson taught me tonight. I have never in my experience in the Senate refused or hesitated to yield the floor for a conference report. I yielded two hours ago. I have heard a speech made here—a postmortem speech—on matters which have been discussed and rediscussed for three or four months. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] appears suddenly upon the scene, after making a speech this morning, upon this conference report, and proceeds to talk upon the eight-hour bill and the Republican platform.

Now, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that for the purpose of taking up and having the immediate consideration of the conference report, I will again cheerfully yield to him, with the understanding, however—and I hope the Senate will understand—that immediately upon the conclusion of that matter I shall endeavor, with the permission of the Senate, to conclude my remarks.

Mr. OWEN. I shall have to object to that agreement.

Mr. FALL. Very well, then, if there is objection I can not yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now before the Senate is, Shall the conference report be agreed to? Does the Senator from New Mexico desire to address himself to that question?

Mr. FALL. I do not desire to address myself to the conference report, Mr. President. I will not take advantage of the Senate by making that statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will not the Senator permit me to make a statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is, Will the Senate agree to the conference report?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not intend to take the time of the Senate at any length, but I wish to state that I indorse without qualification the statement made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I am quite sure he did not intend to reflect upon the Senate conferees. I do not. I am satisfied the Senate conferees did the very best they could under the circumstances. If any recession of this matter is made, it will be made by Congress, and Congress will be the responsible body.

When I say that I indorse what the Senator from Oregon said, I do not understand that I am trying to get up a war with Canada or with Canadians or anything of that sort, as was suggested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

As I understand this amendment, it simply provides for doing what we have a perfect right to do; and there is no question of retaliation involved in it even against Canada. It does not affect the rights of the Canadians in any way, shape, or form. We simply regulate the manner in which fresh fish shall be brought into our own country through our own ports; which, it seems to me, we have a perfect right to do. Our Canadian friends do not seem to hesitate to do something to encourage and develop and promote their industries; and how it can be considered as seeking a war with them, or even retaliation, for us to endeavor to promote, develop, and build up our own industries, I fail to see. One thing is certain, Mr. President, that so long as we submit entirely to them, so long as we do nothing to protect our own interests and our own rights, so long as we simply accept their protests without any resistance whatever, so long will they invade our rights and develop their own industries; and we will gain nothing from them except their disrespect. We do not have their respect. I respect Canada for insisting upon her rights, for trying to build up her industries, and for protecting her interests, and I have no complaint against Canada for succeeding in this matter.

The complaint which I have is against ourselves for allowing them to interfere with our absolute rights and privileges.

A few days ago I submitted some remarks in reference to this matter. I set forth the various orders in council that the Canadian Government had enacted, evidencing, in my judgment, not only the assertion of their own rights, but rank discrimination against our people and our industries. I shall not take the time of the Senate to go over all these matters again. I simply want to emphasize and to call the attention of the Senate to one or two particular matters.

It was no wonder to me that Senators should inquire why it was that we had to recede from this very just and meritorious amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, would the Senator mind my asking him, for future use, if he will put his finger on the injustice of the British order in council? We will have this subject to deal with again, and it may be helpful to have that information from the Senator.

Mr. JONES. I will put first my finger upon one of the main things the Canadians desire to do, as set out in one of the whereases of the order in council. It reads:

> And whereas the minister of the naval service is informed that, in view of the fact that Prince Rupert is several hundred miles nearer the fishing grounds than is Seattle, and as the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is now operating so that fish can as readily be shipped to the eastern United States markets from Prince Rupert as from Seattle, if such boats and smaller vessels were permitted to go to Prince Rupert and sell their catches to some person or corporation which would in turn ship them in bond to the United States, and if such vessels or boats were then permitted to purchase supplies for their fishing operations, a considerable number of them would transfer their base of operations from Seattle to Prince Rupert and would probably later transfer their vessels or boats to the Canadian registry and permanently operate from Prince Rupert.

In other words, one of the principal things in this amendatory order in council is not only to get these fishing boats to center their operations at Prince Rupert, but to transfer their American registry to Canadian registry. That was perfectly legitimate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But, Mr. President, the Senator does not show us the British order in council.

Mr. JONES. That was from the British order in council.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; that was in a resolution passed at Seattle.

Mr. JONES. No, it was not; that was one of the whereases in the Canadian order in council. That is what they say—whereas that is desirable, and so on. After the whereases, the order in council reads:

> The said order in council of December 10, 1914, is hereby amended to provide—

Then comes the actual order in council to accomplish the purposes set out in the whereases. The order is printed at length on page 13183 of the RECORD, and I do not believe that I will take the time of the Senate to read it now, as it can be found there in full, together with various other orders in council and the reasons why they wanted to do these things. Here is another order in council for the present year, 1916, which provides:

> That such foreigners and foreign corporations, before bringing fresh fish to a port in British Columbia, may be permitted to purchase bait at any port in said Province of British Columbia upon an undertaking to the satisfaction of the minister of customs that catches of fish made with any baiting so supplied shall be landed at any port on the mainland of British Columbia, and be thence forwarded in bond to a port in the United States, the whole under such regulations and conditions as the minister of customs may determine.

In other words, it is provided by a British order in council that our fishermen can not get bait in Canadian waters unless they agree beforehand to take their catch into a Canadian port and ship it from there in bond to the United States. The Canadians have a perfect right to do that. I do not question their right to do that. They are building up their industries, but they do not hesitate to impose a restriction like that upon our fishermen and upon our people. I will ask the Senator to listen to what a very responsible merchant in Seattle wrote me the other day. His letter was dated August 4, 1916, and he said:

Just this week fishing vessels have arrived that have taken bait and ice in British Columbia, but did not go back there with their catch, and they have been blacklisted and denied the privilege of again entering a British port and discharge cargo, and one of them, calling again for bait at a Canadian port, the Canadian dealer refused to supply him with any, having been listed as one of the undesirables by this Government that is working so hard to benefit the American fishermen.

That is what they do to our people. Those are the steps they are taking to build up their industries. Now, Mr. President, why is it that we can not, in order to promote our own interests and develop our own industries, provide how fish shall come into our own ports? The amendment does not take away any of the rights of a Canadian fisherman. He could under it ship his fish in here just as he is shipping them now, but they will not let us sell fish in the Canadian market for home consumption.

Mr. President, I have set out the facts pretty fully in my previous remarks, as I have said, and I am not going to take the time of the Senate to go over the matter in detail again. I simply want to call attention to an extract, which I read in the time of the Senator from Oregon, from a letter from our State Department, in which it is stated that the British ambassador, after the Canadian Government had found that this bill was pending, represented to our State Department that, if this bill were enacted into law, the Canadian Government would have to retaliate. Retaliate why? The action proposed in the amendment to the revenue bill which was adopted by the Senate was not retaliation; it simply affected our own people and our own interests and prescribed how certain things should be brought into our own markets. I do not say that we are receding from our position because of this threat.

It is suggested that some of the interests on the Atlantic coast insist that our interests shall be sacrificed to their interests and their rights.

Well, is Congress going to do that? We supply from the Pacific coast 95 per cent of the halibut used in the United States. There are 4,000,000 pounds of halibut caught on the Atlantic coast and 60,000,000 pounds on the Pacific coast.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate further. I recognize the situation. This is a conference report. It must be accepted in full or rejected in full. We all know that. We want to adjourn, I know. As I said a while ago, I believe our conferees have done the very best they possibly could. I have no criticism at all to make of them; but I wish that Congress itself would say that we will stay in session to enact legislation that we believe in, and we will not recede from it either under pressure from any other Government or under pressure for lack of time.

Mr. FALL and Mr. STONE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor. I will yield to the Senator for a conference report, or for a vote, or for discussion of the conference report, if I can yield for that purpose, and for no other purpose.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I hope we can have a vote. It is exceedingly late. Senators are going home, and it would be a great relief to finish up this matter and take a recess.

Mr. STONE. Do I understand—may I have permission to say—that the Senator from New Mexico takes the floor to tell the Senate what it may do at his pleasure? I desire to make a few feeble remarks, and I am going to make them before this vote is taken. The Senator from New Mexico can proceed if he wishes, but he will not control the floor to tell the Senate what it may do.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from Missouri having kindly given his consent that the Senator from New Mexico may proceed to make his remarks, the Senator from New Mexico will thank the Senator from Missouri for his kind permission, and with that he will proceed to make those few feeble remarks.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that the Senator from Missouri merely desires to address himself to the question under discussion, relating to a provision of the revenue bill.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from Missouri evidently did not catch the statement I have made. The Senator from New Mexico had the floor. That was the parliamentary situation. The Senator from New Mexico had yielded the floor purely for the consideration of the conference report. Several other speeches were interjected not referring to the conference report. The Senator from New Mexico raised a point of order as to the other speeches, and the point was sustained by the Chair. The Senator from New Mexico again took the floor. The Senator from New Mexico yielded for the conference report. If the Senator from Missouri desires to speak upon the conference report, the Senator from New Mexico will again gracefully take his seat. The Senator from New Mexico is not undertaking to dictate; but, having the floor, he has a parliamentary advantage, and he can yield for certain purposes; and if those purposes are not to be carried out he can refuse to yield. That is the situation.

Mr. STONE. Well, what does the Senator do? Does he proceed, or is he disposed to take his seat?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state that the Senator from New Mexico having yielded for the consideration of the conference report, that report would be considered by the Senate. While, of course, the Senator himself has the right to obtain the floor, as he now has, for the purpose of speaking upon that or any other subject, he does not have the right to deal out time to Senators to discuss this or any other subject.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from New Mexico has not assumed to dictate to the Senate, nor to the present Presiding Officer of the Senate. The Senator from New Mexico does take the position, and takes it fairly, that he has the floor, and he does not yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was merely stating, in response to an inquiry made by the Senator from Missouri, what he understood the parliamentary situation to be.

Mr. FALL. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15842) to revise, amend, and codify the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States, extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of President and Vice President of the United States, limiting the amount which may be expended, providing for the publicity of campaign expenses, and for other purposes.

[Mr. FALL resumed and concluded the speech heretofore begun by him. The entire speech is as follows:]

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, before undertaking to discuss the provisions of the bill which has been before the Senate now for two days, I want to say that I have been very much interested in one or two phases of the discussion. Particularly, sir, was I interested in the little colloquy between the Senator having charge of the bill [Mr. OWEN] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. The colloquy between those Senators made an impression upon my mind which I feel impelled to give utterance to. I refer to the tendency displayed by those holding the views of the Senator from Oklahoma to bring matters before the Senate for consideration, and when those matters are objected to upon a constitutional ground or upon the ground that the precedents or the decisions of the courts are contrary to the trend or tenor of the desired legislation, to wave aside as of nothing, as of no importance, not only the Constitution of the United States, but the decisions of the highest courts of the land upon subjects similar to those under discussion. That tendency has impressed me more than once, but I have never seen it so forcibly expressed in the legislative halls as in the instance to which I have referred.

Mr. President, it is true that in a democracy statesmen are born every day. Some statesmen finding their way into the legislative halls are impatient with the rules which have prevailed prior to their advent; some are impatient even with the constitutional limitations placed upon legislation; some, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] very frankly says, say that the constitutional limitations should not be considered at all; that the people make constitutions and that the Supreme Court can change its decisions upon the proposition involved in the legislation now pending. That is true; but the pride of Anglo-Saxon civilization has been that the people change their fundamental law legally and according to the forms and precedents of the law. The boast of our Anglo-Saxon civilization has been that our liberties, our constitutional rights, came down to us, not through legislation, but by inheritance. Our boast has been that our forefathers obtained nothing by Magna Charta of an affirmative character, but that they simply wrested from those who had encroached upon their natural rights a recognition of those rights, and the promise that forever such rights should be safeguarded; but more recently a school of statesmen has grown up—and it is natural in a democracy—who, impatient with precedent, impatient with forms, forget the past history of thousands of years of civilization and embodied in decisions of the courts, and are willing to sweep aside all constitutional restraints and limitations when they stand in the way of legislation sought by themselves; who desire to ignore completely the past history of the human race.

Mr. President some statesmen forget that when the Constitution, under which we are now proceeding with the business of this country, was formed the United States had been in travail for 11 years. The men who formed the Constitution of the United States composed the greatest body of men whom the world ever knew to be gathered for such a purpose or for any other purpose. This may not be popular doctrine with some modern statesmen, but, nevertheless, my assertion is sustained, I think, by the verdict of every writer upon the American form of government from De Tocqueville to Bryce, and every other writer or historian who has written since the Constitution was adopted.

Madison for years had, through Thomas Jefferson, secured every work on government written in every language which Jefferson was able to procure for him in Europe. Madison knew, when he was engaged in writing a constitution or in assisting in writing a constitution for us, that a thousand years before that time Athens had gone through exactly the cycle which this country must go through if the constitutional limitations placed by our forefathers, the system of checks and balances inaugurated by them is to be ignored, done away with, not considered at all, at the behest of every statesman of the modern school. Shelley wrote many years ago, that more than a thousand years ago liberty said:

> Let there be light,
> And, like the sunrise on the broad sea,
> Athens rose.

Our forefathers understood the distinction between a republican form of government and a pure democracy, and the tendency of the legislative work of these modern statesmen is to do away with that labor of our forefathers, the results of which, if anything, would perpetuate this Government on the face of the earth.

But, sir, the Senator from Oklahoma has a preceder: for his views. The President of the United States has, if I read him correctly, long held and entertained similar views. I remember reading with great interest from time to time the views upon government entertained by then Dr. Wilson, now President Wilson. I think they were very similar in some respects to those entertained by the Senator from Oklahoma. For instance, in his Constitutional Government, the President says:

> I am not repeating the famous sentence of the Massachusetts bill of rights "to the end that this may be a government of laws and not of men." There never was such a government. Constitute them how you will, governments are always governments of men, and no part of any government is better than the men to whom that part is intrusted.

Again he says—and I want to call the attention of Senators to the fact that, not only has the President criticized the spokesmen or the leaders of one of the great political parties, but he long, long since made the discovery that Jefferson and Madison and Washington and Hamilton and others, laboring sincerely though they were, in forming the Constitution, some by direct action and others, as Jefferson, by advice transmitted even from Europe to them, were mistaken. He says:

> The makers of our Federal Constitution followed the scheme as they found it expounded in Montesquieu, followed it with genuine scientific enthusiasm. The admirable expositions of the Federalist read like thoughtful applications of Montesquieu to the political needs and circumstances of America. They are full of the theory of checks and balances—

Full of the theory of checks and balances—

> The President is balanced off against Congress, Congress against the President, and each against the courts. Our statesmen of the earlier generations quoted no one so often as Montesquieu, and they quoted him always as a scientific standard in the field of politics. Politics is turned into mechanics under his touch. The theory of gravitation is supreme.
>
> The trouble with the theory is that government is not a machine, but a living thing. It falls, not under the theory of the universe, but under the theory of organic life. It is accountable to Darwin, not to Newton.

The President of the United States is, as the Senator from Oklahoma is, an adherent of the Darwinian theory rather than, as he expresses it, of the Newtonian theory.

Mr. President, I have some hesitation in criticizing the bill now before the Senate. I am aware of the fact that when legislation of this character is offered some statesmen believe that if criticism in turn is offered those criticizing must be governed by unworthy motives; that they must be held up to the people and the galleries in the Senate as being in favor of corrupt practices, or, rather, opposed to legislation purifying elections. Nevertheless, Mr. President, while understanding this tendency on the part of the "congressional salvation army," I shall, in pursuance of what I conceive to be my duty, point to some of the defects of this legislation.

Mr. President, I am not opposed, nor do I believe there is a Senator in this body who is opposed, to any proper and constitutional legislation which will tend to purify elections or which will tend to prevent corruption among the electorate. There are, however, some of us who do not propose by our votes to assist in enacting legislation of the character proposed. I, for one, do not believe that an act or an utterance done or published tending directly or indirectly to influence a vote is per se corrupt. I believe that proper information extended through the press, proper acts done to inform the electorate, are worthy acts, and should not be denounced, and the expenditure made in performing them should not be prohibited, as is proposed in this bill. In other words, I object to the same limitation upon the corruption of the voter by bribing him directly being applied to a proper effort to inform him and influence him properly, and yet no distinction is made in this proposed legislation.

Reading on page 19, subsection (d), we find that—

> Any act shall be deemed to have been done for "political purposes" when the act is of a nature, is done with the intent, or is done in such a way as to influence or tend to influence, directly or indirectly, voting.

Not "corruptly influence," but "tend to influence"; and this act is placed in the same category as the bribing of a voter by money.

There is an attempt in this bill to form a classification of organizations which may take part in elections. The first is the national committee, the expenditures of which are limited, broadly speaking, to $400,000 in a campaign. Next are the congressional committees. Next is a committee, an association of persons, five or more, who may file articles of association with the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The expenditures of that committee are unlimited in this bill. There is no provision that only one committee shall be so formed. Under the provisions of this bill 500 such committees can be so formed; and if there is one word of limitation upon their expenditures contained in this bill, even by implication, I am unaware of it. If, by implication, it may be held that there is some attempt at limitation, then it would only be under the $400,000 limitation applicable to the national committees.

Then, Mr. President, under the terms of this corrupt practices act the national committee itself is limited in its expenditures to $400,000; and either one horn of the dilemma or the other must be taken by those advocating the bill with reference to limitation or nonlimitation of expenditures of these committees organized by filing their articles of incorporation with Congress. There is a provision that they shall make a statement as to the subscriptions given to them. There is a provision that they shall make a statement as to their expenditures, but there is no limitation upon their expenditures, unless, as I say, by implication the courts might say that the limitation of $400,000 placed upon the national committee also applies to each of these anomalous committees.

[At this point Mr. FALL yielded for the presentation of a conference report.]

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, as I was saying, under the provisions of this bill, even granted that there might be, which I do not grant, by implication a limitation upon the expenditures of this class of committees to which I have referred as committees which will be formed by filing their articles of association with the Clerk of the House—even granting that the same limitation applied to the expenditures of each of those committees as would apply to the expenditures of the national committee—there is certainly no attempt, even by implication or otherwise, to limit the number of such committees; so that 5 or 15 or 50 such committees might be formed under the terms of the bill, as I read it, and each might expend at least the sum of $400,000 to assist any one candidate or for such purposes as legitimately they can expend money under the provisions of the bill.

If, on the other hand, it is claimed that the aggregate of expenditures of the national committee and of certain committees so formed under the terms of the bill is $400,000, in that event one or two committees so formed might deprive the national committee of the opportunity to spend one cent, which, of course, is a ridiculous proposition to advance. I do not advance it; it is contained in the bill.

Again, Mr. President, any person taking an interest in this election becomes a committee under the provisions of the bill. That is to say, any person or number of persons associating themselves together as a committee or acting individually, who do not become a committee or association under the terms of the bill, are prohibited from expending money except as set forth therein.

Now, sir, the woman's suffrage union or any individuals interested in the woman's suffrage union would come under the provisions which I have just referred to, and the limitations of the expenditure of the woman's union for suffrage would be $5,000 in the campaign.

There are persons associated together in the United States engaged in another great moral work, the Antisaloon League of the United States, who would come under the provisions which I have just referred to, and its legitimate expenditures would be under the terms of the bill limited in this election to $5,000. Yet we already have through the press the news that when the prohibition convention was held, when Gov. Hanley was nominated as the candidate of the Prohibition Party for the Presidency, one citizen of Florida openly in the convention contributed $50,000 to the election or to the Prohibition propaganda, and later, we are informed by the press, this citizen upon his return to Florida contributed a second $50,000 for such purpose. Yet that contribution is not only denounced in this bill, but under the strict terms of it a party so contributing might be guilty of a felony, fined and imprisoned, and forever disgraced.

The American Federation of Labor, the president of which is now engaged in a political campaign for the purpose of influencing votes in behalf of one of the candidates for the Presidency, is the editor of a labor journal.

The American Federation of Labor, through the columns of this journal, under the direction of its president, is engaged in offering reasons why the people of this country should support one candidate for the Presidency and not another. Literature is being sent out by this organization. A propaganda is always being carried on by this organization for the purpose of influencing votes in the election held in the congressional districts and in the States. Under the terms of the bill such influence or such influences so used costing beyond the limitations of $5,000 would be illegal.

It is unnecessary, possibly, to say that the courts might not sustain the constitutionality of the act. That makes no difference in so far as the author of the bill is concerned. He says that if the act is unconstitutional the courts can change their decision.

Mr. President, the intent of the bill in some respects may be good. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma or to any of his colleagues that I will go just as far as he or anyone else will in undertaking to secure free and fair elections, and will go further than he or they will in seeing that the electorate is informed through the public press and through any other legitimate method properly informed and properly influenced for good.

There are many matters which should be considered by the electorate during this campaign and in this election, matters aside from the ordinary routine, matters of the organization of a committee, the sending out of a campaign book, and printing the speeches.

There is the power through the prestige of the executive department of the Government, through the different departments themselves, through the Cabinet officers, by which campaign literature can be sent out and is being sent out without limitation on the cost of it. The incident which occurred here yesterday, painful as it might be considered in some aspects, is simply illustrative of the point which I am making. A Senator in power, in office, under the terms of the bill, under the ruling of the Post Office Department, may send out literature in his own behalf costing the taxpayers, assuming that a 2-cent stamp simply performs its duty and makes no profit, instead of a thousand dollars, ten thousand dollars. This is no reflection upon the Senator. He had the legal right, it was so held; but he, a Senator in office, under the terms of the bill can expend $5,000 of his personal funds. A Senator now in office may use the franking privilege to any amount he desires. His opponent, contesting him before the people for the office, pays for every postage stamp which he uses, and yet that opponent is limited to $5,000 total expenditure, while the Senator in office can also expend the public funds without limit.

Mr. President, any utterance from the White House, any news from the State Department of the Government, is immediately sent to the four quarters of the earth through the public press of the country. Every paper of whatever political complexion publishes anything emanating from the White House or from the departments; and therefore the party in power is not only able to expend the same amount of money in publicity or in legitimate election expenses as the party out of power, but is able to secure publicity which would cost millions of dollars instead of $400,000, which publicity is not at the beck and call of the party out of power.

There have been various statements emanating from the Executive Mansion and the departments with reference to very important matters which should be and will be considered by the electorate at this election, statements which I am here prepared to show at any time are in very many respects, to say the least, to use the mildest term, erroneous and absolutely misleading.

I say that if it cost $5,000,000 for publicity legitimately to remove from the minds of the people of the United States the erroneous impressions which they have imbibed possibly to some extent from the utterances of the executive department of the Government such expenditures are not only legitimate but that if—and this is a strong statement—if our institutions are to be perpetuated the people must be reached with some correct information on various propositions which are not correctly understood we will say by the Executive or the executive departments of the Nation.

Sir, we are told through the public press, we are told even in statements issued from the White House itself, that upon our southern border there are men engaged in sending out false reports, that those men are selfishly interested in a neighboring Republic, and that they are sending out constantly false reports for their own selfish ends to enhance the value of their property located in a foreign country. We are told in public speeches from the first speech made by the President at Mobile, Ala., down to the present time, that in all Latin American countries and in Mexico there are grafting concessions being held by American citizens, and that such citizens have attempted to foment difficulty. We have heard it even here upon the floor of the Senate that selfish interests holding grafting concessions in Mexico have misled or attempted to mislead the people, and not only that but that they caused the original trouble in Mexico, and that the result of their efforts was the overthrow of Diaz by a bloody revolution.

We have been told that in various utterances coming from the executive department, we have been told it, I say, by Senators here upon the floor, getting their information possibly from the source which they considered they should seek it from, the source which they considered should have such information.

Sir, the Senate was electrified and the country was astounded here a short time ago when the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] in attacking the Republican candidate for the Presidency denounced Americans in Mexico as holding thieving concessions and as having been interested in stirring up revolution. And the charge was also made that the Republican candidate and Republican leaders have in every way thrown obstacles in the way of the present Executive of this Government in his attempt to pacify and bring order out of Mexico. Oh, Mr. President, a change has come over the spirit of their dreams.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA of Tennessee in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FALL. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. LEWIS. I only want, in order to have the RECORD clear, to say that the reference of the able Senator from New Mexico to the Senator from Illinois is to myself, and not to my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN]. It is I who am responsible for the declaration referred to. The Senator is correct. I made those allegations upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. Has the distinguished Senator from Illinois read the acceptance speech of his candidate for the Presidency?

Mr. LEWIS. I would answer that I have read it.

Mr. FALL. Did the able Senator from Illinois discover, after his very careful reading of that most beautiful flow of language, anything to substantiate the charges which he made here against the Republicans and their candidate for the Presidency?

Mr. LEWIS. I will say that I assume the President felt that my own accusations were so thoroughly sustained that it was unnecessary for him to refer to them.

Mr. FALL. At any rate, although the President had made the same charges before, he has not made them since.

Mr. LEWIS. I concede to the able Senator, though in a more serious vein, that I was attracted to the fact that in the President's acceptance there was an absence of matters referred to by the distinguished President in an address which he had delivered to Congress upon the same subject; and I assumed that possibly his object was to force the issues in this campaign to the real material things within the Government—the domestic policy—rather than to have them wander off upon matters in which there had been so much uncertainty and, possibly, so little of real information as there had been on certain collateral matters of Mexico.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I am grateful to the Senator from Illinois. I agree with him that I think there was a very studied effort upon the part of the President of the United States to avoid the issue which the Senator himself undertook to inject into this campaign. I think that the President displayed more discretion, sir, with due deference to the distinguished Senator from Illinois, than that Senator has displayed.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the Chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. FALL. I yield for a question.

Mr. OWEN. Does the Senator from New Mexico disagree with the long-time policy of the Senate of the United States, that party lines should cease at tidewater and at our own boundaries?

Mr. FALL. I did not exactly understand the Senator's question.

Mr. OWEN. I ask the Senator whether or not he agrees with the long-time policy of the Senate of the United States that party lines should cease at tidewater?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have proven, I think, before in my course, not only as a Senator but as a citizen, that I believe that no matter what administration was in power when the country was in danger partisanship should cease; but I have not yet so far sunk my own convictions, nor surrendered my commission as a Senator here in this body, as to agree that the President of the United States is always right. I propose to support my country. If the President of the United States is leading my country into danger, if the President of the United States is misleading the people of the United States as to facts, and calling upon them to follow him, and I am able to impede his progress in the wrong direction, or if I am able to disabuse the minds of the people of the United States, then, sir, I hold a commission here to do that very thing, and I shall perform it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield further to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. FALL. Yes.

Mr. OWEN. Does not the able Senator think that the duty of adviser should be performed without making a partisan issue of our relations to foreign countries?

Mr. FALL. Oh, of course, Mr. President; but we have apparently, in so far as the Mexican question is concerned, no foreign issue at all. Mexico, the President of the United States told us, has no government. He told us repeatedly that Mexico has no government. The people of Mexico to-day themselves say they have no government; but the President of the United States found a man whom, he says, he has recognized, constituted, and made as the de facto representative of some de facto government in Mexico—his creature. You say that I shall not criticize his act in creating him. Of what timber is the Senator from Oklahoma built? What is his idea? What is his conception of his duty as a Senator? I can gather some conception of it from his words.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield further?

Mr. FALL. Yes.

Mr. OWEN. When a question arose in the Senate with regard to our relations to a foreign country, I should on such an occasion give the best advice I could in relation to the matter, in order to promote what I believe to be the best interest of our country; but I——

Mr. FALL. Oh——

Mr. OWEN. Just a moment, if the Senator pleases, since he asked me what I would do. In doing so, I would not do that as a Democrat, but I would do it as an American. I would discard the party issue in dealing with Mexico or with Belgium or with Germany or with France or with Great Britain.

Mr. FALL. I defy the Senator from Oklahoma to point to one act of his in the Senate of the United States with reference to Mexico or any foreign country which has not been the act of a partisan servilely following the man who temporarily is his leader.

Mr. President, as I said, there is certainly a very grave misconception in the minds of a very many good, sincere, honest, and earnest people in the United States concerning the interest of Americans in Mexico—a very grave and serious misapprehension. The President apparently does not understand that what he has often referred to as "a concession," through which he seems to imagine that some American has obtained some advantage over the Mexican people by the use of graft or corrupt practices with some Mexican official—the President of the United States does not seem to have the slightest correct impression, at least as to what a Mexican concession is.

Mr. President, for this RECORD, I want to say to the Senators here, I am going to have printed, with their permission and consent, one railroad concession, one smelting concession, so called, one manufacturing concession, and possibly one or two other concessions, for the purpose of showing that there is no country under heaven to-day which has laws and practices such as are carried out in Mexico, that has undertaken, as has Mexico, to restrict and restrain capital for the benefit of the people of Mexico, and that the whole power of the Mexican Government itself might be retained upon every such investment of capital. There is not a concession, so called, held by an American citizen entitling him to do business under the federal laws in the Republic of Mexico in any line; not one concession or contract under which one American is doing business to-day in Mexico, nor has there been during the time of Porfirio Diaz, which is not an act of the Mexican Congress.

We hear of mining concessions. There is no such thing in Mexico as a mining concession. One acquires a mining claim under the law in Mexico exactly as the people in the western part of the United States acquire such claims. The miner proceeds to work that mining claim without asking the permission of any official or anyone whomsoever. Mining is a public business in Mexico; mining is declared by the Mexican law a public utility. It is under the restrictions and protection of the Federal Government. You need no mining concession to work a mine; you need no oil concession, and you get no oil concession in Mexico. You drill an oil well and sell the product from it. Yet we are told daily of the grafting concessions.

Why, sir, what is ordinarily meant by an "oil concession" is this: When the party owning an oil well desires to dispose of his product and to build a pipe line for that purpose he must secure the right of eminent domain, so that he may go over public property or over the property of his neighbor. He then applies for a contract enabling him to do so. Obtaining such contract, he must put up a bond with the Mexican Government as a part of his contract, and in return therefor the utmost concession which he gets is an exemption from import duties upon the material for the pipe line. He pays his taxes; he guarantees that he will expend a certain amount of money for the development of the country, enabling him to get oil to market. Mexico wants the oil; and, in consideration of it all, the Government gives him the right of eminent domain and an exemption from import duties into Mexico on his machinery. So much for your grafting oil concessions.

The same is true of other concessions. I hold here in my hand a railroad concession. I will not undertake to read it, but I am going to ask, after referring to one or two portions of it, that it may be printed in the RECORD. It is the general form used in Mexico, and similar terms are placed in every contract for the building of every railroad in Mexico. Why, these grafting Americans who go into Mexico and open up the country and ask for the privilege of building a railroad must, in the first place, before they are allowed to file their articles of incorporation, declare the exact amount of their capital stock which will be applied to the business of that road in Mexico. Before they are allowed to issue a bond they must have the permission of the Mexican department of communications, corresponding to our Interstate Commerce Commission. The amount of bonds which they may issue is limited by that commission. Every railroad built becomes the property of the Mexican Government in 99 years, with all of its rolling stock, all of its stations, all of its sidetracks, and all of its properties, of whatsoever kind, free of bonded indebtedness. These are a few of the facts.

As a preliminary to every such railroad concession, it is necessary to make an application for it before the department of communications and public works. The contract is entered into between the secretary of that department and the party seeking the so-called concession. That contract must be submitted to and approved by the National Congress of Mexico, passed upon in open session through both branches, certified by the officers of the Congress to the President of the Republic, who in turn certifies it to the secretary before it becomes lawful. In every contract, in every railroad concession, under which every American or any other foreign road or domestic road is constructed in Mexico, the maximum rates which may be charged for passenger traffic and the maximum freight rates are fixed absolutely once and for all in the contract. They can not be varied by the other party; but every three months he submits his tariff sheet to the department, and the department may reduce the figures to the figures which to it seem proper. We have no such law in the United States. In this concession, to which I refer, which is the ordinary and usual form, article 9 provides:

As a maximum for the transportation of passengers and merchandise the company shall charge the following rates:

PASSENGERS.

For the transportation of each passenger for kilometer run—
First class: Six cents Mexican money, 3 cents American money.
Second class: Four cents Mexican money, 2 cents American money.

These are the maximum passenger rates allowed to this company, which has lost during this revolution 547 bridges. You can imagine what that road cost to build—from $75,000 to $100,000 per mile with not one dollar of subvention or of subsidy or of assistance given by the Mexican Government, but only the right to import the steel necessary for the laying of its tracks for five years free of duty. There is no exemption from taxation, no special privileges of any kind or character, and the rates are limited to 3 cents a mile, American money, first class, and 2 cents a mile, American money, second class.

The charges for telegrams are fixed in the contract itself, and those charges constitute the maximum, subject to revision by the Mexican department without appeal. There are also regulations as to the storage of goods; in fact, every possible precaution is taken, and, as I have said, the amount of bonds which may be issued is limited, the amount of stock which may be applicable to its use is limited; and I say to you, sir, without fear of contradiction, that there is no State in the United States which in its railroad laws throws such protection around the interests of the citizens of that State as does the Mexican railroad law, and contracts around the citizens of the states in the Republic of Mexico. The same thing, sir, I may say is true of the other concessions.

Here, Mr. President, as a portion of my remarks at this time, I ask that there may be printed the following contract for a concession.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

No. V. A contract entered into under the railroad law of the 29th of April, 1899, between Mr. Leandro Fernandez, Secretary of State, and of the Department of Communications and Public Works, in representation of the executive of the union, and in representation of the Sierra Madre and Pacific Railroad Co.; to subdivide into two separate contracts the concession contract that embraces several lines of railroad in the States of Sonora and Chihuahua, dated the 28th of March, 1904, together with its additions and amendments of the 13th of May, 1905, 23d of October, 1906, and the 12th of May, 1908; the first contract of which is as follows:

ARTICLE I. The Sierra Madre and Pacific Railroad Co. is authorized, on its own account or on the account of the company or companies that it may organize for the purpose, to construct and exploit for a term of 99 years, in accordance with the provisions of the railroad law of the 29th of April, 1899, the following lines of railroad in the states of Sonora and Chihuahua:

I. A line that shall commence at the station of Del Rio, on the Naco-Cananea Railroad, or a near-by point, and shall terminate on a point at a distance of 20 or 30 kilometers from the boundary line with the United States, and situated on the boundary line between the states of Sonora and Chihuahua.

II. A line that shall commence at the termination of the first and shall unite with the Rio Grande Sierra Madre and Pacific, at a suitable point, under the approval of the Department of Communications and Public Works.

III. A line which shall be a continuation of the former, to its union with the Mexican Central Railroad, at a point which shall also be agreed upon.

IV. A line that shall unite the Naco & Cananea Railroad with the Sonora Railroad.

ART. II. Within six months the concessionaire company shall commence its surveys of the lines herein granted to it, giving the department of communications and public works 15 days' previous notice of the time and place when and where the surveys are to commence.

ART. III. The concessionaire company shall complete the construction of at least 100 kilometers by the 25th of November, 1910, and another 30 kilometers, at least, in each one of the following years, but so that all the lines shall be completed by the 25th of November, 1920.

ART. IV. The gauge of the road between the interior flanges of the rails shall be 1 meter 435 millimeters, or 914 millimeters, at the option of the company, upon the presentation of its maps.

The weight of the rails for the gauge of 1 meter and 435 millimeters shall be of 30 kilograms for each linear meter and 22 kilograms for each linear meter if the gauge should be 914 millimeters. The curves and the radii, as well as the grades, shall be determined in due time by the department of communications and public works, in conformity with the technical rulings of the railroad law.

The road shall be operated by steam.

ART. V. The company shall contribute every month hereafter, commencing on the 1st of this month, and for the whole term of the concession, the sum of 230 pesos for the railroad-inspection fund.

In the event that the company makes use of the authorization granted to it to construct the line from a point on line No. 5 to Agiabampo, the department of communications shall determine the sum to be contributed for the said fund.

ART. VI. The company shall have its principal domicile at Cananea, Sonora.

ART. VII. The period for the free importation of the materials and supplies which are embraced by article 74 of the railroad law shall be of five years' duration, reckoned from the 7th of April, 1904.

ART. VIII. The right of way, referred to by rule 1, article 74, of the said railroad law, shall be the indispensable width for the construction of the road and its railroad properties, without exceeding 70 meters.

ART. IX. As a maximum for the transportation of passengers and merchandise, the company shall charge the following rates:

PASSENGERS.

For the transportation of each passenger for kilometer run:

	Cents.
First class	6
Second class	4

Every passenger shall be allowed the free transportation of his baggage in the following proportion:

	Kilograms.
First class	50
Second class	15

The company shall be under no obligation to receive less than 20 cents for each passenger, whatever be the distance traveled by him.

MERCHANDISE.

The freight on each ton of 1,000 kilograms per kilometer traveled:

First class	0.1260
Second class	.1127
Third class	.1054
Fourth class	.0981
Fifth class	.0909
Sixth class	.0836
Seventh class	.0736
Eighth class	.0690
Ninth class	.0618
Tenth class	.0545
Eleventh class	.0472
Twelfth class	.0400

The company shall not be bound to receive any amount less than 50 cents for any quantity of freight, whatever be the distance over which it may have to be transported.

Excess of baggage and express shall pay 15 cents per ton and per kilometer.

In no case shall foreign goods imported over the company's line enjoy better rates than similar Mexican goods.

For the transportation of coal the company shall charge 3 cents per ton and per kilometer.

All national products transported over a distance greater than 150 kilometers and destined for exportation shall enjoy a reduction of 50 per cent in the rates fixed by this contract, provided evidence of the exportation thereof is properly shown.

TELEGRAMS.

The charges for telegrams transmitted over the company's line by passengers, shippers, or consignees of freight on matters connected with the railroad service shall not exceed the following:

For each message containing up to 10 words, over and above the date, address, and signature, transmitted by the company's line over a distance of 100 kilometers, 15 cents.

For each additional word contained in the message over the first 10 words the proportional part of 15 cents as charged for 10 words shall be paid at the most.

STORAGE.

Whenever the owners or consignees of goods have not appeared to remove them from the warehouses within 48 hours, after receiving notice of their arrival they shall pay 1 cent per day for the first 15 days for indivisible fractions of 100 kilograms and 2 cents for every day that may elapse after the first 15. Precious metals and articles of value shall pay double the above rates for each 200 pesos in value or per fraction of 200 pesos. The company shall also be allowed to charge whatever may be necessary to cover the expenses of receiving and delivering freight at the warehouses.

ART. X. For the transit of trains of other railroads over its tracks the company shall charge 60 per cent of its regular tariff rates on the goods and passengers so transported.

ART. XI. With regard to the effects produced by a forfeiture as provided by article 46 of the said railroad law, the four lines mentioned in article 1 of this contract are considered as different sections.

It is agreed that in the event the forfeiture of any of the said lines should be declared the company shall forfeit part of the deposit of 61,735 pesos, which is mentioned in article 13, in the following proportion:

First section (line 1)	$14,800
Second section (line 2)	22,500
Third section (line 3)	12,885
Fourth section (line 4)	11,550
Total	61,735

ART. XII. In accordance with the provisions of article 29 of the said railroad law no other contract shall be entered into during a term of 10 years, reckoned from the 7th of April, 1904, to build, either in whole or in part, parallel lines to those granted by this concession within a zone of 30 kilometers on each side of the railroad.

ART. XIII. The deposit of $61,735 in bonds of the consolidated public debt made by the company in the general federal treasury guarantees the performance of the obligations that the concessionaire assumes under this contract.

ART. XIV. This contract substitutes and stands in the place of the concession contracts of the 28th of March, 1904, the one of the 13th of May, 1905, together with their amendments of the 23d of October, 1906, and of the 12th of May, 1908, in all that the said contracts may contain applicable to the construction and exploitation of the four lines mentioned in article 1 of this contract.

LEANDRO FERNANDEZ.
TOMÁS MACMANUS.

It is a copy.

GILBERTO MONTIEL, Subsecretary.

MEXICO, June 1, 1908.

Mr. FALL. This contract was afterwards approved by the Mexican Congress, and is one of the contracts under which a large British, Canadian, and American corporation is seeking to operate a railroad in Mexico.

I hold in my hand, Mr. President, a State agreement for the erection of a sawmill, paper mill, and furniture factory. The same precaution is thrown around it to guard the interests of the people of Mexico in this contract as in the railroad contract, the same provision practically as to forfeiture unless the law is strictly complied with, and every agreement contained in it is strictly complied with. No more special privileges are granted, nothing like the special privileges granted by many of the municipalities of this country to Americans for building street railroads or waterworks or electric-light plants. I ask at this point that this form of concession granted by the governor of the State of Chihuahua be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Enrique C. Creel, provisional and constitutional governor of the free and sovereign State of Chihuahua, to its inhabitants, know—

That in execution of the power which the law concedes of June 27, 1896, conceded to me, I have decided to grant to the ——— Company the concession which said corporation solicited in order to establish various industries in the districts of Galeana and Guerrero, on the base of the following stipulations:

ARTICLE I. The ——— Company shall establish in the districts of Galeana and Guerrero, in the State of Chihuahua, the following-named industries:

1. Sawmills: Machinery, with all the necessary appurtenances to saw lumber, together with officers which are necessary for the carrying on of this industry.

2. Paper mill: A factory to produce paper of all kinds.

3. Furniture: A factory for furniture and all kinds of wooden articles.

ART. II. The ——— Company shall begin with the installation of the industries to which the foregoing article refers within 12 months, and obligates itself to have installed each one of them in the course of two years successively, or, in other words, within a period of six years.

ART. III. The ——— Company obligates itself to invest in the installation of the above-mentioned industries and in the carrying on and working of the same a capital of not less than $200,000, which fact shall be proved to the satisfaction of the executive.

ART. IV. The company shall be exempt for the term of 10 years, counted from the time in which each one of said industries be established, from any kind of tax or contribution to the State or municipality on the capital invested in the installation or the carrying on of such industries.

This exemption comprises the products as well as the taxes on the bonds of the company.

ART. V. Within the term of two years at least one of the industries to which Article I refers must be established, in which a capital of not less than $50,000 shall be employed.

ART. VI. The tracts of land situated in the districts of Galeana and Guerrero, which the company has acquired, shall be exempt from the payment of contributions to the State or municipality for a period of 10 years counted from the date on which the paper factory shall be in operation, with the stipulation that said factory commences to operate at the latest within 3 years from the date of his concession.

ART. VII. The enterprise may esablish a commissary to cater exclusively to its employees and laborers and said store shall also be exempt from all taxes of State or municipality for the term of 10 years, with the exception of the taxes on liquors and intoxicating drinks.

ART. VIII. The company, its partners, shareholders, employees, and workmen must consider themselves Mexicans, even though all or some of their number be foreigners, and shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of the State and of the Republic, without being allowed to claim at any time, in regard to matters connected with this concession, any privilege of being foreigners, under any form whatever; and they shall only have such rights, and the means to support them, as the laws of the Republic concede to the Mexicans, so that in consequence in said matters the foreign diplomatic agent shall not be able to interfere in any way.

ART. IX. The fulfilling of this contract is guaranteed by the corporation by a deposit of $3,000 in cash or bonds of the State, made in the general treasury, within 60 days from the date of this contract.

ART. X. The present concession shall become void for one of the following reasons:

1. Failure to make deposit: For not making the deposit to which the foregoing article refers.

2. Failure to commence work: For not commencing work within the limits specified by article No. 2.

3. Failure to establish industries within time limit: For not establishing any of the industries to which article No. 1 refers within the limit of two years.

4. Noncompliance with article 21 Ley de Hacienda: For any other stipulation which article No. 21 of the Ley de Hacienda of the State decrees.

Given in the palace of the executive in Chihuahua, on the 13th day of December, 1904.

E. CREEL,
I. CORTAZAR, Secretary.

(Copy from translation.)

Mr. FALL. Following this, Mr. President, I have here a contract between Gen. Manuel Gonzales Cosio, secretary of state, and the department of fomento colonization and industries, representing the federal executive, and Mr. Tomas Macmanus, jr., in representation of blank, for the establishment of a smelting plant at some point on the district of Guerrero, State of Chihuahua.

I shall not undertake to call attention in my limited time to the different matters contained in this concession, but I want to say that the rights of the Mexican people and of the Republic are protected as they are not protected in any State in this Union of which I have any knowledge—practically, reasonably, sensibly, and yet strictly and firmly protected. Not only that, but they compel the concessionaire company to agree that in its assay office and in its smelting plant it shall receive and support six students from the engineering school of Mexico at its own expense. The same thing is true of every concession of like character granted under the Diaz administration in Mexico.

I offer this contract for concession and ask that it may be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Contract entered into between Gen. Manuel Gonzalez Cosio, secretary of state, and the department of fomento colonization and industries, representing the Federal executive, and Mr. Tomas Macmanus, jr., in representation of ——— ——— for the establishment of a smelting plant at some point in the district of Guerrero, State of Chihuahua.

ARTICLE I. ——— ——— is hereby authorized to construct and exploit in the district of Guerrero, State of Chihuahua, and within the time given in article 7, a smelting plant for the treatment of all kinds of metals or minerals that may contain gold, silver, platinum, iron, copper, lead, zinc, tin, antimony, nickel, cobalt, manganese, bismuth, and arsenic, and the said ——— ——— shall enjoy the rights and submit to the obligations established in the present contract.

ART. II. The smelter shall have the minimum capacity to treat 200 metric tons of mineral rock per day.

ART. III. During the term of this contract neither the capitals used in the construction of the smelting plant or in the acquisition of lands for the buildings which may be raised or in the works destined to said exploitation, nor the shares of stock or bonds which ——— ——— may issue, shall be subject to any Federal tax, with the understanding that the tax paid in the shape of stamps or the "stamp tax" is not included in these exemptions.

ART. IV. Shall have the right to export the products of the smelting plant, submitting to the rulings actually in force relative to the stamp tax, smelting, assaying, and coinage dues, and shall enjoy the franchises to which article 9 of the law of March 27, 1897, refers, but with the understanding that the exemption from dues shall be on three one-thousandths of the silver in the lead bullions and on ten one-thousandths in the copper bullions that the smelter may produce, having to pay entire said dues for the over-remaining contents of this metal and without enjoying any exemption for the gold.

ART. V. Shall also have the right to import free of duty, for once only, the machinery, apparatus of all kinds, materials, and accessories which may be necessary for the construction of the smelter subject matter of this contract, having for the purpose to present to the department of fomento detailed lists of the effects that he may have to import when he may need them, provided this be done within the time stipulated in the present contract for the construction works, specifying in said lists the number, quantity, and quality of the effects and observing for their importation the prescriptions of circular letter No. 106 of June 25, 1900, of the department of finance and whatever limitations the department of fomento may make.

The effects that may be needed shall be imported by Mr. Greene to be employed exclusively in the construction of the smelter; but should he sell or apply to other uses any of these articles or effects the department of finance shall exact the payment of the respective duties, without this payment exempting him from the penalties which the laws establish for smuggling.

ART. VI. All the concessions and franchises of this contract contained in the preceding articles shall cease to exist the 17th day of December, 1906.

OBLIGATIONS OF THE CONCESSIONARY.

ART. VII. Shall begin the construction works for the smelting plant within six months, to be reckoned from the date of the promulgation of this contract, and said works shall be terminated, at the latest, within two years from the same date, with the definite obligation of fixing in that time the locality for the erection of the smelter to which Article I refers.

ART. VIII. Is obliged to invest, within the term of this concession, in the construction of the smelting plant, subject matter of this contract, and in the works that same may require, as the building of offices, railways, transportation material, implements, accessories, and machinery, the sum of $200,000 Mexican currency.

Shall justify this investment before the department of fomento by presenting the pay rolls, bills of lading, books of accounts, etc., whether original or in certified copies, or else by whatever means the department of fomento may indicate.

ART. IX. As soon as the smelting plant is terminated, obligates himself to smelt daily 100 tons of mineral, and in order to prove that he is complying with this obligation he shall send annually to the department of fomento a statement sufficiently attested to, in the opinion of the said department of the number of tons of mineral rock that may be smelted in the plant.

ART. X. Is obliged to send to the department of fomento at the end of each fiscal year whatever information and statistical and economic data it may ask for and need, for the better study of the mining industry of the country.

ART. XI. Is also obliged to admit within his smelting plant the students of the National School of Engineers who may have to make their practice there, giving them all the necessary data for their use and advancement.

ART. XII. Shall appoint as attorney, domiciled in this capital, at the latest three months after the publication of this contract, sufficiently authorized to treat with the department of fomento in all matters relating to the present contract.

ART. XIII. Can not transfer in whole or in part the franchises granted him in this concession to another person or company without the previous permission and approbation of the department of fomento, and under no consideration can he do it to a foreign Government or its agent nor allow them as associates.

ART. XIV. As guaranty for the fulfillment of the obligations hereby contracted, within the month following the publication of this contract, shall deposit in the National Bank of Mexico the sum of $5,000 in recognized bonds of the public debt, which he shall lose in the case of noncompliance with the dispositions of Article VII of this contract, and which shall be returned to him upon the termination of the construction of the smelter.

During the time in which the bonds shall be in deposit, and there not being any reason for declaring the forfeiture of the contract, shall receive the interest coupons of the bonds, according as they become due, upon orders to this effect from the department of fomento.

GENERAL CLAUSES.

ART. XV. This contract shall have no force or effect for not constituting the deposit within the time and in the manner mentioned in the foregoing article and shall forfeit for any of the following causes:

I. For not fixing the locality for the erection of the smelting plant nor beginning the construction works of same within the time given in Article VII.

II. For not terminating the construction of the smelting plant in the time fixed in the same Article VII.

III. For not proving in the manner indicated in Article VIII the investment of capital therein mentioned.

IV. For suspending the treatment of ores (or smelting processes) during four consecutive months or else for smelting within that time less than 30 tons of mineral rock per day as an average.

V. For transferring this contract or any of its concessions to a private individual or company without the permission and approbation of the Government.

VI. For transferring this contract or any of its concessions to any foreign Government or agent of same or for admitting them as associates.

In any of the cases specified shall lose the deposit, which according to Article XIV he must constitute.

In the I, II, III, IV, and V instances he shall lose, besides, the concessions and franchises granted him herein.

If the forfeiture is declared for the reason given in Fraction VI, ——— shall incur the loss of all the rights, goods, and properties of all kinds relating to this contract, all these becoming the property of the nation without her having to pay any indemnity.

In every case, and before making the corresponding declaration of forfeiture, the department of fomento shall grant ——— a prudent length of time within which to present his defense.

ART. XVI. It is an understood condition of this contract that the said declaration of forfeiture, for whatever cause it may be made, shall be made administratively by the department of fomento.

ART. XVII. ——— and whoever may succeed him in his rights, as well as the employees, shareholders, and other persons who may have a common interest with him, shall always be considered as Mexicans in all matters relating to the present contract, and consequently shall be subject conclusively to the jurisdiction of the courts of the Republic in all the business and matters the cause and action of which shall take place within its territory.

Foreigners and their successors who may take part with ———, in whatever character, shall never be allowed to plea regarding matters relating to this concession, rights of foreigners, in whatever form this might be done, and shall only have the rights and the means of making them effective that the laws of the Republic grant to Mexicans without therefore any diplomatic foreign agents having any right of interference.

ART. XVIII. The time terms fixed in this contract shall be suspended in all fortuitous cases or case of force majeure, same time terms being prorogued for all the length of time the impediment may last and two months more.

In any of said cases ——— shall present to the Federal Executive the statements and proofs of there having occurred a fortuitous case or case of force majeure of the character mentioned within the term of three months from the beginning of the impediment. For the mere fact of not presenting said statements and proofs within the allotted time ——— shall be barred from alleging in any case the circumstances of a fortuitous or force majeure case.

ART. XIX. All the concessions made in the present contract shall be understood to be given without prejudice to the other rights which the concessionaire or the companies which may succeed him may have according to the laws without the need of special concessions.

ART. XX. This contract shall be submitted to the approval of Congress before it can have any effect.

ART. XXI. The stamps for this contract shall be furnished by the concessionaire, and it shall be issued in duplicate, one for each contracting party.

Made in the City of Mexico the 3d day of December, 1904.

MANUEL GONSALEZ COSIO.
TOMAS MACMANUS, JR.

Mr. FALL. Following this contract I have another from the State of Chihuahua. The different States in the Federal Republic, under the Constitution of the Republic, have the right, of course, to grant railroad concessions or contracts within the State boundaries for purely State roads. The contract which I have here is for the construction of smelting plants, reduction plants, building of wagon roads, building of State roads, telephone lines, telegraph lines, and for like purposes. The rates to be charged for hauling freights by the railroad are limited and provided for in the concession. The uses of the railroad are provided for in the concession. The uses of the smelter and of the works of the company are provided for in the concession. Nothing is left to chance. Nothing is left to construction. The rights of the people of the State of Chihuahua are guaranteed more absolutely than under the laws of any State of the Union of which I have any knowledge.

I want to say, sir, that under this concession the company constructed a wagon road 105 miles in length that cost $350,000, down into the deepest canyons and up over the highest mountains in the Sierra Madre Range. Through the use of that road, constructed by one of these "grafting" American companies at its own cost and expense, Gen. Pershing's forces were enabled to penetrate into the fastnesses of the Sierra Madre Mountains.

Mr. President, I ask permission at this point that the contract to which I have referred may be printed as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Contract entered into between Jose Maria Sanchez, constitutional governor ad interim of the free and sovereign State of Chihuahua, for the one part, and the ——— ———, for the other part, for the establishment of various industries in the State, under the following bases:

First, ——— ——— is authorized by the present contract to establish, for its own account, or for the account of the company or companies which it organizes, the following industries:

A. In such places as may be selected in the State, and particularly in the districts of Bravos, Guerrero, Rayon, and Galeana, reduction works (mills or smelters), each with a capacity of treating at least 50 tons per day.

B. Within the State, and particularly within the same districts, miscellaneous stores for the selling of every kind of merchandise to the employees, workmen, and laborers employed by the company, without including the sale of intoxicating liquors.

C. The exploitation of mines in some districts of the State, and especially in the said States of Bravos, Guerrero, Rayon, and Galeana.

D. One or more railroads within the territory of the State for the transportation of ores from the mines exploited by the company, for its account, to the mills or smelters which may be established by virtue of this concession. The railroad lines shall have the width determined by the railroad regulations of the Federal Government at the election of said company.

E. The telegraph and telephone lines which said company may need for the objects of the same.

F. One or more hydraulic plants for developing motive power and transmission of electric force, using for such purpose the water of the Aros River, in accordance with the concession granted by the Federal Government, and such other streams as may be available under concession from the Federal or State Governments, as the case may be.

G. The opening of wagon roads which may be necessary to facilitate the exploitation of the mines the company or companies may own or lease, from the railroads which may be constructed, or from the railroads or wagon roads already existing, to the mining camps of the said company in the said districts of Bravos, Rayon, Guerrero, and Galeana, or in other districts of the State.

Second. The capital which is invested in the construction and establishment of the reduction works, in railroads, telegraph and telephone lines, buildings, stores, and other works necessary for the industries to which this concession refers, as also the lands upon which they are constructed; the articles of incorporation, bonds, and shares which the company may issue, shall be exempt from all State or municipal taxation for a period of 20 years.

Third. During the same period of 20 years the minerals extracted from the mines and treated in the reduction works owned by the company shall be subject to the payment of mining taxes imposed by existing State laws, or that may hereafter be imposed.

Fourth. The ores treated in the reduction works herein referred to from mines in the State that do not belong to the concessionary company or companies shall pay at the rate of 1 per cent on their value, according to assay.

Fifth. During the same period of 20 years the employees of the company working for the same for salary are exempted from the payment of personal taxes to the State. This exemption does not include personal municipal taxes which must be paid.

Sixth. In case the company should require lands and water of private property for the installation of its reduction works and accessories, pertaining to their exploitation or that of the mines, as also for electrical installations, railways, telegraph, and telephone lines, the company shall be at liberty to obtain them from their owners; and in case it should not be possible to arrange with them on a fair basis, it may ask for the expropriation of the same under the relative laws in force.

Seventh. The work of construction of the reduction works shall be commenced within a period of six months, and be completed within two years following; and the other industries, as soon as may be convenient to the interests of the company, but within a term not to exceed six years.

Eighth. The company obligates itself to admit five pupils from the State schools, who will be sent to it by the direction of the Government, for the purpose of practical instruction in the mines and shops of the concern, as also in its reduction works.

Ninth. The company likewise obligates itself to permit the transportation, over the railways and wagon roads it may construct, of the employees, school supplies, and other effects pertaining to the public service, as also the transmission of telegraphic and telephone messages, relation to public service, without payment on the part of the State. All such services shall be ordered by the governor of the State.

Tenth. The railroad or railroads which may be constructed shall be dedicated to the transportation of the ores from the mines of the company to its reduction works, but they may be placed at the service of the public, as also the telegraph and telephone lines, after the approval by the executive of the respective tariffs of freight, passenger, and message charges.

Eleventh. The railroad, telegraph, and telephone lines the company may establish under this concession shall be subject, in so far as relates to their establishment and exploitation, to all the laws, regulations, and provisions on the subject of railroads, telegraphs, and telephones of the federation, until those of the State shall be issued.

Twelfth. The railway, telegraph, and telephone lines the company may construct under this concession shall be such as the laws of the Republic consider as of the jurisdiction of the State, and if it treated of those which should be reputed as general lines of communication, the company must obtain the respective concessions from the General Government.

Thirteenth. The wagon road being a public utility, municipal lands may be occupied for their construction, in a zone of 10 meters in width, and regarding right of way over lands of private ownership, which may not be gratuitously granted, it shall be left in charge of the State government to make the necessary arrangements, and in case it is indispensable, it shall proceed to the expropriation by reason of public utility.

Fourteenth. The company guarantees compliance with the obligations imposed upon it by this concession by a deposit of $5,000, which shall be paid into the general treasury of the State within 60 days after the publication of this concession.

Fifteenth. This concession can not be transferred to other person or company, without the prior approval of the executive of the State.

Sixteenth. The company, for all the effects of this concession, shall be considered as Mexican, even though all or some of its members be foreigners, and it or they shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the tribunals of the State and of the Republic, without right to plead rights of foreigners at any time, and shall only have the rights and means of enforcing them which the laws of the Republic grant to Mexicans, and therefore foreign diplomatic agents can have no right to intervene in such matters relating to this contract.

Seventeenth. For the construction of the railways to which section "d" of the first clause refers, the company will present previously to the executive for approbation, the corresponding blue print (drawings) in compliance with the provisions of article 29, division 3 of the stamp-tariff law in force.

Eighteenth. With the construction of said railroads, it is understood that the prohibited zone will not be invaded, which has already obtained concessions granted by the executive for the construction and exploitation of various railways, etc., within the territory of the State.

Nineteenth. This concession will cease:

1. For not commencing the work for the establishment of the reduction works at any of the mines belonging to the company, and to install same within the terms set out in the seventh clause.

2. For not constituting the deposit of $5,000, to which clause 14 refers, within the period of time specified.

3. For not completely installing within the period of two years, at one of the reduction works, as expressed in said clause 7.

4. For not proving within the term of six years the investment of $1,000,000 in the construction and exploitation of the industries expressed in this contract.

5. For violation of the provisions of clause 15, or for the transfer of this concession, in whole or in part, to any foreign Government or agent of the same.

Twentieth. The forfeiture of this concession in any of the cases stated in the preceding article will be declared administratively by the executive of the State.

Twenty-first. The periods of time fixed in this concession will be counted from the date on which the same is approved by the honorable legislature of the State, but the time limits will be stopped in cases of fortuity or superior force, which the company shall prove to the government of the State, and the same periods of time shall be extended for all the time such impediments may last and two months more.

Twenty-second. The company shall be under obligation to furnish the government of the State, when it calls for it, the economic and statistical data it may indicate in reference to its business, but in such data the company shall not be required to give the chemical formulæ or secrets which it uses in the exploitation of its industries.

Twenty-third. All stamps required for the present concession shall be paid for by the company.

Twenty-fourth. This contract shall be submitted to the approval of the honorable congress of the State.

Done in the city of Chihuahua, on the 6th day of the month of April, 1907.

(Blank.)

(Signed) JOSÉ MARIA SANCHEZ,
[THEIR SEALS.] ED. DELHUMEAU,
Secretary.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I think matters of this kind are of sufficient importance to justify almost any legitimate expenditure in informing the people of the United States. The people want information. The Mexican question is one of the issues in this campaign; and, despite the President's letter of acceptance, he can not evade it. The people are entitled to correct information as to the facts. I tell you, sir, that I stand here to resent the charges which have been made repeatedly that Americans in Mexico have sought to stir up trouble.

[At this point Mr. FALL yielded for the presentation and consideration of a conference report.]

Mr. FALL. As I was saying, I resent very seriously the charges which I have heard made here and elsewhere that American interests have sought to foment trouble, disturbance, bloodshed, and revolution in the Republic of Mexico.

On the second of June, while addressing the Senate upon the question of the recognition of Carranza, I was asked by one of the Senators what, in my opinion, was the actuating motive behind the recognition of Carranza, in view of the statements, substantiated by documents, which I made at that time. I did not answer that question fully. I am now prepared to throw further light upon it.

I have in my hand a copy of the American Federationist of July, 1916, containing an editorial by Mr. Samuel Gompers. I ask at this time that there may be printed, as a portion of my remarks, from the top of page 575 to the second paragraph of page 577 of this document. I only call the attention of the Senate specifically to one statement, among various others, made there by Mr. Gompers:

> The workers and the revolutionary forces in Mexico, as did Madero, knew the efforts which the American Federation of Labor put forth in the overthrow of the tyrant Diaz, so that when the Madero government was established in power there went into Mexico a committee representing the United Mine Workers of America.

I ask that the pages referred to may be printed as a portion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

LIBERTY'S HOPE IS IN THY KEEPING, ORGANIZED LABOR.

There is being enacted just across our border line in a neighbor Republic a tremendous struggle for human freedom, a struggle inspired by ideals of those who long dreamed of human freedom and have come to value it lightly because they have been denied the reality. America's workers have an interest in the affairs of Mexico—an interest that is concerned with something bigger than political changes, for political changes do not always indicate progress toward justice.

Because this struggle in Mexico represents a cause that is as big and as wide and as comprehensive as the cause of human freedom it has a very strong appeal for the workers of the United States whose every advance and betterment has been part of a world-old struggle for freedom and humanity.

The changes now in progress of making in Mexico are deeper and more significant than a mere political revolution; they are an economic revolution. The fundamental problem of injustice in Mexico is economic in origin. Those who know and understand the force of the industrial ties that unite Mexico and the United States know that there is no boundary line between the industrial problems of the workers of the two countries. This is true not only because of the overlapping of the interests of the employers of the two countries but because of the intermingling and the blending of the workers of the two countries.

It is conservatively estimated that there are within the United States 2,000,000 Mexican workers. There are Mexican laborers in Texas, Mexican coal miners in Colorado and New Mexico, and Mexican gold miners in New Mexico and Colorado. There are Mexican trade unionists in the building trades of the Pacific coast.

All the world knows the bravery, the loyalty, and determination of the Mexican miners who helped to win the recent strike in Clifton, Ariz. It is not so well known that previous to the termination of the former agreement between the anthracite miners and coal operators of Pennsylvania there was an effort made to bring Mexicans into our country to defeat the demands of coal miners, hoping thereby to reduce standards and defeat the plans of the anthracite miners. The Deering Harvester Co. recently brought in Mexicans to be used as strike breakers against their men, who were then making demands for higher wages and better conditions of work.

There must be understanding and cooperation between the workers of Mexico and the United States in order that neither may permit themselves to be used for the undoing of all. Many of the Mexican workers who are now within our border lines have already united in the cause of organized labor. Since the present effort to overthrow despotism in Mexico has been in progress there has been a determined effort in that country to organize the workers for their mutual protection and to secure for them rights and opportunities that will result in freedom.

The workers and the revolutionary forces in Mexico, as did Madero, knew the efforts which the American Federation of Labor put forth in the overthrow of the tyrant Diaz, so that when the Madero government was established in power there went into Mexico a committee representing the United Mine Workers of America. This committee secured from Madero indorsement of the organized labor movement and promise of protection and cooperation in efforts to organize the miners of Mexico. The Madero era marked a new period in the labor movement of Mexico. What was declared under Madero has been carried out and on a broader scale under the present Constitutionalist government.

The workers are not overconcerned with political factions or wedded to any political leader, but they are concerned with securing cooperation that will enable them to advance the cause of freedom and humanity.

When Carranza became first chief of the Constitutionalist government of Mexico he entered into agreements with the organized-labor movement of the country and promised that trade unions would be protected under the laws of Mexico and that workers would be assured opportunities and rights. In return for these pledges, which were officially announced by the Government in the form of manifestos and circulated generally throughout the country, the organized-labor movement of Mexico gave its support to the Constitutionalist government and united with that government in an effort to solve the problems of the citizens of Mexico and to work out government and laws that would establish industrial, social, and political justice.

Because the workers of Mexico through their organized-labor movement appealed to the organized-labor movement of the United States we tried to secure to them the opportunity to work out their own problems in accord with their own ideals and their own understanding.

With the political issues and political factions of Mexico the American labor movement has no vital concern, but it has a deep-abiding interest in the growth and progress of the cause of labor in Mexico, and it desires to do all that can be done in a spirit of fraternity and cooperation. The American labor movement recognizes that in the organization of the Mexican workers there lies an element of great hope, for there is a force that has power to shape a great future for a people capable of conceiving great ideas and an understanding of the possibilities which human life can attain when given opportunities and freedom.

The labor movement of Mexico has dared to assert that there is something infinitely higher than property rights and the mere forms of established law and order. They have proclaimed to the world that they wish to establish a government in which human rights shall be paramount and land and property shall be made to serve mankind.

But the labor movement of our country knows that freedom can not be given as a gift; it must be achieved by all as they work out their life problems—democracy and free institutions may be suddenly established, but their maintenance rests upon constant and persistent determination, for in Mexico, as in all the world, the price of liberty is eternal vigilance. They must be the result of the experiences of the people who have learned how to be free and how to use institutions of freedom. In learning these things those who have been long held in despotic government make many mistakes, but those of us who have had larger opportunities for freedom must have patience with the mistakes of those who are just learning. We know that the lesson can not be learned by interposing dictation from an outside judgment, either from a dictator among their own people or from superimposing the judgment of an outside country.

Because of the desire of America's workers to be helpful to fellow workers of Mexico, a suggestion was made to the organized-labor movement of Mexico to send representatives to meet with representatives of the American Federation of Labor in conference in El Paso, Tex., in the near future. This suggestion has met with most cordial and enthusiastic acceptance from the labor organizations of Mexico, and that the conference will be held there is no doubt. It is hoped that the outcome of this conference will bring tremendous impetus and inspiration to the cause of humanity both within Mexico and the United States. If such a conference can result in the betterment of humanity and imposing a check upon those forces that desire to exploit human beings for their own aggrandizement, there will be given to the world a note of inspiration that will be in a great measure somewhat in the nature of compensation for the miserable failure of our hopes and plans seen in the present European war.

And who knows but out of that meeting may come a larger conference in which there shall be represented the workers' organization of all the countries making up this great America of ours, a Pan American Federation of Labor, that shall make not only this great power for internal and international right, justice, and welfare, but shall help in the establishment of a broad international labor movement of the whole world, and that the international parliament of man for which philosophers have dreamed and poets have sung, and which it is the mission of the workers to establish, shall be realized.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, in the August (1916) issue of the American Federationist, starting on the first page, there is an article by Mr. Samuel Gompers upon the condition in Mexico, setting forth at great length the efforts of Mr. Gompers, as the President of the American Federation of Labor, in the matter of the Mexican revolution, the recognition of Carranza, and so forth. I ask at this time that there may be printed in the RECORD this article by Mr. Gompers, from page 633 down to the second paragraph of page 646. I only call the attention of the Senate to the fact that Mr. Gompers states here that in 1908 the convention of the American Federation of Labor adopted a resolution of sympathy with the organizing power of the Mexican labor unions, a resolution of sympathy with Ricardo Flores Magon, Antonio Villareal, and others. This is contained on page 637 of this document.

Mr. President, Mr. Gompers calls attention in this article to the sympathy expressed in that resolution with the Magons, in which he holds out the Magon junta as patriots, and deprecates the fact that they were then being prosecuted for violation of the neutrality laws by the Taft administration.

I understand that the order was that the first article referred to be printed. I ask that the second be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES—MEXICO—LABOR—THEIR RELATIONS.

[By Samuel Gompers.]

The recent conference held in Washington between representatives of the Mexican labor movement and the executive council of the American Federation of Labor was the inevitable result of fundamental forces that have been drawing the workers of the two countries more closely together and making them realize that the problems of the Mexican worker were the problems of the worker of the United States.

The interests that the workers of the two countries have in common are basic—wages, hours of labor, and conditions of work. Our other interests touch because all are the outgrowth of economic needs and aspirations that grow out of them.

The economic interests of the workers follow the country's expansion industrially and commercially. The development of material civilization, and more extensive utilization of natural resources to the westward brought the workers of our country in contact with the workers of Mexico both within their country and in the Southwest.

The boundary line between Mexico and the United States is an artificial division and has no relation to industrial needs or commercial exchange. There are rich copper mines part in New Mexico, U. S. A., and part in Sonora, Mexico. They are one and the same, even though they are under political jurisdiction of the two countries. But what was a boundary between the copper mine operators of the Mexican and the American States? When confronted by demands for higher wages, shorter hours, and better conditions in New Mexico the mine operators called across the border line and Mexican miners came to take the places of the Americans. Internationalization of capital has made necessary the internationalization of the labor movement.

In Mexico law and governmental policy formerly forbade workers to organize, and thus deprived them of the only means by which they could fight their way to greater liberty. The right to free assemblage, free association, free speech, and free press were under the ban.

Distance was no barrier to the coal and gold mine operators of Colorado who wished to use unsuspecting Mexican miners in order to maintain their domination over the lives of the miners of Colorado.

Reports of better conditions in the United States came across the border line to the workers of Mexico. Into the border States came workers who had been denied by governmental authorities and Mexican employers an appreciation of their rights or the possibilities to which they ought to aspire. Conditions had stultified Mexican laborers. They were not fully conscious of the wrongs done to themselves or the injury that they did to American workers by undermining existing standards and conditions. The Mexican Government and laws were brutalizing.

But here and there came a glimmering and suggestion of common interest, a longing—an understanding that Mexican workers, too, might have the freedom that ought to obtain under a republican form of government. Not only did the Mexican Government exploit the workers but it despoiled the whole nation of its national birthright. The natural resources of the country, the land itself, were taken from the natives and citizens of Mexico and given over to foreign exploiters. The great money interests of the whole world gathered to prey upon helpless Mexico. Foreigners who had in some way secured the favor of the ruling power were given rich lands or mines. Even possessions were taken from the natives and only the tyrannical, corrupt Government received any compensation paid in exchange.

The trusts of our country fastened their tentacles upon Mexico. The Standard Oil Co. found its purposes opposed by the Pearson Oil Co., of England. The Hearsts and the Otises took possession of great tracts of country, so large that they were rich principalities. The copper barons extended their holdings in order to maintain their monopoly control. Wall Street was interested in "developing" the country.

When the revolution came against Diaz 75 per cent of the wealth and capital of Mexico was held by foreign owners. This meant that the masses of the nation had been exploited. They were united in the uprising against governmental despotism and the tyranny and inhumanity of the trusts, for the American trusts were even more unscrupulous and conscienceless in their Mexican policies than they have been in the United States. In the United States they have been held in check in some degree by the fact that the people have a better understanding of their rights and freer opportunities for action.

BEFORE THE REVOLUTION.

It is difficult to exaggerate the tyranny, the oppression, and the ruthlessness that prevailed in Mexico under the Diaz régime. United protests came in the revolution under Madero, which represented the yearnings of the people and their protests against injustice. It was a revolt of a united people who had been despoiled of their political rights as well as of their property and opportunities.

The Mexican people are made up of many bloods. They have most perplexing race problems, yet all were united in determination to overthrow the Diaz government.

Mexicans are dreamers, idealists of many kinds. Those who are students have come under the influence of the theories of Spain and Italy. Those whose opportunities have been less generous have dreams of other kinds. In this philosophy of life, beauty and artistic values are of great importance—of greater importance than quantity of production or intricate industrial organization. This philosophy would use products for the service of men, and life as something larger and more wonderful than a competitive struggle for large fortunes. This is the fundamental philosophy the Mexican people are struggling to establish—a purpose akin to the highest idealism of the French Revolution. The cosmopolitan nature of the people and the diversity of ideals made the constructive period that followed the revolution difficult and uncertain. There was no general plan; no common understanding. Idealists and leaders were attempting to take their followers along different plans. They united against a common enemy but could not agree upon constructive measures. Madero became the head of the Government. He was an idealist who had understanding and sympathy for the needs of the workers. Under him they had their first real opportunities for organization. He not only gave them the opportunity to organize and hold meetings, but gave them advantages and assistance in carrying out the work of organization. There had been some few efforts at organization among the tobacco workers who came in contact with organized fellow trades from Key West, Cuba, Porto Rico, maritime workers, and railway workers.

Out of the Mexican revolution there has come one tremendously important result that is fundamental and therefore will be permanent. It is the Mexican organized labor movement.

During the time of Diaz, to strike was a political offense. Labor "agitators" and those who were seeking better conditions for wage earners were treated as criminals. They were hounded within their own country and followed if they fled across the border line into the United States, and the governmental machinery of both countries was used to place behind prison bars those who tried to give efforts for the betterment of themselves and their fellow workers.

Individuals in the American labor movement who had encountered either Mexican fugitive labor organizers (so-called revolutionists) or who had been forced to see the danger to American workers through the masses of Mexican workers—who, because of their enforced low standards and their lack of information, were the agency by which American employers hoped to club their workers into submission—began to appreciate how closely the problems and welfare of the workers of the two countries were identified.

It was not the fault of the Mexican workers that they were pawns in the hands of employers. It was their lack of opportunity and information. That opportunity came as the result of years of agitation. Many a leader on both sides of the border had battled in vain against organized tyranny and oppression, but there was not an effort that was without influence. Out of it all there came the hope that freedom could be achieved.

Whatever progress has come is due in a great measure to those who dreamed and struggled and suffered and went to jail for freedom—many nameless in history now dead and forgotten, but living in the results of their work.

THE REVOLUTION.

In addition to this growing conviction among the Mexican wage earners other groups were driven into the work of revolution. Practically the whole nation had been despoiled of its birthright and of opportunities. The landholder and the capitalists had a stranglehold on the men and women of Mexico.

There are among Mexicans philosophers and students. There are those capable of understanding their rights and who know the spirit of freedom that obtained in other countries. They determined upon a revolutionary program that had a twofold purpose—the establishment of democratic institutions and the return of the land and opportunities to the masses of the people. Practically the whole nation anticipated advantages from a revolution.

This revolutionary movement found expression in the overthrow of Diaz and the establishment of Madero. The nation was united in the movement to overthrow despotism, but as it always happens, the revolutionary group divides up into factions of different ideals and purposes when the constructive work is attempted. The Mexican nation divided into groups supporting the leader whom they thought most likely and most capable of establishing their ideals.

Madero recognized that the welfare of Mexico depended upon the welfare of the working people, that any plans that would succeed must proceed upon the fundamental basis that the workers were afforded opportunities to struggle for and secure justice and freedom. The Mexican nation as a whole had somehow caught the vision that the essential principle of democracy must be followed and the people must work out their own regeneration.

For years the liberal elements in Mexico were generally united in the Liberal Party, which had for its chief purpose the reestablishment of the constitution of 1857. As that constitution provided rights and opportunities for the people, those who were seeking freedom in all lines were in sympathy with the effort to restore it. Because it had an appeal for the workingmen as well as for other groups of citizens, workingmen both in the United States and Mexico gave aid and indorsement to the leaders of the Liberal Party, who were termed revolutionists by the Mexican Government and persecuted as political offenders. Often these men escaped across the border line for refuge. The Mexican Government did not relinquish its persecution at the border line, but worked out methods whereby it pursued progressive Mexicans even in their political asylum in the United States. They endeavored to secure the extradition of fugitive Mexicans on criminal charges. The Mexican Government retained the services of detective agencies that were to seek out fugitives. When found, the fugitives were arrested, put into jail, where they were held until the charges were either dismissed as groundless or evidence could be manufactured. Just as soon as the prison doors opened for these victims they were rearrested upon other trumped-up charges and again confined. Kidnaping was not uncommon.

POSITION OF A. F. OF L.

The persecution of these men aroused the sympathy of the members of the organized labor movement. The Denver, 1908, convention of the A. F. of L. adopted the following resolution:

Whereas Ricardo Flores Magon, Antonio I. Villarreal, Librado Rivera, and other members of the Mexican Liberal Party were arrested in Los Angeles, Cal., August 23, 1907, at the instance of the Mexican Government, and have since been detained in prison, while extraordinary effort has been made to extradite them; and

Whereas the Mexican Government, as prosecutor, has succeeded in inducing the American authorities to hold them on varying criminal charges, ranking from petty larceny to that of murder; and

Whereas the several charges, in turn and of necessity, have been abandoned when fully refuted by legal testimony, and the one active charge remaining is that of endeavoring to invade Mexico with an armed force, all of which proves by court records that these men are not criminals in any sense—if offenders at all, political offenders only: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the A. F. of L. extends its earnest sympathy to the aforesaid Magon, Villarreal, Rivera, et al., and commends to all affiliated organizations the consideration of proper means for their defense.

In following up this matter, in pursuance of the instructions of this convention, the A. F. of L. assisted in the effort to get a congressional investigation of this persecution of political refugees from Mexico. In 1910 a committee of the House of Representatives inquired into this matter, and educed testimony from those who had been the victims of this persecution and others who had come into contact with the conditions.

The president of the A. F. of L., in a letter to the President of the United States, called his attention to the charges that were being made that men in the employ of the United States Government were using the agencies of justice of this country to assist in the political persecution of members of the Liberal Party of Mexico. It was the insistence and the love of liberty and justice among the workers of the United States that disclosed and denounced the practices which made the agencies of justice of this country subservient tools of the Mexican Government and forced the administrations under President Roosevelt and President Taft to refuse longer to allow the United States Government to be Mexican man hunters. The Rochester, 1912, convention of the A. F. of L. adopted the following resolution:

Whereas there now is and has been a struggle going on in Mexico to abolish the present conditions of peonage and of land tenure; and

Whereas there is a considerable agitation in some quarters to influence the United States Government to intervene between contending factions in the said country: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we are utterly opposed to any intervention in Mexico; that we believe in a determined policy of "hands off" on the part of our Government; and be it further

Resolved, That we extend our cordial greetings and best wishes to the men in Mexico now struggling to abolish age-long wrongs by striking the shackles from the limbs and minds of men and women and to abolish the present land tenure.

On July 25, 1914, the executive council of the A. F. of L. communicated with Señor Zubarin, the representative of the Mexican constitutionalist government at Washington, and urged the advisability of a declaration by their government, through its first chief, that a policy of punishment and retribution would not be followed in dealing with the political enemies of the Carranza government.

The service that the A. F. of L. was able to render to the cause of humanity in Mexico was fully reported to the San Francisco convention under the heading "Pan American Labor Relations."

ORGANIZATION OF MEXICAN WORKERS.

It was one of the most significant and most hopeful manifestations of this spirit that Madero accorded to the workers the right to organize, the legal right to strike, and gave to them assistance in their efforts to organize.

Representatives of the revolutionary movement of Mexico and the officers of the A. F. of L. were in constant correspondence. Several of the former had conferences with the president and the executive council of the A. F. of L. A better understanding had been reached and the ground broken for sympathetic cooperation between the organized labor movement of America and whatever existed of the embryo labor movement and the revolutionary movement of Mexico. But the labor movement of Mexico dates from Madero. The news of the change in Mexico quickly flashed across the border line. That organization in the United States, whose members have been most intimately connected with Mexican workers, the miners' organization, sent a delegation to confer with Madero. As a result of that conference governmental approval was given to the efforts of organized miners to organize their fellow workers in Mexico. The cordial relations thus established were helpful in the work of organization.

Other organizers, as individuals, have gone into Mexico and carried the message of organized labor in America to the workers of Mexico who were seeking a way out of bondage. Various trades organized into unions upon lines necessary to meet the immediate problems and conditions. The conditions were such that immediate benefits were essential. Stone masons, woodworkers, printers, carpenters, shoemakers, machinists, and workers in other lines organized in the city of Mexico into a federation known as the Casa del Obrero Mundial.

For a brief time it seemed that the revolution in Mexico would be suppressed by the tyranny of the usurper and tyrant Huerta, but with his downfall and the ascendancy of Carranza, backed by a group of liberal elements, the Carranza government made a compact with the organized labor movement of Mexico. The compact was signed on behalf of the Government by Rafael Zubarin Company. The Government pledged its support to the organized labor movement and pledged the maintenance of freedom for activities necessary to carry out the high purposes of organized labor. It also gave immediate assistance, permitting the labor organizations to use large houses in various cities, such as Vera Cruz, Tampico, and Mexico City for the purpose of holding meetings and for the protection of their families. In these buildings the labor organizations were permitted to set up their printing presses and issue labor and liberal papers. Transportation was given to their delegations to go to various parts of Mexico to organize different trades and federate them under the national organization.

The Carranza government has made an earnest effort to fulfill these obligations. In return the workers, holding that their interests were identified for the time at least with the Carranza government, have supported that government, and some labor organizations have enlisted in the Carranza army and served en masse with the officers of their union as the officers of the company. Some of these regiments, such as the regiments formed of the Orizaba textile workers, are known as the "red regiments."

Soon after its organization the Casa del Obrero Mundial elected delegates to come to the United States for the purpose of giving American workers information of the labor movement in Mexico. Unfortunately complications and lack of financial means prevented carrying out this purpose at first. Later in the year another federation of labor organizations, known as the Federacion de Sindicatos Obreros, sent a representative to the United States. This representative was a man who was also a colonel of one of the red regiments.

NO INTERVENTION—THE A. F. OF L.

Through the machinations of those whose financial and material interests were endangered by the Mexican revolution an international condition was brought about which made it seem that intervention of the United States Government in the affairs of Mexico was inevitable. It must be remembered that foreign capital in Mexico was interested in "developing" natural resources of Mexico and diverting the mass of the profit to foreign countries. There were the foreign concessionaires who had been given the wealth that ought to belong to the Mexican people and were using that wealth for their own private aggrandizement, for the exploitation and domination of the Mexicans. These were the elements—the interests—which endeavored to provoke intervention by some force that would suppress the revolution, but the revolution and the ideals of the revolution, as maintained under the Carranza government, were of vital interest to the people of Mexico generally, the great majority of whom are included in the wage earners.

When all other agencies failed, the representatives of the Mexican workers came to the president of the American Federation of Labor and asked him to present to the President of the United States reasons why intervention ought not to be made—reasons which were based upon the ideals and purposes which the Mexican people were trying to work out as best they could under the best form of government they could establish at that time. The president of the American Federation of Labor made an appeal to President Wilson in the name of the working people of the United States, whose ideals and policies are closely identified and associated with those of the Mexican workers.

The United States Government did not intervene. Later in the year, when the question of recognizing the Constitutionalist government of Mexico was under consideration by the President, in accord with the instructions of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, a letter was written requesting that the Constitutionalist government be recognized. The Mexican situation was presented to the President as the first efforts of people, long accustomed to despotism and denial of rights of free citizens, to realize ideals of freedom. The letter to President Wilson was as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 22, 1915.

SIR: In accord with the direction of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, the following is respectfully submitted to you and which we hope will commend itself to your favorable consideration and action.

There has been going on just across our southern boundary a battle which is part of the world-old struggle for freedom. Although that struggle may be associated with many things that are not in accord with our ideals, yet I am sure you recognize that these things are the first crude efforts of a people long accustomed to despotism and denial of the rights of free citizens to realize ideals of freedom. Nations, as well as individuals, as you well know, can not at once assume wisdom in the exercise of freedom. They must learn to be free. They have the right to this freedom without unwarranted outside interference even from those who seek their welfare.

The revolt of the people under the leadership of Madero against the Diaz government was an effort to realize ideals. The support given to the ideals of Madero was a proof that national virility and resourcefulness had not been crushed out by the rule of despotism. It was a proof that there were yet ideals and yearnings for the opportunities that rightfully belonged to citizens under a free government.

Under the Madero government there were beginnings of a labor movement and an effort of the workers to organize for the realization of their ideals and for the betterment of themselves and their fellow-workers. This hope was overshadowed by the barbarism of Huerta but again grew strong and steady when Carranza asserted himself as the leader of the people.

Gen. Carranza is recognized as the friend of the working people and the real leader of the people generally of Mexico. He has granted to the wage earners the right of organization and has secured them opportunities for carrying out the legitimate purposes of organization. He has been thoroughly in sympathy with the ideals of greater opportunity and freedom of the masses of the people. The working people have been supporting him. They have adjourned as lodges and trade-unions to enlist in the Carranza army with their union officials serving as the officers of their regiments.

The workers of Mexico have tried as best they could with the resources available to present their request and their right to be allowed to work out their own problems. They asked you and our Government for a little more patience and a little more time to prove that the Carranza government really represented the people of Mexico. You granted that request and time has proved that Gen. Carranza is really the representative of Mexican democracy—that he represents their efforts to establish a government of the people and for the people. Gen. Carranza has demonstrated his sympathy with the ideals for which Madero gave his life, and has refused to compromise these ideals with Mexican revolutionists who were seeking their own personal interests. He has endeavored to secure for the Mexican Republic the dignity and the respect that ought to be accorded to any sovereign government.

The sympathies of the workers of the United States have been very deeply touched by the struggles of our fellow workers of Mexico. As recent events have drawn all of the countries of the two American continents more closely together, so the workers of these various countries have been more thoroughly aroused to the common interests and the common welfare of the wage earners who are citizens of the countries.

It is with the desire that we Americans who have so much liberty and so much of opportunity should use our influence to aid those who are less fortunate, that as representatives of the labor movement of America we urge upon you recognition of Gen. Carranza as the head of the Mexican government.

The matter we know is receiving your most earnest and most conscientious consideration, and we are sure that your sympathies are very strong for any genuine effort to secure larger liberty for the people; therefore we wish you to have the assurance that the course we, as the representatives of the organized labor movement of America urge upon you, has, we are sure, the hearty approval and indorsement of the great rank and file of the citizenship of our country.

Very sincerely, yours,

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

Hon. WOODROW WILSON,
President of the United States,
White House, Washington, D. C.

On October 19, 1915, the United States Government notified the representative of the de facto Mexican government in the United States that it would be pleased to receive formally in Washington a diplomatic representative of the Constitutionalist government. The Carranza government was recognized.

MEXICO-UNITED STATES LABOR CONFERENCE.

The concessionaries, the American trusts in Mexico and the foreign capitalists who had invested money there became increasingly disturbed as the Carranza government continued its program. They were in danger of losing the privileges that they had secured in devious ways. As these foreigners owned 75 per cent of the capital and land of Mexico, they saw no benefit to be secured through indemnities, for indemnities would be the result of taxation of Mexican property, the property to which they claimed title, consequently, indemnities meant they themselves must pay.

Then began an effort on a gigantic scale to create "public opinion" for American intervention in Mexico. Nor were these efforts confined to press publicity. President Wilson in a public statement declared that interests hostile to international peace were inciting trouble along the border line between Mexico and the United States.

One of the most conspicuous of these efforts was the expedition sent from California into Lower California, Mexico, headed by Mr. Chandler, son-in-law of Gen. Otis, of the Los Angeles Times. Gen. Otis owns about 64,000 acres in Mexico, which was virtually an extension of the great Imperial Valley of California. Gen. Otis, as all the world knows, is actuated by far from idealistic purposes. The conditions connected with this expedition were brought to the attention of the grand jury of California, indictments followed, and some of the men concerned in the expedition were sentenced to terms in the penitentiary. However, the men who planned the expedition and were to profit by it have so far escaped punishment. This case is known as California v. Chandler, Ablez, et al.

When conditions became critical, in the name of the workers of the United States, the president of the American Federation of Labor sent the following letter to the Casa del Obrero Mundial of Mexico:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 23, 1916.

Secretary CASA DEL OBRERO MUNDIAL,
City of Mexico.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Permit me, on behalf of the American Federation of Labor, to send fraternal greetings to the Casa del Obrero Mundial, to the entire labor movement of Mexico.

The labor movement of North America has seen with what splendid courage organized labor in Mexico has, from the time of the presidency of the late Francisco I. Madero, demanded and obtained recognition for the cause of labor and justice in our sister Republic.

From time to time the American Federation of Labor has received confidential reports from delegates duly accredited by your organization and others who came to Washington in behalf of the Mexican labor movement and the Mexican cause. From these delegates the executive council of the American Federation of Labor has learned how deeply the spirit of international brotherhood has guided all your struggles in Mexico. We learned with intense interest of the historic agreement between the Casa del Obrero Mundial and the Constitutionalist government and signed on behalf of that government by Rafael Zubaran Company.

We have learned with what bravery and determination the Mexican miners in the State of Arizona organized and struck work with their brother Americans of the north and won advancement for themselves and the cause of international solidarity.

All these facts point to the necessity of a still closer understanding between the workers of all the Americas, particularly in this crisis in the world's history. To this end and to propose a practical method of mutual cooperation between organized labor in Mexico and in the United States, I suggest that, at a date to be agreed upon, representatives from the Casa del Obrero Mundial and as many other of the labor organizations in Mexico as possible meet for a conference in El Paso, Tex., with representatives of the American Federation of Labor. Matters for the mutual welfare of the sister Republic could then be discussed and a future cooperative policy outlined.

With you I agree that the future peace of the world rests in the hands of the wage earners, and this is most cogently expressed by the organized labor movement of each and all countries.

I hope to hear from you as soon as possible as to the actual conditions of the Mexican labor movement at the present time, and a reply to the suggestion I have made herein.

Fraternally, yours,

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

Copies of this letter were sent to President Wilson and to each member of his Cabinet and to the officers of the Constitutionalist government in Mexico, as well as to a number of governors of Mexican States, who were in a position and who would probably be disposed to give general publicity to the letter among the workers of Mexico.

Within a very short time there came telegraphic response from the labor organizations of Mexico heartily indorsing the holding of a labor conference and suggesting an immediate date. Within brief time came further telegraphic information stating that the labor organizations of Mexico City had elected delegates, who were instructed to proceed at once to the border to hold a conference on June 25. As June 26 was the date that had been set for the meeting of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor in Washington and not sufficient time was allowed for communicating with the workers of Mexico, it was impossible to have a time mutually agreed upon for the conference before these workers started for Eagle Pass, Tex. Immediately upon their arrival in Eagle Pass, the delegates telegraphed to Washington. There were 20 representatives of various trade organizations in this delegation. The suggestion was made that the delegates who had come to Eagle Pass should proceed to Washington, which was considered a better place for a conference, in addition to affording an opportunity for the delegates to meet with the executive council of the American Federation of Labor. Conditions on the border were such as to make a labor conference there ill-advised.

The Mexican delegation elected two of their number to come to Washington. They were Luis N. Morones, an electrical worker, of Mexico City, and Mr. Salvador Gonzales Garcia, a machinist. Both of these workers represented the Casa del Obrero Mundial.

In the meanwhile the Confederacion of Sindicatos Obreros had again sent their labor representative, Edmundo E. Martinez, to the United States and commissioned him to bring to the E. C. of the A. F. of L. a gold medal expressing the appreciation of the Mexican workers for what the American labor movement had done for them in their struggle for liberty. This medal was formally presented in the conferences which the Mexican delegates had with the E. C.

The State of Yucatan now has as governor Salvadore Alvarado, a man who has some understanding of the labor movement and is in sympathy with its needs and purposes and has done much to better conditions in Yucatan. It must be remembered that less than a year ago the workers of Yucatan were peons—slaves. In a brief while the revolution has given them a chance to be free men, and they have used that freedom as best they could under the circumstances. What they have done at present in the way of industrial organization is perhaps not the ideal thing, but it represents their first efforts to bring about changes in the oppressive conditions that have so long prevailed.

However, democracy can not come in a year, but the people of Yucatan will learn democracy and will gradually supersede autocracy, whether political or industrial. The governor of Yucatan believed so strongly in organized labor that he commissioned two representatives of the workers to come to the United States bringing an appeal from the workers of Yucatan. This appeal was for the purpose of establishing better relations between organized labor of Yucatan and the United States and all Pan-American countries. These two delegates from Yucatan participated in the Mexican conference; they are Baltazar Pages, editor, Voice of the Revolution, and Carlos Loveira, chief of the department of labor. They had credentials signed by the following labor organizations of Yucatan: The Society of Dockers; the Syndicate of Machinists, Blacksmiths, and Boilermakers; Union of Railway Men of Yucatan; Society of Sailors; Syndicate of Waiters and Assistants of Restaurants and Saloons; Syndicate of Carpenters; Syndicate of Mechanical Electricians; Clerks' Headquarters of Yucatan; Syndicate of Bakers; Syndicate of Molders; Syndicate of Coach Drivers; Mutual Beneficial Society of Truck Drivers; Syndicate of House Tenants.

The representatives of the Casa del Obrero Mundial had credentials from that organization and asserted that they represented 100,000 organized workers.

The purpose of this conference was the consideration of ways and means for the establishment of closer relations between our respective labor movements, in order that there might be better understanding and better cooperation. It was in recognition of the fact that their economic interests were identical and that there must be permanent relationship established between the economic organizations.

All parties to the conference agreed upon the principle of action, that the economic movement is the fundamental agency for the welfare of the workers and that the economic movement must be made the instrumentality for establishing their freedom and promoting all of their interests.

As a result of the conference held in Washington the following declaration was formulated and signed:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 3, 1916.

The undersigned, the E. C. of the A. F. of L., and the representatives of the organized-labor movement of Mexico, express our deep gratification in the consummation of this conference, which we hope and believe has laid the basis for better understanding and has welded ties that shall bind together the workers of our respective countries.

We are confident that personal conferences of the workers of the United States and of Mexico will be a constructive force in bringing about understanding necessary for better relations between our countries and for maintaining peace founded upon a proper regard for the rights of all. It is our opinion that this conference should be followed by another, in which the workers of both countries shall be more generally represented, for the purpose of agreeing upon plans for maintaining permanent relations and for the federation of the labor movement of all of the countries of the two Americas.

In view of the present relations between the United States and Mexico, we are of the opinion that such a general conference is for the present untimely, and we express the judgment that the holding of such a conference should be deferred until later in the year. However, in the event of an emergency which would make a general conference of advantage in averting an international crisis, such a conference could and should be called for the earliest time mutually agreeable. To carry this plan into effect, a joint commission shall be chosen, to consist of two members from both labor movements, to remain in Washington until the present crisis is passed, the said joint commission to have the power of calling a general conference if necessary.

We hold this to be fundamental: No relations between our countries can be permanent that are not based upon the will of the masses of the people and in accord with their concepts of justice.

We deem it an essential step toward democracy and justice that there shall be established for the masses who have hitherto been without regular agencies for expressing their views and desires opportunities that will enable them to have a voice in helping to determine international affairs.

The labor movements of the various countries constitute the instrumentalities that can best accomplish this purpose and give expression to national ideas and convictions that have been too long inarticulate and impotent.

We direct that the president of the A. F. of L. and the official representatives of organized labor of Mexico should keep in touch through correspondence, and that they be authorized to carry out the purposes specified in this declaration.

In joint conference as the representatives of the workers, the masses of our respective countries, we urge upon our Governments to adjust existing differences without war and to establish conditions conducive to permanent peace with justice.

We appeal to the workers and all of the people of the United States and of Mexico to do everything within their power to promote correct understanding of purposes and actions, to prevent friction, to encourage good will, and to promote an intelligent national opinion that ultimately shall direct relations between our countries and shall be a potent humanitarian force in promoting world progress.

It is an unavoidable conclusion that present differences between our countries are the result of misunderstanding growing out of inadequate or incorrect information; that the unfortunate consequences of past relations between the United States and Mexico have formulated a national attitude that questions the good faith of our Governments; that existing agencies and methods of reaching an adjustment of these differences are unsuitable for dealing with those problems which are fundamentally humane problems; and that the relations between our countries ought not to be directed in accord with abstract standards of justice, but ought to be keenly sensitive and responsive to the human interests and moral forces. Therefore, we, the representatives of the organized workers, having the right to speak for all of the workers and in the interests of all of the people, urge upon our Governments the appointment of a commission to be composed of high-minded citizens, fully representative of our nations, to consider differences that have brought our nations to the verge of war, and to make such recommendations for adjustment as shall fitly express the highest ideals of the great rank and file of the citizenship of our two countries.

We direct that copies of this declaration shall be presented to the President of the United States, Hon. Woodrow Wilson, and to the first chief of the Constitutionalist Government of Mexico, Gen. Venustiano Carranza, and that it be given widest publicity among the workers of our respective countries.

For the organized workers of the United States:

SAM'L GOMPERS, President.
JAMES DUNCAN, First Vice President.
JAS. O'CONNELL, Second Vice President.
D. A. HAYES, Third Vice President.
JOS. F VALENTINE, Fourth Vice President.
JOHN R. ALPINE, Fifth Vice President.
H. B. PERHAM, Sixth Vice President.
FRANK DUFFY, Seventh Vice President.
WM. GREEN, Eighth Vice President.
JOHN B. LENNON, Treasurer.
FRANK MORRISON, Secretary.

For the organized workers of Mexico:

C. LOVEIRA.
BALTAZAR PAGES.
L. N. MORONES.
S GONZALO GARCIA.
EDMUNDO E. MARTINEZ.

LABOR'S EFFORTS TO PREVENT WAR.

While the conference was in progress an actual clash between the American troops in Mexico and the Mexican army had taken place, in which some American soldiers were killed and some were imprisoned and held in jail. The President of the United States issued an ultimatum demanding the immediate release of the American soldiers. No word was received from the Mexican Government as to their intentions in the matter, public opinion was aroused to fever heat, and it seemed as though war was inevitable.

In this great anxiety an appeal came from the Mexican governmental representatives in this country to the president of the American Federation of Labor asking him to send a personal appeal to Gen. Carranza for the release of the American soldiers.

On the afternoon of June 28, about half past 2, the following telegram was sent:

[Telegram.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 28, 1916.

Gen. VENUSTIANO CARRANZA,
First Chief Constitutionalist Government,
Mexico City, Mexico:

In the name of common justice and humanity, in the interest of a better understanding between the peoples and the Governments of the United States and Mexico, for the purpose of giving the opportunity to maintain peace and avoid the horrors of war, upon the grounds of highest patriotism and love, I appeal to you to release the American soldiers held by your officers in Chihuahua.

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

On the evening of that same day extra papers on the streets announced that Gen. Carranza had just issued an order releasing the American soldiers.

On the following day was received from Gen. Carranza this:

[Telegram.]

MEXICO, June 29, 1916.

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor, Washington:

In replying to your message dated yesterday I would state that the Government in my charge has ordered the liberty of the American soldiers whom the Mexican forces took as prisoners in Carrizal. Salute, very affectionately,

V. CARRANZA.

The executive council, which was at the time considering Mexican affairs, authorized the sending of the following:

[Telegram.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 30, 1916.

Gen. VENUSTIANO CARRANZA,
First Chief Constitutionalist Government,
Mexico City, Mexico:

Your telegram of June 29 received and laid before the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, in session at Washington, and we express to you our appreciation of your order releasing the American soldiers, and thus helping to clear the way for a mutually honorable settlement of any differences existing between the Governments of the United States and of Mexico.

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, we will see who the Magons were, with whom Mr. Gompers was sympathizing. The Magon-Villareal junta were operating under the I. W. W. constitution and laws. I read from the constitution of the I. W. W., the Industrial Workers of the World:

I. W. W. TACTICS OR METHODS.

As a revolutionary organization, the Industrial Workers of the World aim to use any and all tactics that will get the results sought with the least expenditure of time and energy. The tactics used are determined solely by the power of the organization to make good in their use. The question of right and wrong does not concern us. No terms made with the employer are final—

And so on. I ask that from this document that portion of the laws governing the I. W. W., contained on pages 314 and 315, may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

I. W. W. TACTICS OR METHODS.

As a revolutionary organization, the Industrial Workers of the World aim to use any and all tactics that will get the results sought with the least expenditure of time and energy. The tactics used are determined solely by the power of the organization to make good in their use. The question of "right" and "wrong" does not concern us.

No terms made with an employer are final. All peace, so long as the wage system lasts, is but an armed truce. At any favorable opportunity the struggle for more control of industry is renewed.

The Industrial Workers realize that the day of successful long strikes is past. Under all ordinary circumstances a strike that is not won in four to six weeks can not be won by remaining out longer. In trustified industry the employer can better afford to fight one strike that lasts six months than he can six strikes that take place in that period.

The organization does not allow any party to enter into time contracts with the employers. It aims, where strikes are used, to paralyze all branches of the industry involved when the employers can least afford a cessation of work—during the busy season and when there are rush orders to be filled.

The Indutsrial Workers of the World maintain that nothing will be conceded by the employers except that which we have the power to take and hold by the strength of our organization. Therefore we seek no agreements with the employers.

Failing to force concessions from the employers by the strike, work is resumed and "sabotage" is used to force the employers to concede the demands of the workers.

The great progress made in machine production results in an ever-increasing army of unemployed. To counteract this the Industrial Workers of the World aim to establish the shorter workday and to slow up the working pace, thus compelling the employment of more and more workers.

To facilitate the work of organization large initiation fees and dues are prohibited by the I. W. W. as the organization.

During strikes the works are closely picketed and every effort made to keep the employers from getting workers into the shops. All supplies are cut off from strike-bound shops. All shipments are refused or missent, delayed, and lost if possible. Strike breakers are also isolated to the full extent of the power of the organization. Interference by the Government is resented by open violation of the Government's orders, going to jail en masse, causing expense to the taxpayers—which is but another name for the employing class.

In short, the I. W. W. advocate the use of militant "direct-action" tactics to the full extent of our power to make good.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, at the time Mr. Gompers claims that he assisted in the overthrow of Diaz and the establishment of the labor organizations under the Madero administration in Mexico, the Magons were again arrested in Los Angeles, Cal. These people with whom he sympathized were again arrested by Madero, the great labor-organization man of the Republic of Mexico, upon compiaints made by him, and with the assistance of attorneys employed by him the Magons were sent to San Quentin Penitentiary for 23 months.

In connection with Mr. Gompers's statements I also desire to call attention to his letter as contained in the American Federation of Labor Proceedings, volume 34, for 1914, on pages 50, 51, and 52, under the head "The situation in Mexico." I ask that that may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE SITUATION IN MEXICO.

As a matter of historical record, as well as to ask your approval of our course, we submit to you herewith a letter which President Gompers, by the authority of the executive council, addressed to the United States representative of the Mexican Constitutionalists:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 25, 1914.

Mr. R. ZUBARAN,
United States Representative Mexican Constitutionalists,
Burlington Apartment, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: From direct communication as well as from statements published in the newspapers within the past few days, the situation now existing in Mexico has been fairly and accurately presented to my associates, the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, during our last week's session. We are prompted, and I was directed, to communicate to you and respectfully ask that you communicate in turn to Gen. Carranza, chief of the Constitutionalists of Mexico, the following statement of fact and expression of hope.

But, first, let me say that it is with much satisfaction that the executive council of the American Federation of Labor extends felicitations to the constitutionalist cause and expresses hopes for its early and successful consummation.

At the outset I should say that the working people of the United States are intensely interested in the affairs of the people of Mexico, as they are by their very position and organization vitally concerned in the affairs of the people the world over, and especially those conditions which affect the working people and their conditions of life and work.

Nor is it amiss to say that during the Mexican revolution against the autocratic and tyrannical administration of President Diaz, the American Federation of Labor aided as best it could, and particularly in the field of information and the creation of public opinion in the United States in the movement to dispose Diaz. We were greatly gratified when, as a result, the great Madero was installed into office as President of the Republic and in the high purpose to which he was devoting his talents and ideals for the benefit of the Mexican people.

When Gen. Huerta and his coterie, by assassination and treachery, overturned the government of President Madero and Gen. Huerta established himself as Provisional President and then dispersed the Mexican Congress and proclaimed himself dictator, there was no power, outside that of the Government of the United States, which exerted so potential and international an influence in the solution of the difficulty which confronted the Mexican people as the American Federation of Labor.

We helped in sustaining the attitude of the Government of the United States in its refusal to recognize Huerta up to the present hour and for the success of the revolutionary movement headed by Gen. Carranza.

Now, the only difficulty which seems to be in the way of a complete settlement of the contest of the last several years is the avowed declaration on the part of those who speak or assume to speak in the name of Gen. Carranza, that punishment and retribution of the most draconian character will be meted out by him and his government to the Huertists and those responsible for the overturning of the Madero government.

What I have in mind is, that since the American Federation of Labor, as no other American instrumentality outside the Government of the United States, has aided for the success of the prospective government, we have the right to suggest to those who represent Gen. Carranza and the victorious revolutionary army that the higher humanitarian consideration be given, aye, even to those who have been guilty. And that in our judgment such a policy would have a tranquilizing effect, promoting the successful inauguration of the new constitutional government of Mexico and would tend to unite the people of Mexico in support of an orderly government of the country.

And it is also earnestly hoped and respectfully suggested that some definite declaration be made, not only upon the lines indicated above but should be coupled with an avowal of purpose that the constitutionalists will carry into effect a rightful and justifiable division of the lands of Mexico for the working people.

We feel confident that such a declaration faithfully carried into effect would institute and maintain a better economic condition and a more humanitarian policy than have heretofore prevailed in Mexico.

In our judgment, such a declaration and policy would do more than aught else to bring peace, unity, and progress to the people of Mexico and the stability of their government, all of which is submitted to the respectful consideration of yourself and your chief from the sincere purpose of your well-wishers and your friends.

Very truly, yours,

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
SAMUEL GOMPERS, President.

The United States representative of the constitutionalists expressed himself as profoundly grateful for this expression of opinion, suggestion, and judgment of the American Federation of Labor as to the course which should be pursued by the Mexican Constitutionalists. And now that the constitutionalists have driven the traitor and tyrant Huerta from the office he usurped and have established the constitutional government, and that the true aims in the purposes which prompted the Carranza-Villa constitutional revolution are to be carried out, we can take pride and satisfaction in the course pursued by the American Federation of Labor and by the executive council in giving aid and encouragement to the men of Mexico who are engaged in their avowed purpose for the democratization of the institutions of the Republic of Mexico to make for the greater safety and protection of life and liberty to her people, for the abolition of slavery and peonage, and for the better distribution of the fertile lands of that country. We extend to the people of Mexico under this new régime our felicitations and our best hopes for their welfare and progress.

Mr. FALL. Now, sir, Mr. Gompers has tied himself up with the Industrial Workers of the World, the labor organization of Mexico. I have here, taken from The Railway Conductor, the magazine of the O. R. C. of the United States (the Order of Railroad Conductors), volume 29, pages 444 and 445, the report of W. K. Suit, chief conductor of the Railroad Conductors of Mexico (the Americans), protesting against the action of the Madero government and the organized labor of Mexico in forcing out of the Republic of Mexico the railroad conductors, engineers, and all trainmen. I want this to go along with the record which Mr. Gompers has made for himself, showing the people with whom he is associating, in whose behalf he is acting in Mexico, the labor organizations that killed the American railroad conductors, the American railroad engineers, the American trainmen, and forced 600 of them out of the Republic of Mexico.

I ask that that may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From The Railway Conductor, Vol. XXIX, pp. 444–445.]

GUADALAJARA, MEXICO, April 18, 1912.

To the OFFICERS AND MEMBERS, DIVISION 540, O. R. C.

BROTHERS: It is with profound regret that it has become my duty to announce to you the necessity of surrendering the charter of our division. However painful it may be, it would be more so if I could look back over the events that have transpired in the last two years with an impartial eye and see where it was due to our failure in doing our duty either as conductors in railroad service or to a lack of loyalty to the Order of Railway Conductors. The discontinuation of the division is due to the never-ceasing agitation of the unreliable railroad element among the Mexicans that never has and never will do good service.

This same class of people has succeeded in ruining the only effective government that Mexico has ever had, and they are now engaged in destroying the business institutions that have been built up by foreign talent and money during the last 30 years of peace and prosperity.

They have also taken advantage of the weak and tottering government at a time when they have not the strength to resist and have capured the greatest business institution in Mexico and will proceed to wreck it as they have the government.

We did not lose our positions because we are making demands that are unreasonable. We have lost them because the railroad management, working under the support of the government, has annulled the agreement for the purpose of forcing us out of the service, as they see it, a few at a time, so that it will not cripple the service, and at the same time knowing that they have us at their mercy.

I am proud to know that each and every one of you are not only true Americans but that you are loyal O. R. C. brothers, and that all of you have responded to the demand for justice.

Our experience in Mexico and the history of the Texas colony under Mexican rule has taught us that the moment he becomes your master he sets himself upon a royal throne and expects you to worship him, and if you dare to resent his rule, you make of him a life-long enemy, and from that time on you are never free from his treachery; and for that reason you have chosen to go down in defeat, fighting like the brave defenders of the Alamo, rather than to submit to a brutal ruler and be slaughtered like the Texans at Goliad.

We may be defeated in one sense of the word, but by the fight you have made you have saved your pride and dignity and have assisted in creating a sentiment in the civilized world that will some day bring results.

By the assistance of the Order of Railway Conductors the undesirable railroad man has been removed from Mexico, and the company is now losing the best men that have ever worked in Mexico; and from the various tests of diplomacy, judgment, and nerve to which you have been subjected in the past 18 months I feel free in saying that you stand head and shoulders above any public servants in the world to-day. Like the captain of a ship, a conductor's first duty is the care and protection of his passengers.

The Madero rebellion broke out in Mexico about the time the sentiment against the Americans was so strong, partly on account of the rapist, Rodriguez, who was lynched in Texas, and partly because the Americans had the best railroad jobs. In addition to this sentiment against us, we came in contact with both of the bitter factions and were often asked by both parties to express our opinions regarding the situation. We saw the rough element gradually get bolder; we saw thieves and pickpockets who had been in prison reappear and begin their bold work; we saw the army and the local authorities lose control of the people; we saw the small bands collect and move about as we passed through the country. In fact, by virtue of our position we held the pulse of the nation in our hands, and when we realized that the peon mobs could be called nothing but bloodthirsty savages, we all made up our minds, for the protection of the women and children, not to allow any soldiers to ride on passenger trains through the dangerous territory where the rebels were likely to hold the trains up, knowing that if they saw soldiers they would not hesitate to shoot into the trains and kill everybody in sight in an effort to kill a few loyal soldiers.

By this method you have made enemies of one faction while your motives were not understood by others. Many trains were delayed, and in some cases you have refused to go into the danger zone and tie up trains, until you were sure that the line was safe for your passengers. Some of you were subjected to vile abuse by army officers and threatened to be placed in irons. Other people openly asked the question, "Are you in sympathy with Madero and the rebellion?" "Are you openly taking part in the fight to overthrow the Government?" while others boldly asserted that you should be shot down on the spot. But with all the intimidations, not one of you retreated from the stand you had taken, which showed your rare judgment and nerve to back it up, and after mature reflection the traveling public, which represents most all of the nations of earth, realized that you were right and that you did not do this through sympathy for any faction, but to protect your passengers, and they indorsed your actions. Although some of you were ordered taken out of service by the Government, not one of you lost your positions.

Neither the railroad company nor the public can afford to lose such servants as you are, but just and right can not prevail under existing circumstances. The American tourist, who formerly found a courteous guide on every passenger train, in the form of an American conductor, will now spend his vacation in some other part of the world, realizing that he would be among people who do not know how to appreciate him, and the hundreds of poor beggars who gathered up the pennies freely given by Americans in days gone by will go hungry to bed in the future.

The United States of America, by the Monroe doctrine, assisted by sending an American army to the Rio Grande in 1865, handed Mexico her liberty on a silver platter, and has protected her ever since. Our reward is now being received in the form of about nine-tenths of our citizens fleeing from the country, under humiliating circumstances, to save their lives, while others are being shot down like mad dogs by a lot of savages, whose brains are pickled in alcohol and their nerves wrecked by immoral living, and who, convinced that they can not compete with honest business men in respectable pursuits of life, have turned loose to lay the country to waste in their own natural way. Every American who has been in touch with the situation, and every citizen of other civilized countries, sees the necessity of adding the "big stick" to the Monroe doctrine, and the only question is, "When will it be done?"

Every voter of the hundred thousand conductors and engineers in the United States of America should see that this question is put to the candidates for President of the United States in the campaign which has opened there, and not let them get away from it until they have fully expressed their opinions in public on the question.

I can not refrain from expressing my special appreciation of the never-tiring efforts of our secretary, Brother A. W. Earnest, for his work for the good of the order, and especially in behalf of Brother James A. Cook while he was in prison at Guadalajara, partly due to the same influence of the same element that is destroying the country in an effort to humiliate the American railroad men and drive them from the Republic. Also, Brother D. A. Kelly, our local chairman of the grievance committee, who has had to fight on every inch of the ground he has covered for many months, and has proven a true and loyal brother and a first-class grievance man in every respect. Also, our general chairman, Brother T. K. Eccles, of whom I can say that in all of my 23 years of railroading I have never known a brother to have to face so many complicated and humiliating questions. Nor have I ever seen a man handle them as successfully as Brother Eccles has done.

But there is a limit to all things, and we have arrived at the limit of our endurance and forbearance in Mexico; and may God be with you all and deliver you to the other side of the Rio Grande in safety.

I thank you all for the support and respect you have shown me in my efforts to serve the order and the brothers.

Yours, in P. F.,

W. K. SUIT, Chief Conductor.

[From the Railway Conductor, p. 443, Vol. XXIX.]

GUADALAJARA, MEXICO.

The following is from the minutes of a special meeting held April 18, 1912:

"Moved and seconded that a vote of thanks be extended our chief conductor, Brother W. K. Suit, for his untiring efforts in our behalf, and in particular for his letter announcing the necessity of disbanding the division, giving an outline of the situation in this country, and that a copy of this letter be sent to each member of the division and to the Railway Conductor. Carried unanimously."

Yours, truly, in P. F.,

A. W. EARNEST,
Secretary Division 540.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. FALL. In one moment I will be through.

Mr. President, I have here, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, a copy of an article from the New York Times, dated September 28, 1915, showing the protests of the Carranza consul at San Antonio, Tex., made, so it is claimed, to the officers of the United States Government in the Department of Justice, that the Mexican I. W. W. were the people who were guilty of the murder of Americans on this side of the boundary. This is offered in connection with Mr. Gompers's record and his kind words spoken of the Mexican labor organizations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times of Sept. 28, 1915.]

LAYS BORDER ATTACKS TO MEXICAN I. W. W.'S.—CARRANZA AGENT CHARGES THAT LABOR AGITATORS IMPERSONATE SOLDIERS—AMERICAN HELD.

Col. Tiodulo R. Beltran, Carranzista consul at San Antonio, Tex., will lay before the Department of Justice to-morrow information tending to show that much of the disturbance along the Mexican border is due to the activities of the Mexican branch of the Industrial Workers of the World. The local members are known as Magonistas. Most of them, according to Col. Beltran, are engaged in railway construction work on the border. They are fanatics, he says, and believe that by making trouble intervention will be brought on, and after that the land will be divided among the people.

Col. Beltran is convinced that Carranzista soldiers are not responsible for the border clashes. Their uniform, he says, is a cheap affair, easily imitated, and the Magonistas have adopted it, he believes, to increase the international significance of their acts.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, with this I shall close at this time, calling attention simply to the speech made by Mr. Gompers, and asking that that portion of it referring the record of this administration with reference to Mexico, and asking the votes of the electors at this election for Mr. Wilson, as taken from one of the daily papers, may also be published in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The international issue that now comes closest to the labor movement is the policy of our Government toward Mexico. The cause of humanity is in the balance in Mexico. The people there are trying to work out their own problems and to establish their own ideals of political, social, and economic justice. The labor movement in Mexico has developed; that is, the most power and the most constructive product of the revolution.

Representatives of the labor movement of Mexico have joined the representatives of the labor movement of America to insure to the workers and citizens of Mexico the rights of human beings—opportunities for freedom and for independence. Many of the problems of the Mexican workers are problems of the workers of the United States. Their welfare is our welfare. The boundary line between the two countries is only an artificial division that has little or no effect upon the course and the nature of industrial and commercial development.

The problem of industrial welfare in the States of the Southwest is largely a Mexican problem. With low standards of life and work prevailing upon the 15,000,000 Mexicans, there exists an obstacle to the establishment of higher standards within the United States. There are capitalists and exploiting interests of the United States who because they have property in Mexico—often corruptly and dishonestly obtained—desire to maintain governmental agencies by which they can hold the people in subjection and deny to them the opportunity for protecting themselves through the organized-labor movement and other opportunities for growth and development.

The selfish exploiting interests are concentrating their political power in the present campaign to secure a different policy on the part of our Government toward Mexico. Even under the guise of intervention, no matter how unnecessary and unwarrantable, the advocates of that policy really aim at the conquest and annexation of Mexico.

A few of the most reckless, such as the Otis and Hearst interests, come out brazenly in the demand for intervention, invasion, conquest, and annexation of Mexico. Of course every effort must be made to safeguard the lives and property of our people living along the border line, but who can honestly say that the Mexican marauders were the only offenders?

The allied forces of greed and profit would deny the Mexican people the opportunity for their development; they would gladly embroil the United States in an unnecessary and unwarrantable war with Mexico. To them property, property rights, profits are held far more sacred than human beings, international honor, and human liberty.

SIR ALMROTH E. WRIGHT.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, a short statement in regard to Sir Almroth E. Wright, the celebrated scientist and physician, and certain correspondence between him and certain other physicians. I make this request because the Senate recently ordered printed as a public document the results of certain investigations in Sir Almroth Wright's laboratory upon the Von Ruck treatment for tuberculosis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, on December 10, 1914, Dr. Stimson, of the Hygienic Laboratory, Public Health Service, made a report on the investigations by the Public Health Service representatives of the vaccine used by Dr. Von Ruck, of Asheville, N. C., for immunizing against the infection of tuberculosis and in the treatment of cases of tuberculosis. This report was printed as a Senate document—No. 641.

During the progress of this investigation disagreements having arisen between Dr Von Ruck and the officers of the Public Health Service as to the manner of its conduct, Dr. Von Ruck went to Europe and succeeded in having an investigation made in the laboratory of Sir Almroth E. Wright. Sir Almroth Wright was formerly professor of pathology in the Army Medical School, Netley, England, and since 1902 is director of the department of therapeutic immunization, St. Mary's Hospital, London. He is now consulting bacteriologist to the expeditionary forces in France, where he has been since late in 1914.

Sir Almroth E. Wright is widely known for his original work on vaccination against typhoid fever. The antityphoid-fever vaccination was originally employed during the Boer War and thereafter widely used in the British Army. It was introduced in the United States Army in 1909. Almroth E. Wright was knighted in recognition of his scientific work. Dr. Von Ruck was fortunate in interesting Sir Almroth Wright in his work against tuberculosis.

This work was originally under the personal direction of Sir Almroth E. Wright, as is shown by cablegram from him to Dr. Von Ruck under date of October 14, 1914:

KARL VON RUCK, Asheville, N. C.:

Think it advisable Clemenger continue experiments to November 1. Autopsy then. Present outlook favorable.

And by personal letter to Dr. Von Ruck under date of October 17, 1914:

6 PARK CRESCENT,
Portland Place W.—October 17, 1914.

DEAR DR. VON RUCK: I was delighted to get your letter and to hear the better report of your health.

* * * * * * * * *

We have been frantically busy since the war and have made in all now 1,400,000 doses of vaccine; also Parry Morgan has gone to the large military hospital at Netley to inoculate and do bacteriological diagnosis. I have got Dr. Martley, who is a very sound man, to replace him in working with Clemenger. Clemenger is, in conformity with your cable of the 15th, letting the experiment run on to November 1, and it will then take him a week or thereabouts, he thinks, to finish up and work up the results. I think that there is distinct promise in the experiments, both in the experiments with active and those with passive immunity. But, of course, there will be and are already, cases where one has tuberculosis only at the site of infection and not elsewhere; and also cases where death has been produced by pseudo-tubercle in an animal which might, if it had lived, get rid of the tubercle at the site of infection, and these cases will be difficult to tabulate, though, of course, they count in your favor.

I have myself to go out to the war next Wednesday as consultant physician to the forces (I shall be working at wound infection), so I shall not be able to write such an interpretation of the results as you suggest. But I will do all that I can to do that, and I may find that I can usefully return from the war to do research. I may have time in the off hours to write the report you wish. Kindest regards.

Always sincerely, yours,

A. E. WRIGHT.

As is shown by this letter, Sir Almroth Wright was compelled to go to France with the army, where he has been practically ever since, and, unfortunately, this work could not be continued directly under his personal control. However, according to his suggestions, it was continued in his laboratory by Drs. F. J. Clemenger and F. C. Martley, who have prepared a scientific paper giving their report on this work of Dr. Von Ruck.

I am glad to say that the resolution introduced by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] authorizing the printing of this report by Drs. Clemenger and Martley was adopted recently.

Laymen who fear an invasion by this dread disease are told that a negative microscopic examination of their sputum is not conclusive, while an affirmative examination is always conclusive and proves the presence of tuberculosis. To my mind the negative result of the investigation by the officers of the hygienic laboratory is likewise inconclusive, while the report of Drs. Clemenger and Martley, being essentially confirmatory and affirmative of Dr. Von Ruck's work, is necessarily conclusive. Two positive results, independently arrived at, in the investigation of a scientific problem are reciprocally confirmative of the truth, whereas negative evidence opposed to them constitutes, in fact, no evidence at all.

I have been so situated personally that I have been thrown in contact with both the Von Rucks. Being a layman, I do not pretend to fully understand their claims or to be able to state whether they are sound or unsound. I know that Dr. Von Ruck does not claim that his vaccine is a specific which will cure any and all cases of tuberculosis. He does contend that the vaccine has proven in his own hands and in those of many other physicians a most valuable adjunct to other generally recognized methods of treatment of tuberculosis in suitably selected cases. He further claims that a person can be immunized by this vaccine and rendered immune to infection by the tubercle bacillus, just as a person can be immunized for a certain period of time against typhoid fever by antityphoid vaccine. From my personal observation and by the presence in this Chamber of one Senator, at least, I know that Dr. Von Ruck's claim relative to the advantage of treatment in tuberculosis with his vaccine is sustained. It is further sustained by the experience of persons from all parts of this country, as attested by extracts from a few of the many letters from prominent physicians in various parts of the United States, which I ask to have printed as a part of my remarks.

I am delighted that the Senate ordered printed this report of Drs. Clemenger and Martley of their investigations conducted in Sir Almroth Wright's laboratory. These investigations, conducted not only with the approval but at the request of Dr. Von Ruck, negative absolutely the suggestion that Dr. Von Ruck's is a secret remedy. Its method of preparation has been published and given to the profession and the public. Dr. Von Ruck's position in this is that whatever of value his research and investigation has produced should be made available for the benefit of mankind.

It is both proper and fair that both sides of this controversy should be presented to the medical profession and to the public. A great war is being waged against tuberculosis, the winning of which is too important for us not to take advantage of every legitimate means which may aid in the prevention and the delimitation of a disease which is the greatest enemy to human life, health, and usefulness.

Hon. JAMES H. LEWIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am creditably informed that the United States Senate has passed a resolution providing for "an investigation of the methods and practices of the Von Ruck research laboratory for tuberculosis, of Asheville, N. C."

I have been and I am at the present time interested in tuberculosis, chiefly from the viewpoint of the chemistry of the tubercle bacillus and its products. I learned through certain scientific journals of Von Ruck's extensive researches in the chemistry of tuberculosis, and, following a brief correspondence with him, I visited the Von Ruck laboratory early in March, 1913, and again late in June, 1913, to see the actual procedures followed there.

It is not necessary to enter into technical details at this time, but I am glad to express formally my admiration of the extensive, careful, and systematic study of the chemistry of the tubercle bacillus of Dr. Von Ruck. I know of no laboratory in this country where more extensive investigations of this difficult subject have been made, and I am equally confident that few individuals have a more complete grasp of the voluminous literature thereto appertaining.

Yours, very respectfully,

ARTHUR KENDALL,
Professor Bacteriology, Northwestern University.

THE TEMPLE SANITARIUM,
Temple, Tex., December 24, 1914.

Hon. Senator CHAS. A. CULBERSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I understand that your Committee on Public Health now has under consideration the report of the hygienic laboratory upon the method of the Von Rucks in the preventive vaccination for tuberculosis. Together with many physicians of this and other countries, I am very much interested in seeing that this method has a very thorough and fair investigation. If there be anything in this method, it is of the most far-reaching importance. There is not a family in our country which does not now have some member infected with tuberculosis or will have within five years.

In November and December of 1913, very shortly after the men from the hygienic laboratory were in Asheville, I went to the Von Ruck laboratory to make an investigation on my own part, paying all my own expenses for the trip. I was somewhat prejudiced against them at the start. However, I found that they had a laboratory splendidly equipped for this work, numerous animals under observation, and the men were very competent in this line of work. I could find no fault with their technique, although I have had a considerable experience with similar lines of work, and I watched the work very carefully, with this in view. After three weeks' instruction under these men, spending from 8 to 10 hours daily right in the laboratory, I was able to duplicate their serum tests. I also followed 11 cases in people who came for the vaccination, making the physical examination in each case, watched the vaccination, drew the blood myself, and worked with it. I was able to confirm their finding of specific antibodies in the serum of these vaccinated patients. I know these substances were not there before, because I tested them out.

I remind you that the Von Rucks can hardly have a selfish pecuniary motive, because all their work has been published in reputable medical journals, and if the method is generally adopted any biological house can furnish the material commercially. Dr. Karl Von Ruck has the most complete library on tuberculosis in this country and keeps it up to date.

It is to be hoped that another commission can be appointed with men who have had experience with this particular line of work or who will acquire it before making a report on this method. I believe that every phase of the Von Rucks claims should be included in the scope of the investigation, their work upon patients as well as the laboratory experiments with animals. The National Government can well afford financially to back this up, for if a few people are saved from this disease in a year it is economically a wise thing.

Trusting that your committee will see fit to recommend further investigation along this line, I am,

Very sincerely, yours.

JAMES J. TERRELL, M. D.,
Pathologist Temple Sanitarium.

(Formerly professor pathology, medical department, University of Texas.)

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Dr. G. A. Waters, Lennpah, Okla., March 20, 1914: "I am administering your vaccine to several patients, and so far have obtained very favorable results."

Dr. Gardner C. Johnson, 300 Washington Avenue, Evansville, Ind., March 7, 1914: "I am getting very good results with the vaccine."

Dr. Eben Alexander, Knoxville, March 5, 1914: "I do little but surgical work, but I have used lots of the vaccine here. Its wonders do not cease."

Dr. C. J. Overman, Iroquois Block, Marion, Ind., March 3, 1914: "I am using it (the vaccine) in a case of tubercular vertebra with wonderful improvement, both local and general."

Dr. A. C. Watts, Birmingham, Ala., June 3, 1912: "I am using a great deal of your preparation, with good results."

Dr. C. A. Julian, Thomasville, N. C., May 5, 1914: "I am getting results from the last vaccine I got from you and it is renewing my great faith in it."

Dr. C. K. Brosheer, Middlesboro, Ky., September 14, 1914: "Since writing you in April I have used your vaccine in several cases and am very much pleased with the results. Have had marked improvement in each case."

Dr. B. F. Terry, Rising Star, Tex., October 16, 1913: "Am still having wonderful effects with both watery extract and vaccine. Our people know it is a fact."

Dr. L. E. Cox, Greenwood, Ind., March 10, 1914: "After seeing with my own eyes what you are doing along the line of prevention while I was at your place last spring, I am hoping that some time during my lifetime that I will be able to, through State legislation, brin your great work to the attention of every adult in this State."

Dr. F. M. Pottenger, Monrovia, Cal.: "I have been very much interested in the use of your special watery extract that you sent me for trial last spring. I think it has been of great value in the cases in which I have used it. I have used it only in selected cases."

Dr. H. E. Stroud, 214 Lankershim Building, Los Angeles, Cal.: "Your watery extract cured my wife some 15 years ago and she has been well ever since."

Dr. John G. Ames, Wilson Avenue and Sheridan Road, Chicago, September 29, 1913: "The results I obtain from the watery extract are wonderful to me."

EIGHT-HOUR LAW AND CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I simply want to call the attention of the Senate at this time to what I regard as a departure from the straight and narrow path usually followed by the members of the Hughes family in the case of my distinguished namesake, the Republican candidate for the Presidency. He has recently spoken against the eight-hour law. And I want to call the attention of the Senate in that connection to a speech made by William McKinley.

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, let us have that after the election.

Mr. HUGHES. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JAMES). The Senator from New Jersey can not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. HUGHES. As the Senators are anxious to adjourn, I will content myself with having the balance of the speech printed after I read one or two ringing sentences for the benefit of the Senator from Pennsylvania, who I know will be glad to hear the true doctrine with reference to the eight-hour day, so recently repudiated by the candidate of the Republican Party.

Mr. SMOOT. No; Gov. Hughes has not repudiated the eight-hour day.

Mr. PENROSE. I will raise the point of a quorum if it is too long, I will tell the Senator that.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator can not raise the point of a quroum while I have the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. No; but there is going to be a breach of a gentlemen's agreement——

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator can raise it immediately if there was a gentlemen's agreement and the Senator will point out any breach of it.

Mr. PENROSE. The gentlemen's agreement precluded any buncombe like this at this hour of night.

Mr. HUGHES. I can not consent to a gentlemen's agreement which characterizes my speech as buncombe. The Senator from Pennsylvania has been characterized much more severely than myself. I am surprised that the representative and alleged leader of the Republican Party in this body—a man who is contesting for the leadership, who has already torn the mantle to tatters in his efforts to get it from one or two other gentlemen who want to wear it—should object to having the speech of a former President of the United States read in the United States Senate. That is all I am asking to do. I am not asking to read any buncombe. I am asking to read a speech of William McKinley; and I am amazed that a Senator from Pennsylvania who attempts to represent his party in this body should characterize the speech of William McKinley, the martyred President, as buncombe.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. HUGHES. I decline to yield. I will read what Mr. McKinley said as a Member of the House of Representatives when there was pending an act relating to the limitation of hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon the public works of the United States and the District of Columbia. Mr. McKinley said:

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill. It has been said that it is a bill to limit the opportunity of the workingman to gain a livelihood. This is not so; it will have the opposite effect. So far as the Government of the United States, as an employer, is concerned, in the limitation for a day's work provided in this bill to eight hours, instead of putting any limitation upon the opportunity of the American freeman to earn a living, it increases and enlarges the opportunity for the workingman to earn a living. [Applause.]

The Senator from Pennsylvania was not a Member of the House at that time. I call his attention to the fact that nobody rose there and objected to this speech but it was applauded.

Eight hours under the laws of the United States constitute a day's work. That law has been on our statute books for 20 or more years.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Since 1868.

Mr. MCKINLEY. They say around me that it has been on our statute books for 22 years. In all these years it has been "the word of promise to the ear," but by the Government of the United States it has been "broken to the hope." [Applause.] The Government and its officials should be swift to execute and enforce its own laws, and failure in this particular is most reprehensible.

I want to pause here long enough to say that under the act of 1868 an order was issued by another Republican President, Ulysses S. Grant, who was then President of the United States. Mr. McKinley goes on:

Now, Mr. Speaker, it must be remembered that when we constitute 8 hours a day's work, instead of 10 hours, every four days give an additional day's work to some workingman who may not have any employment at all. [Applause.]

The applause is in strange contrast with the silence now observed by the Senator from Pennsylvania—

It is one more day's work, one more day's wages, one more opportunity for work and wages, an increased demand for labor. I am in favor of this bill as it is amended by the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McComas].

It applies now only to the labor of men's hands. It applies only to their work. It does not apply to material; it does not apply to transportation.

The balance of it, Mr. President, with the consent of the Senate, I will put in the RECORD. I trust the Senator from Pennsylvania will not object.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah object?

Mr. SMOOT. To what?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To having printed in the RECORD the speech of Mr. McKinley, referred to.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly not, and I approve every word of it.

Mr. PENROSE. I approve every word of it.

The matter referred to is as follows:

It only applies to the actual labor, skilled or unskilled, employed on public works and in the execution of the contracts of the Government. And the Government of the United States ought, finally and in good faith, to set this example of eight hours as constituting a day's work required of laboring men in the service of the United States. [Applause.] The tendency of the times the world over is for shorter hours for labor, shorter hours in the interest of health, shorter hours in the interests of humanity, shorter hours in the interest of the home and the family; and the United States can do no better service to labor and to its own citizens than to set the example to States, to corporations, and to individuals employing men by declaring that, so far as the Government is concerned, eight hours shall constitute a day's work, and be all that is required of its laboring force. [Applause.]

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, this bill should be passed. My colleague, Mr. Morey, has stated what we owe the family in this connection, and Cardinal Manning, in a recent article, spoke noble words on the general subject when he said:

"But if the domestic life of the people be vital above all; if the peace, the purity of homes, the education of children, the duties of wives and mothers, the duties of husbands and of fathers, be written in the natural law of mankind, and if these things are sacred, far beyond anything that can be sold in the market, then I say, if the hours of labor resulting from the unregulated sale of a man's strength and skill shall lead to the destruction of domestic life, to the neglect of children, to turning wives and mothers into living machines, and of fathers and husbands into—what shall I say, creatures of burden?—I will not say any other word—who rise up before the sun and come back when it is set, wearied and able only to take food and lie down to rest, the domestic life of men exists no longer, and we dare not go on in this path."

Mr. Speaker, we owe something to the care, the elevation, the dignity, and the education of labor. We owe something to the workingmen and the families of the workingmen throughout the United States who constitute the large body of our population, and this bill is a step in the right direction. [Applause.]

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill. It has been said that it is a bill to limit the opportunity of the workingman to gain a livelihood. This is not so; it will have the opposite effect. So far as the Government of the United States, as an employer, is concerned, in the limitation for a day's work provided in this bill to eight hours, instead of putting any limitation upon the opportunity of the American freemen to earn a living, it increases and enlarges the opportunity for the workingman to earn a living. [Applause.] Eight hours under the laws of the United States constitute a day's work. That law has been on our statute books for twenty or more years.

Several MEMBERS. Since 1868.

Mr. MCKINLEY. They say around me that it has been on our statute books for 22 years. In all these years it has been "the word of promise to the ear," but by the Government of the United States it has been "broken to the hope." [Applause.] The Government and its officials should be swift to execute and enforce its own laws, and failure in this particular is most reprehensible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it must be remembered that when we constitute 8 hours a day's work, instead of 10 hours, every four days give an additional day's work to some workingman who may not have any employment at all. [Applause.] It is one more day's work, one more day's wages, one more opportunity for work and wages, an increased demand for labor. I am in favor of this bill as it is amended by the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McComas].

It applies now only to the labor of men's hands. It applies only to their work.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CONNELL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Smith].

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, while I work from 16 to 18 hours a day for my constituents, yet I am willing that all laborers should work only 8 hours, unless they are paid for working beyond that time. In the two minutes allowed me I have not time to elaborate on this, but it seems to me, from the discussion so far presented, that there is a misapprehension of this bill by some gentlemen. It does not prevent a person from working more than 8 hours, but it does prevent the Government, when it employs a man to work 8 hours—which, as has been said by the gentleman from Ohio, constitute a day's work under the laws of the land—it prevents the Government of the United States from receiving his labor for 10 hours and only paying him for 8 hours.

A simple reading of the bill will correct the misapprehension:

"Eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics, etc., except in cases of emergency: Provided, That in all such cases the laborers, workmen, or mechanics so employed and working to exceed eight hours per calendar day shall be paid on the basis of eight hours constituting a day's work."

Mr. CUTCHEON. How can they work more than 8 hours when they are not permitted to do so?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Section 2 provides, and that is the point that our friends object to:

"And it shall be unlawful for any such corporation, person, or persons to require or permit any laborer, workman, or mechanic to work more than eight hours in any calendar day"—

And there they stop. But it says—

"to work more than eight hours in any calendar day in doing such work or manufacturing such materials except in the cases and upon the conditions provided in section 1 of this act."

Which provides that if they have worked more than eight hours they shall be paid extra for it. I am heartily in favor of the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That clause which you refer to refers only to the cases of emergency.

Mr. CONNELL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Farquhar].

Mr. FARQUHAR. This eight-hour question will not down with talk. When you can see processions of 30,000 men tramping the streets of our great cities, when those men, independent of Congress and politicians, can make eight-hour laws and contracts, we are a little behind the procession in the House of Representatives.

Now, while the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Butterworth] was talking, if he had devoted a little more time during the morning hour to the discussion of the adjustment bill he would have had all the argument he desired and all the answer. The act of 1868 was repeatedly violated by the officers of the Government, and was so violated even after the proclamation of the President; and when this Congress seeks now to cleat down this law, and then to make it penal or a felony to break the law, gentlemen talk about the liberty of the American citizen and make a stump speech that has nothing to do with the bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FARQUHAR. Now, Mr. Speaker, one word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I know it. One word. This is the first vote of the sense of this Congress and the only opportunity in 20 years that the House of Representatives has had to say whether it is in accord with American thought or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has four minutes remaining.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I think I have six minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has four minutes.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I yield three minutes to my colleague [Mr. Vaux].

Mr. VAUX. Mr. Speaker, very much has been said and eloquently said about the rights of the laboring man, and against all that has been said asking Congress to protect his rights and protect him in the rights of his own independent judgment I have not a word to say. That is a matter entirely within the discretion of the honorable Members of this House; but when they ask me to enact class legislation, and that, too, class legislation the most marked of all that has ever been presented in my time in Federal legislation, and ask that that class legislation be enforced by penalties, by fine and imprisonment, I think class legislation has gone about as far as the American citizen is willing it should go.

Now, a great deal has been said, and I do not criticize or traverse the eloquence that has been emitted in this discussion; but I ask this House to say whether or not, in asking for this system of class legislation, they are going very far from the old doctrine that we were taught, and that for the benefit of these workingmen of this country this class legislation is to be forced by fine and imprisonment; yet, so far as I can see, it seems that it does not apply this imprisonment to anybody but the Government. They say the "Government" is to be imprisoned, the "Government" is to be fined, or anybody "representing the Government" is to be fined or imprisoned.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a practical question?

Mr. VAUX. Certainly, if there is such.

Mr. EVANS. I am in favor of the eight-hour law. I simply speak of it so far as it affects contractors. I am employing mechanics and laborers. They work 10 hours a day. I pay them the scale of wages agreed upon by the amalgamated iron and steel workers, molders, and mechanics. Would I be subject to fine and imprisonment under this bill as a criminal?

Mr. VAUX. Yes, sir; if you employed them on a Government contract.

I ask the attention of the gentleman to the third section:

"That any officer of the Government of the United States, or any person acting under or for such officer, or any contractor with the United States or other person violating any of the provisions of this act, shall for each offense be punished by a fine not less than $50 nor more than $1,000, or imprisonment not more than six months, or be both fined and imprisoned in the discretion of the court."

So that by this law every man employing 20 men who shall unintentionally or accidentally violate this law, these 20 men can apply to have this law put in force, and he can be fined a thousand dollars and imprisoned six months for each offense. If this is not class legislation with a vengeance, I do not know what class legislation is.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I now yield to a minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Flower].

Mr. FLOWER. I desire to offer as an additional section to this bill the provisions of the bill (H. R. 11230) to limit the hours of work of clerks and employees in first and second class post offices, as follows:

"That hereafter eight hours' labor shall constitute a day's work for clerks and employees in all first and second class post offices whose salaries do not exceed $1,400 per annum, for which they shall receive not less than the classified salary for a day's work. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,782,685, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Even if this amendment should not be adopted, I would vote for this bill but for the fact that I am paired with my colleague [Mr. Belden].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as pending.

Mr. KERR of Iowa. I object.

Mr. BLISS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is second to none in importance that has claimed or can claim the attention of this House.

It is the appeal of an element in our country which has already received too little attention at the hands of Congress. Briefly stated, it is the crystallized statement of labor, courteously made, but firmly asking for relief which will elevate and ennoble the wage workers of our land. The true lover of his country must and does recognize that a Government to exist in a prosperous state must have as its basis an intelligent, happy, and prosperous people.

Ignorance among the masses has ever been the bane of civilization. It begets unrest both in the relations of the citizen to the State and to his family. Domestic peace, contentment at the home fireside is the first condition of national peace. We recognize that the safety of the Republic rests upon the happiness and contentment of all her people.

This bill recognizes the claim of the laborers under the Government to be shown the same consideration shown the clerks under the Government. This bill wipes out the distinction so long maintained against the daily laborers employed on Government work. It would be impossible for a private firm to inaugurate this reform alone, for the reason that they must compete with their commercial rivals. But the Government has no competition and can well afford to take the first step, which, I believe, will tend to prepare the country for shorter hours of labor.

It may be said that such legislation is a breach of precedent. Admit it. In this rushing age of thought and measureless activity it is well that we be not too closely wedded to long established precedents. By this bill we say to the wage earners and the world at large that we recognize and adopt that good provision in the divine economy that eight hours were given to man for sleep, eight for labor, and eight for mental development. And while it is not the province of Congress to interfere with the private affairs of our people, while we may not say to the employers of labor how many hours the employed shall work, believing, as we do, that intelligent, well-directed effort is more conducive to the interests of the employer, we say to the world, as far as those who labor for the Government are concerned, eight hours of heaven's sunlight at the beginning and ending of each day is and shall be his for mental and moral development. We are trying no new experiment from one standpoint.

All history shows and all experience teaches that cheerful, contented labor is the most valuable to employers. Alacrity takes the place of sluggishness, and intelligent, well-directed action the place of the lifeless, spiritless machine. The friends of this measure expect much to come of it to laboring men of this country. Their lot is comparatively a hard one. It is not for us to stop now and inquire from what cause or series of causes such great numbers of our fellow citizens are compelled to perform arduous labor in order that they and those they love may live. Such, however, is the condition presented. Be it ours to use such power as we have to lighten this burden.

We present this measure believing that it will carry into the countless homes a degree of the sunlight of hope and good cheer. We have in our country a vast army of unemployed labor. This is due not so much to the suggestion that there is nothing for so many to do as to the sordid, avaricious, grinding policy pursued by so many toward the employed. The employer too often loses sight of the fact that the laborer thinks as he works. He forgets that if discontent and unrest sit where the satisfied soul should dwell this condition not unfrequently bodes no good to his interest. By this bill we set the example to the private employer of labor and confidently expect the result of this legislation to demonstrate that with an opportunity given the wage earner to read and cultivate those finer qualities of his nature more and better service will result.

The American Congress in 1868 placed this law upon the statute books, but it was nugatory for want of penalties to enforce it. This measure supplies the remedy. This measure will put in operation the law passed 22 years ago, but which after all these years has proven fatally defective because wanting in penalties to enforce it. We predict as the provisions of this legislation go into effect a new dignity will attach to labor. We expect to see the army of the unemployed grow less, and as a consequence fewer strikes, and consequently less conflict between those handmaidens of civilization, capital and labor.

Mr. Speaker, I regard this bill as the key note to a song which will swell and fill our land with joy. While apparently a small measure, in it, in my humble judgment, we will yet find, the germ of a bountiful harvest of much that makes a people happy.

Let the American laborer be recognized as worthy of congressional care and guardianship; let him see that the Nation recognizes that in his hands as much as in any other rests the responsibility of Government; let him, in other words, be able to take his loved ones to his bosom and say, "My Government is considerate for my interests," and we may rest assured he will respond with this declaration, "I love my country in return."

Mr. Speaker, I desire to emphasize a thought heretofore but briefly alluded to. It is the absolute necessity to the existence of liberty for an enlightened citizenship. Men, as a rule, are not ignorant or uninformed from choice, but from necessity. Let the literature of the day come to the home of the toiler with time to master it at his command; let the father have time morning and evening to become acquainted with his wife and children and cultivate those qualities which beautify the home; and who will deny that better homes, better husbands, better wives and children must bless our land? And if I am correct in this—and I challenge successful contradiction—a more intelligent, contented, and consequently a purer citizenship will bless our land.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time under the special order for the discussion of this bill has expired. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the previous question is operating upon this bill and pending amendments.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from New Jersey is through with his speech he can not hold the floor any longer.

Mr. HUGHES. I have been recognized, and I was about to make a motion that the Senate take a recess.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from New Jersey if he will withhold his motion for just a moment?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say most emphatically that Gov. Hughes has never declared against an eight-hour day's work. It has been stated on the floor of the Senate so many times in the last day or so that I think it ought to now be denied. He has denounced the so-called Adamson law, and justly so.

I want to say to the Senator from New Jersey that the Adamson law is not an eight-hour day law. It was not intended to be such. It is an eight-hour wage law. No Senator can truthfully claim that it is an eight-hour day law. It provides that certain trainmen shall be paid their present wages for 10 hours of work on the basis of an eight-hour wage day.

I agree with every word that Mr. McKinley uttered in his speech, a part of which has just been read by the Senator from New Jersey. That part of Mr. McKinley's speech that the Senator read claiming that with an eight-hour day every four days enables another working man to secure a day's work is absolutely sound. The eight-hour wage law passed last Saturday does not give a single working man a day's extra work. It does not provide that the trainmen affected shall work but 8 hours out of the 24. They may work 16 hours if required to do so by the railroad, and it will be no violation of the law. But 8 hours was made the basis for pay instead of 10. This administration may try to make the American people think otherwise, but will fail.

Mr. HUGHES. In connection with my remarks I should like to have printed instead of reading a statement with reference to civil-service appointments. Accusations were made on the floor by Senators, and rather than read it at this time I should like to print it in connection with the remarks I have just made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WARREN. Let me ask if it is a copy or is it some original matter?

Mr. HUGHES. Does the Senator ask if it was prepared by somebody else?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. It was prepared by somebody else, but it has my approval.

Mr. JONES. The Senate has a rule under which we do not print our speeches.

Mr. HUGHES. I am going to print it as a part of my remarks.

Mr. JONES. It was prepared by some one else?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. Who prepared it?

Mr. HUGHES. I do not want to be cross-examined by the Senator. The Senator can object if he likes. I never asked the Senator that question. He has appeared on this floor with a great many reams of printed paper that I know he has not prepared. I have never had the temerity to ask him who did it.

Mr. PENROSE. I have not asked to have anything printed that I have not spoken.

Mr. HUGHES. But I am trying to do something the Senator did not do. The Senator has stood here on several occasions and read quires and reams of paper which perhaps somebody else prepared. I do not know, but I suspected somebody else had prepared it; but I would not ask him. I would not be guilty of the bad taste.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator stated that this had been prepared by some one else.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. I had a natural curiosity to know who prepared it.

Mr. HUGHES. Who prepared the last speech the Senator delivered?

Mr. PENROSE. All the speeches I have delivered I have myself prepared. The Senator voluntarily stated that he did not prepare it.

Mr. HUGHES. I had to state it because it was true.

Mr. PENROSE. I know the Senator would not state anything that was not true. If my inquiry is embarrassing to the Senator, I will withdraw it. I view the document with a great deal of suspicion.

Mr. HUGHES. I may agree with the Senator.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"On August 10, 1916, Senator PENROSE criticized the administration's record with respect to the appointment of postal employees, especially fourth-class postmasters, charging that the department had been actuated by political motives in making appointments and removals. The remarks of the Senator are so misleading that the following reply is presented categorically.

"Senator PENROSE said:

"It was given forth that the postmasters were to be permitted to serve their four years' tenure of office. That has always been a custom recognized by the Republican Party. These officials are not within the classified service, and, so far as the people are educated to the civil-service standards, they are looked upon as the spoils of war; but there has always been a thought that it was for the interest of the service, and perhaps to the advantage of the party in power, to permit each postmaster to serve out his four years, and then, when his four years' term had expired, the question of a new appointment came up. Otherwise this enormous patronage, amounting to many thousand postmasters, was thrown upon the party in power all at once; changes of a sweeping and radical character were made, the party in power was embarrassed, and the service was disturbed.

"An intimation that that rule would be observed was held out by the Postmaster General or some accredited official of the administration. It had always been the custom of Republican administrations when in power. I know that following Cleveland's last administration, which is the most recent precedent, in Pennsylvania I do not recall a case where the Senators from Pennsylvania or the Representatives from that State requested the removal of a Democratic postmaster until his term had expired; and even toward the expiration of the Congress prior to Mr. Cleveland's relinquishing the presidential office the Republicans in the Senate cheerfully acquiesced in the confirmation of Democratic postmasters up to the 4th of March. On the other hand, when Mr. Wilson was elected, we witnessed the deliberate 'holdup,' through a threatened filibuster, of all the long list of nominees for postmasters and other appointments sent in by President Taft during the short session of the last Congress during his administration. Then, when the present administration assumed office, the postmasters all over the country were ruthlessly beheaded. The intimation that they were to be permitted to serve four years was cast to the winds; and, further than that, honorable men, who had served as postmasters during the 18 years of Republican control, were besmirched by innuendo, trumped-up charges, and accusations trivial in nature, but calculated to reflect on their character for the rest of their careers, just as charges were trumped up against Durand.

"The charge that Republican postmasters have been removed from the service without cause is absolutely untrue. Postmasters appointed by the last administration have been permitted to serve out their four-year terms except in a few cases where it has been shown, after careful investigation of charges presented against them, in 99 per cent of the cases by Republican inspectors, that they were incompetent to perform properly, or were shamefully neglecting, their duties as postmasters. In this connection it is pertinent to say that the requirements are much more exacting now than under the past administration. Every postmaster, by order of the present Postmaster General, is required to actually supervise the work of his office and devote not less than eight hours daily to his official duties. Their failure to do this is sufficient and just cause for their removal and they have been removed for this cause. Postmasters appointed by this administration who have failed to measure up to the requirements also have been removed.

"Senator PENROSE said:

"I know, as a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, how Republican officials, honorable men, efficient officers, have been humiliated in their homes and besmirched down here at the department, with no opportunity to secure an investigation and no opportunity to defend themselves, subjected to an infamous and cowardly attack, which I resent and every other honorable man would resent. The methods pursued, perhaps, more than what was done afford a source of serious complaint, not only in the Post Office Department but in all the other departments.

"Let the Senator be specific. The truth is that this administration has been overscrupulous about these removals. It has refused to act on charges unless they have been thoroughly investigated and conclusively established and confirmed by reports of post-office inspectors, based on information procured from impartial and disinterested sources. Furthermore, in this connection a new rule was adopted to avoid even the chance of partisan discrimination.

"Early in this administration the Postmaster General adopted the rule of referring to the Civil Service Commission every case of alleged political activity on the part of presidential postmasters. This action was decided upon as being in direct line with his policy of complying not only with the letter but with the spirit of the civil-service rules and regulations. This action was voluntary on the part of the Postmaster General and had never in the history of the Government been done by any Cabinet officer.

"The following letter addressed to the Civil Service Commission by the Postmaster General under date of July 2, 1913, indicates the action taken by the Post Office Department in cases of this kind:

JULY 2, 1913.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I send you herewith the report of Post Office Inspectors Mosby and Robinson, with certain memoranda attached thereto, relating to the recent inspection made of the Newark, N. J., post office. The recommendation is made that Mr. Frank J. Book, postmaster, be removed for pernicious political activity during his incumbency of the office.

I transmit the report and memorandum to you for such suggestions as you may see fit to give. The recommendation for the removal of Postmaster Book is for the reason of partisan activity. It is my intention in all cases where offensive partisanship is the sole reason upon which the recommendation for removal is based to refer same to you for suggestion.

Very sincerely,
A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

"Mr. PENROSE is challenged to name one case where this rule has been violated. It is easy to make the broad general statement, but let him specify.

"In referring to the criticisms of the National Civil Service Reform League against the administration for alleged violations of the civil service, Senator PENROSE quoted from the statements of the league, as follows:

"The league goes on to say:

"'Another feature of the national administration which calls for serious consideration and early action is the lack of any real system of promotion on merit in the departments.'

"The fact of the matter is, Mr. President, the demotions and the promotions have utterly disregarded merit within the classified service. Good Democrats were promoted and good Republicans demoted.

"There has been less partisanship in the selection and promotion of postal employees during the past three and one-half years than under any Republican administration. Take the force of post-office inspectors as an illustration. When Mr. Burleson was sworn in as Postmaster General nine out of every ten of the post-office inspectors were Republicans. In attempting to correct this prostitution of the civil service Mr. Burleson has been so careful not to do injury or injustice to any meritorious inspector that a majority of the positions in each of the higher grades of inspectors are still held by Republicans, with the exception of the positions of inspectors in charge, which are divided equally between the Democrats and Republicans.

"Under the last administration the position of chief post-office inspector was taken from the classified service and a man from private life was named chief inspector. Postmaster General Burleson restored this position to the classified service and promoted to the position a man who had a classified status.

"Senator PENROSE said:

"Now, about the Civil Service Commission, Mr. President. On August 10 we noticed in the Washington Post the astonishing information that the officials of the Civil Service League can not get access to the records of the commission. I will ask the Secretary to read this short extract from the Post.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

"The Secretary read as follows:

"'SEES CIVIL SERVICE SECRECY—REFORM LEAGUE CHARGES IT WAS NOT ALLOWED TO INSPECT RECORDS.

"'NEW YORK, August 9.

"'Charges that the Federal Civil Service Commission has inaugurated a policy of secrecy which threatens to endanger the civil-service law and has been sustained in that action by President Wilson were made by the National Civil Service Reform League to-day.

"'The league made public correspondence it has had with the president of the Civil Service Commission and also with President Wilson. League officers charged that the Federal Civil Service Commission for the first time, with the exception of one short period in 1899, refused permission for an examination of its records on the ground that an attempt might be made to mislead the public and attack and embarrass the Wilson administration. The league wanted to observe the practical effect of the Executive order of May 7, 1913, requiring fourth-class postmasters to submit to a competitive examination, declaring that in many instances the effect of the act was simply to replace Republicans with Democrats.'

"Mr. PENROSE. That is an extraordinary position for the Civil Service Commission to take with the consent of the President. It has only been taken heretofore upon the one occasion referred to, and I am not advised as to the reasons for it then; but upon every other occasion under Republican administration the books and the data and the archives have been opened. Such should be the practice of every department, with a few exceptions. How can it embarrass the administration of President Wilson to permit the Civil Service League to examine these archives? Is there anything there that shows guilt, or that shows violations of law, or that shows an entire disregard for the merit system, that these doors must be kept locked and closed to an honorable and respectable association which have for years, from their point of view, and to the best of their ability, endeavored to advance a propaganda in which they believe? I charge now that they are kept locked because they do not dare open them to the National Civil Service League, because the disclosures there would be too shocking and glaring to everyone, not alone to those interested in the merit system but to those interested in efficient public service.

"In connection with the charge of the National Civil Service Reform League that they had been denied access to the records of the Civil Service Commission showing the action taken with regard to the appointment of fourth-class postmasters, attention is invited to the letter of Hon. Charles M. Galloway, a member of the Civil Service Commission, addressed to the editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger under date of August 12, 1916, in which a full statement is made regarding the action taken in this matter:

A POLICY OF SECRECY—DENIAL OF THE CHARGE THAT THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION HAS DEPARTED FROM CUSTOM.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 12, 1916.

To the EDITOR OF PUBLIC LEDGER.

SIR: In an editorial article in your issue of August 10, 1916, you say, "The exposure by the National Civil Service Reform League of the policy of secrecy adopted by the Federal Civil Service Commission in regard to the examinations for fourth-class postmasters comes at an unfortunate moment for the President and his Cabinet defenders." In the interest of fairness permit me to make this statement in reply thereto:

The charge of the National Civil Service Reform League that the United States Civil Service Commission has inaugurated a policy of secrecy with reference to its files and correspondence is not correct. The claim of the league that with the exception of a brief period in 1899 the commission has heretofore extended to the league the general privilege of examining its files can not be substantiated. With reference to this matter, there has been absolutely no change from the practice of the commission that has prevailed continuously ever since the establishment of the commission in 1883. While the commission has often in its discretion furnished to the league and to individuals specific information regarding civil-service matters, the league has never possessed or exercised the general privilege of inspecting the files and correspondence of the commission. The practice of the commission with reference to the inspection of its files is precisely the same as that which prevails in every executive department of the Government. The reasons for this policy are fully set forth in the commission's letter to the National Civil Service Reform League, published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 11.

Few persons after mature consideration will consider it good administrative policy for one department, bureau, or commission of the Government, whose records are not by law public records, to turn over its files to any voluntary organization or to any individual, to be used as the basis of an investigation of another department, bureau, or commission.

CHARLES M. GALLOWAY,
Commissioner.

"Under date of October 15, 1912, just prior to the presidential election of that year, President Taft issued an Executive order blanketing into the classified civil service thousands of fourth-class postmasters without requiring any test whatever as to their qualifications. On May 7, 1913, President Wilson issued a modifying order requiring the incumbents at the offices covered by President Taft's order to stand an open competitive examination with any other applicants who desired to compete. Positive instructions, which were followed, were issued by the Postmaster General to the First Assistant Postmaster General to select in every instance the person at the head of the eligible list, except in those cases where good and valid service reasons were submitted to the department showing that this would not be in the best interests of the service. These written instructions provided further that in no case should the second or third eligible be chosen unless the appointment of one of the highest standing eligibles has been shown to be inadvisable from the standpoint of the greatest efficiency in the Postal Service. And the reason for passing the first or second eligible was required to be noted on the record.

"Under President Wilson's Executive order 35,900 cases were acted upon, and 66 per cent of the incumbent postmasters were successful in the examination and retained their positions and have been given a classified status.

"To show how very unfair and inconsistent and how far from the facts are some of the statements in connection with their charges that the Post Office Department and other departments of the Government are not observing the spirit and letter of civil service, attention is invited to the following letter from the Postmaster General addressed to the chairman of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee of the House of Representatives, Hon. JOHN A. MOON, under date of Demember 20, 1913, showing that at the very inception of this administration an earnest effort was made, which has been continued up to the present time, to see that absolute fairness and justness prevailed in the administration of civil service, and that instead of the Post Office Department endeavoring to take postmasterships out of civil service an earnest effort was being made to extend the benefits of civil service, as alleged, in every possible way:

DECEMBER 20, 1913.

Hon. JOHN A. MOON,
Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR JUDGE MOON: I am somewhat disturbed by a paragraph in this morning's paper to the effect that your committee has voted to put into the Post Office appropriation bill for the next fiscal year a provision removing the position of assistant postmaster from the classified service. I think the enactment of such a provision would be subversive of the best interests of the Postal Service, and certainly it would militate against the effectiveness of the policy outlined in the last annual report of the department.

There are at this time 2,464 post offices of the first and second classes in which the positions of assistant postmaster are classified. All save about 100 of the persons occupying these positions are now within the classified service. In these 100 cases the benefits and rights of classification have been withheld from the incumbents because they have failed to satisfy this department as to their capacity for efficient service.

In the interest of the most efficient and effective Postal Service it is vitally necessary that the positions of assistant postmaster be filled by persons specially qualified to discharge the duties thereof, and I feel that no person should hold the position of assistant postmaster whose capacity and efficiency has not been properly and thoroughly tested. Among the qualifications necessary for this position are practical knowledge of and experience in post-office work, coupled with administrative ability. The present administration has been rigidly enforcing the policy of filling these position either by the promotion of competent employees already in the office or by the transfer of experienced employees from some other branch of the Postal Service. Only in rare instances are postmasters permitted to fill the position otherwise, and then only by selection from a certification of eligibles resulting from an open competitive civil-service examination.

In connection with this subject, I wish to direct your attention to the following excerpts from the last annual report of this department:

"The prime consideration in perfecting the personnel of the Postal Service should be to recognize efficiency and to eliminate partisanship. It is the earnest hope that ultimately all positions will be covered under the classified civil service and that merit and faithfulness will be the sole consideration in making appointments, as well as promotions." (Page 8.)

* * * * * * * *

"It is hoped that by thus maintaining a high standard of efficiency for postmasters and keeping paramount the interest of the postal service in making appointments that the way will be made clear for the eventual classification of all presidential postmasters." (Page 43.)

* * * * * * * *

"The post-office system is essentially a business institution. It touches every home, comes in contact with every commercial institution and with those engaged in every line of industrial enterprise throughout the country, and in the nature of things it is highly important that only the most efficient employees should be in its service. For this reason the merit system should be adhered to in the Post Office Department above all others in order to secure the very highest standard of efficiency in the conduct of its affairs." (Page 43.)

I have received no official advice as to the accuracy of the newspaper report referred to, and therefore my anxiety and deep interest in the Postal Service must be the excuse for this letter. I trust, however, that in its wisdom your committee will not see fit to recommend the enactment of the legislation referred to.

Very sincerely,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

"Senator PENROSE said:

"It is well known, and can not be denied, that the invasion of all these new, untried, and inexperienced men as postmasters all over the country resulted in an utter demoralization of the service. * * * I have visited the State of the Senator from Florida and have seen postmasters in charge there at some of the post offices who would hardly be competent, physically or mentally, to sweep the streets.

"Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I am sure the postmasters to whom the Senator refers must have been Republicans.

"Mr. PENROSE. No; this was a good Democrat I had in mind. There was only one Republican in the town, and he——

"Mr. BRYAN. He was the postmaster, I have no doubt.

"If this charge made by Senator PENROSE is true, it is a most serious indictment of the Post Office Department as at present managed. But is it true? Read what Senator PENROSE said about the Auditor for the Post Office Department:

"Mr SMITH of Georgia. Certainly it is; and I was giving mine.

"Some one sends me a memorandum giving me the name of an auditor in the Post Office Department and states that he is a partisan Republican. I do not know whether he is or not. I will say that I have found him as courteous in my dealings with him as anyone else I have found; and I will not add his name personally to this controversy, because whatever party he belongs to, I have found him exceedingly pleasant to deal with, and I am glad he is left, no matter what party he is connected with.

"Mr. PENROSE. If he is the gentleman I have in mind, he is kept there because a new man absolutely could not do his work. He is a skilled expert, has been in the department a great number of years, and is kept there, not out of any love and affection, but simply because the department could not get along without him.

"Note Senator PENROSE'S eulogy of Auditor Kram, who has better facilities for knowing the competency of postmasters throughout the United States than any other officer of the Government, not excepting the Postmaster General or the First Assistant Postmaster General themselves, and then read the following letter from Mr. Kram, in which he comments upon the high standard of efficiency now existing among the postmasters of the country under the present administration:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 9, 1916.

Hon. ALBERT S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

MY DEAR MR. BURLESON: You will doubtless be gratified to learn that 90 per cent of postmasters' quarterly postal accounts for the period April 1 to June 30, 1916, have been audited, and that the audit will be completed on the 15th instant. This result will have been attained in 35 working days as compared with the audit of the accounts for the quarter ended March 31, 1916, which was completed in 41 days.

The accounts so far as tabulated indicate that the net postal surplus for the fiscal year will exceed $4,500,000.

The submission of the financial statement at the earliest date in the history of the department is to be credited to the improved system of accounting in successful operation largely through your hearty support, and the care and promptness exercised by postmasters in the preparation of their accounts. At no time in the past 25 years, during which I have been connected with the auditing department, has the standard of efficiency among postmasters been so high as at the present.

Sincerely, yours,

CHAS. S. KRAM,
Auditor for the Post Office Department.

"In striking contrast to the scrupulous and painstaking effort of the Post Office Department and other departments of the Government under the present administration to observe the spirit and letter of civil service, attention is invited to the gross perversion of civil service practiced under the last administration, as shown by the following statement from an employee of the Post Office Department, showing that for some time after the issuance of President Taft's Executive order, October 26, 1912, the Republican officials of the Post Office Department continued to make appointments of fourth-class postmasters on the recommendation of Members of Congress or advisers in deliberate violation of civil service and the Executive order of the President. The statement follows:

"STATEMENT OF POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

"POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
"FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
"Washington, August 12, 1916.

"I was acting as Assistant Superintendent of the Division of Postmasters' appointments in your stead while you were on vacation during the period of October 26, 1912, when President Taft issued his orders to the effect that all postmasters appointed on and after a certain date should be made upon the report of a post-office inspector where the compensation was less than $500 and upon the certification of the Civil Service Commission where the compensation was $500 or more. The Journal of October 26 was the date of the last appointments made upon the recommendation of Members of Congress or advisers. The records show that some 402 appointments were made upon this date. The Journal was extended over two or three days—that is, appointments were made later than October 26, but bore the date of the 26th. This action was taken at the direction of Mr. Wyman, Superintendent of the Division of Postmasters' Appointments.

"All appointments were ordered made wherever the adviser was on file regardless of whether the case was otherwise complete within itself.

"The Postmaster General demonstrated his belief in the merit system by the recommendation made in his annual report for the first full fiscal year of this administration. On page 67 of his report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, you will find a recommendation to Congress that legislation be enacted which would permit the placing of third-class postmasterships under the civil service. This would throw open to competitive examination over 6,000 positions paying from $1,000 to $1,900 per annum. If this recommendation had been approved by Congress, the President at once would have issued an Executive order classifying the positions of third-class postmasters and providing that the qualifications of the present incumbents be tested by competitive examinations under civil-service rules and regulations and in accordance with the methods followed under the Executive order of May 7, 1913, for testing the qualifications of the incumbents of fourth-class postmasterships.

"Again, in the annual report of the Postmaster General for the fiscal year 1915 he went further and recommended that authority be given to place not only the third-class postmasterships but also the second-class postmasterships under the civil service. This would throw open to competitive examination over 2,000 additional places paying from $2,000 to $2,900 per annum. These recommendations to Congress were for the placing of all but the 500 first-class postmasterships under the civil service; but no incumbent postmaster would, in the event that this legislation became law, be permitted to retain his office except after having taken an open competitive examination to prove his fitness for the position.

"In addition to earnestly endeavoring to promote the highest efficiency among postmasters, the Post Office Department has also adopted an efficiency system as required by law, and early in his tenure the Postmaster General appointed an efficiency board, designating as one member of the three on that board a representative from the Civil Service Commission, and all promotion of clerks in the Post Office Department is made only after careful investigation by this board and upon their recommendation.

"It has been charged on the floor of Congress and in certain newspapers that Congress has created boards, bureaus, and commissions, and that persons have been appointed on these bodies without being required to qualify under any kind of a civil-service examination. It is believed by some that these charges have been inspired by those having selfish political motives, aided and abetted by Republican Congressmen and Senators and others actuated by partisan considerations, to create a false impression in the minds of the people with reference to the attitude of this administration toward civil service. The truth is that anyone with ordinary intelligence knows that it is impracticable in some cases to pass through the rather elaborate procedure ordinarily required to secure eligibles because in some cases the law requires in the exigencies of the service that these positions be filled immediately, and in other instances men with technical knowledge and training along certain lines of industry and education is required, and no eligible register has been established from which to make such appointments. Therefore it is imperatively necessary to waive civil-service rules and regulations at times in order to secure specially trained men to fill responsible positions and which positions must be filled immediately to meet the emergencies of the service. Thus this explains why certain appointments may have been made on boards and commissions under this administration without civil service; but the comparatively few appointments of this character which are entirely justified and right under all the circumstances is as nothing contrasted with the scrupulous, painstaking, and conscientious observance of the spirit and letter of civil service by the present administration.

"Certain men and sets of men who have been so loud in their denunciation of this administration were strangely silent under the last administration, although in several instances they occupied positions which carried with them an influence that would have redounded to the advancement of civil service if they had preferred to use it in that way instead of, as they did, to promote their political interests.

"These same men—several of them Republicans in Congress, enjoying the large salaries that their offices carry—have seen fit to criticize this administration because certain departments have asked the President to issue Executive orders to waive civil-service requirements in a very few exceptionally meritorious cases, such as, for example, providing a means of livelihood for two or three unfortunate widows whose husbands—Republicans—died after years of faithful service to their Government and as a result of illness or disease contracted while in the service and in line of duty, or in the cases of some friendless and needy and deserving colored men who had rendered long and loyal service. In view of the fact that the Executive orders here referred to were secured for Republicans and that they were in the interest of rank and file of the toiling masses of Government employees as against the favored and privileged few, it comes in poor grace for the more fortunate on the Government pay roll to condemn an administration that has been guided by justice and fairness and charity in the treatment of its employees rather than having been controlled by selfish political bias and partisanship.

"If time permitted, much could be said here on the subject of civil service during a long Republican régime that might not be creditable to those particular Republican politicians who, in order to make political capital, have vainly tried to injure an administration which has been conspicuous for its scrupulous observance of the spirit and letter of civil service."

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me?

Mr. HUGHES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator withholds his motion for a recess for a moment. I desire to state, that the RECORD may contain my remarks, that the speech of the able Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which was started by making references appropriate to the speech that I made on the floor touching Mexico, was concluded after midnight. That the allusions of the able Senator touching the administration of Mexican affairs and the President would have been replied to by me, and both premises and conclusions of the Senator would have been disclosed as all erroneous but for the fact that the speech was closed on the part of the able Senator from New Mexico at 5 minutes to 1 o'clock in the morning, and at such an inappropriate hour I could not take the floor. The speech could not have been replied to at all at such time without interfering with the pressing business of the Senate, the agreeing to the revenue bill, as well as working great inconvenience and discomfort of its Members.

RECESS.

Mr. HUGHES. I insist on my motion that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m., Friday, September 8, 1916) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock a. m., Friday September 8, 1916.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate September 7, 1916.

SOLICITOR OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Charles D. Mahaffie, of Portland, Oreg., to be Solicitor for the Department of the Interior, vice Alexander T. Vogelsang, nominated to be First Assistant Secretary Department of the Interior.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

CAVALRY ARM.

Lieut. Col. Alonzo Gray, Cavalry, unassigned, to be colonel from August 27, 1916, vice Col. Cunliffe H. Murray, Ninth Cavalry, retired from active service August 26, 1916.

Maj. Oren B. Meyer, Fourteenth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from July 2, 1916, vice Lieut. Col. George L. Byram, Cavalry, unassigned, retired from active service July 1, 1916.

Maj. Charles J. Symmonds, Ninth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from July 12, 1916, vice Lieut. Col. Francis H. Beach, Cavalry, unassigned, promoted.

Maj. Charles W. Fenton, Second Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from July 21, 1916, vice Lieut. Col. Matthew C. Butler, jr., unassigned, who died July 20, 1916.

Maj. Edward D. Anderson, Sixth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from August 27, 1916, vice Lieut. Col. Alonzo Gray, Cavalry, unassigned, promoted.

To be majors, to fill casual vacancies.

Capt. Charles E. Stodter, Seventh Cavalry, from July 1, 1916, vice Maj. Michael M. McNamee, unassigned, promoted.

Capt. Alexander M. Miller, Eleventh Cavalry, from July 1, 1916, vice Maj. Ralph Harrison, First Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. Charles B. Drake, Cavalry, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps, from July 1, 1916, vice Maj. Charles D. Rhodes, unassigned, promoted.

Capt. Harry O. Williard, Fifth Cavalry, from July 1, 1916, vice Maj. George T. Langhorne, Eighth Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. Lucius R. Holbrook, Cavalry, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps, from July 1, 1916, vice Maj. Charles Young, Tenth Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. John P. Wade, Second Cavalry, from July 1, 1916, vice Maj. Francis C. Marshall, Fifteenth Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. Elvin R. Heiberg, Cavalry, unassigned, from July 1, 1916, vice Maj. James A. Ryan, Thirteenth Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. Ola W. Bell, Fourteenth Cavalry, from July 1, 1916, vice Maj. James J. Hornbrook, Sixth Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. Abraham G. Lott, Fifteenth Cavalry, from July 1, 1916, vice Maj. Samuel G. Jones, Fifteenth Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. Edward L. King, Second Cavalry, from July 1, 1916, vice Maj. Melvin W. Rowell, Eleventh Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. Samuel F. Dallam, Seventh Cavalry, from July 1, 1916, vice Maj. Lawrence J. Fleming, Fifth Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. William Kelly, jr., Eighth Cavalry, from July 1, 1916, vice Maj. Charles B. Drake, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps.

Capt. Henry C. Whitehead, Twelfth Cavalry, from July 1, 1916, vice Maj. Lucius R. Holbrook, detailed in the Quartermater Corps.

Capt. William D. Chitty, First Cavalry, from July 2, 1916, vice Maj. Oren B. Meyer, Fourteenth Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. Alfred E. Kennington, Tenth Cavalry, from July 10, 1916, vice Maj. Walter C. Babcock, unassigned, detailed in the General Staff Corps.

Capt. Edward P. Orton, Fifth Cavalry, from July 12, 1916, vice Maj. Charles J. Symmonds, Ninth Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. Robert B. Powers, Cavalry, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps, from July 15, 1916, vice Maj. William T. Johnston, Eighth Cavalry, detailed in the Adjutant General's Department.

Capt. Francis H. Pope, Cavalry, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps, from July 15, 1916, vice Maj. Robert B. Powers, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps.

Capt. Herman A. Sievert, Seventh Cavalry, from July 15, 1916, vice Maj. Francis H. Pope, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps.

Capt. George E. Mitchell, Sixth Cavalry, from August 27, 1916, vice Maj. Edward D. Anderson, Sixth Cavalry, promoted.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

First Lieut. Francis K. Newcomer, Corps of Engineers, to be captain from August 12, 1916, vice Capt. Clarence H. Knight, honorably discharged August 11, 1916.

Second Lieut. William M. Hoge, jr., Corps of Engineers, to be first lieutenant from August 12, 1916, vice First Lieut. Francis K. Newcomer, promoted.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

Lieut. Col. John P. Hains, Coast Artillery Corps, to be colonel from August 22, 1916, vice Col. John W. Ruckman, appointed brigadier general.

Maj. George T. Patterson, Coast Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from August 22, 1916, vice Lieut. Col. John P. Hains, promoted.

INFANTRY ARM.

Maj. Willis Uline, Eighth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from July 10, 1916, subject to examination required by law, vice Lieut. Col. James W. McAndrew, Infantry, unassigned, detailed in the General Staff Corps.

Maj. Charles C. Clark, Infantry, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from July 19, 1916, vice Lieut. Col. Charles C. Ballou, Twenty-fourth Infantry, promoted.

Maj. Vernon A. Caldwell, Twenty-third Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from July 19, 1916, subject to examination required by law, vice Lieut. Col. Charles C. Clark, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps.

Maj. Edmund L. Butts, Twelfth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from July 26, 1916, subject to examination required by law, vice Lieut. Col. James T. Dean, Infantry, unassigned, detailed in The Adjutant General's Department.

Maj. Henry J. Hunt, Infantry, unassigned, to be lieutenant colonel from July 26, 1916, vice Lieut. Col. Frederic D. Evans, unassigned, detailed in The Adjutant General's Department.

Maj. Charles Miller, Infantry, unassigned, to be lieutenant colonel from August 10, 1916, vice Lieut. Col. Erneste V. Smith, Sixth Infantry, promoted.

Capt. Charles H. Bridges, Infantry, unassigned, to be major from July 10, 1916, vice Maj. Willis Uline, Eighth Infantry, promoted.

Capt. John Robertson, Eighteenth Infantry, to be major from July 10, 1916, vice Maj. Oliver Edwards, unassigned, detailed in the General Staff Corps.

Capt. James V. Heidt, Ninth Infantry, to be major from July 10, 1916, vice Maj. Briant H. Wells, unassigned, detailed in the General Staff Corps.

Capt. Charles S. Lincoln, Infantry, unassigned, to be major from July 15, 1916, vice Maj. John E. Woodward, Seventh Infantry, detailed in The Adjutant General's Department.

Capt. Patrick H. Mullay, Thirteenth Infantry, to be major from July 15, 1916, vice Maj. Orrin R. Wolfe, Twenty-sixth Infantry, detailed in The Adjutant General's Department.

Capt. Robert McCleave, Twenty-second Infantry, to be major from July 19, 1916, vice Maj. Vernon A. Caldwell, Twenty-third Infantry, promoted.

Capt. Monroe C. Kerth, Infantry, detailed in the General Staff Corps, to be major from July 20, 1916, subject to examination required by law, vice Maj. Ernest B. Gose, Infantry, unassigned, retired from active service July 19, 1916.

Capt. Lambert W. Jordan, jr., Sixth Infantry, to be major from July 20, 1916, subject to examination required by law, vice Maj. Monroe C. Kerth, unassigned, detailed in the General Staff Corps.

Capt. James B. Gowen, Tenth Infantry, to be major from July 23, 1916, vice Maj. Joseph Frazier, Twenty-sixth Infantry, retired from active service July 22, 1916.

Capt. Harvey W. Miller, Twenty-eighth Infantry, to be major from July 26, 1916, subject to examination required by law, vice Maj. Edmund L. Butts, Twelfth Infantry, promoted.

Capt. Daniel G. Berry, Twenty-fourth Infantry, to be major from July 26, 1916, subject to examination required by law, vice Maj. Henry J. Hunt, Infantry, unassigned, promoted.

PORTO RICO REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

To be captains with rank from June 3, 1916, to fill original vacancies.

First Lieut. Jaime Nadal, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry.

First Lieut. Eduardo Iriarte, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry.

First Lieut. Teofilo Marxuach, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry.

First Lieut. Eugenio C. de Hostos, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry.

To be captains, to fill casual vacancies.

First Lieut. Louis S. Emmanuelli, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, from July 20, 1916, vice Capt. Miles K. Taulbee, appointed major.

First Lieut. Pascual Lopez, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, from July 21, 1916, vice Capt. Orval P. Townshend, appointed lieutenant colonel.

First Lieut. Felix Emmanuelli, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, from July 21, 1916, vice Capt. John M. Field, appointed major.

First Lieut. Daniel Rodriguez, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, from July 21, 1916, vice Capt. Edwin J. Griffith, appointed major.

To be first lieutenants with rank from June 3, 1916, to fill original vacancies.

Second Lieut. Adolfo J. de Hostos, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry.

Second Lieut. Enrique de Orbeta, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry.

Second Lieut. Enrique Urrutia, jr., Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry.

Second Lieut. Arturo Moreno, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry.

Second Lieut. Carlos M. Lopez, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry.

Second Lieut. Rafael Bird, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry.

To be first lieutenants, to fill casual vacancies.

Second Lieut. Serafin M. Montesinos, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, from June 3, 1916, vice First Lieut. Jaime Nadal, promoted.

Second Lieut. Pedro A. Hernandez, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, from June 3, 1916, vice First Lieut. Eduardo Iriarte, promoted.

Second Lieut. Manuel Font, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, from June 3, 1916, vice First Lieut. Teofilo Marxuach, promoted.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate September 7, 1916.

SOLICITOR OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Charles D. Mahaffie to be Solicitor of the Department of the Interior.

COAST GUARD.

Second Lieut. of Engineers Frederick Harvey Young to be first lieutenant of engineers.

Third Lieut. of Engineers Ellis Reed-Hill to be second lieutenant of engineers.

Third Lieut. of Engineers Mayson White Torbet to be second lieutenant of engineers.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

First Lieut. Francis N. Newcomer to be captain.
Second Lieut. William M. Hoge, jr., to be first lieutenant.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

Lieut. Col. John P. Hains to be colonel.
Maj. George T. Patterson to be lieutenant colonel.

INFANTRY ARM.

Maj. Willis Uline to be lieutenant colonel.
Maj. Charles C. Clark to be lieutenant colonel.
Maj. Vernon A. Caldwell to be lieutenant colonel.
Maj. Edmund L. Butts to be lieutenant colonel.
Maj. Henry J. Hunt to be lieutenant colonel.
Maj. Charles Miller to be lieutenant colonel.
Capt. Charles H. Bridges to be major.
Capt. John Robertson to be major.
Capt. James V. Heidt to be major.
Capt. Charles S. Lincoln to be major.
Capt. Patrick H. Mullay to be major.
Capt. Robert McCleave to be major.
Capt. Monroe C. Kerth to be major.
Capt. Lambert W. Jordan, jr., to be major.
Capt. James B. Gowen to be major.
Capt. Harvey W. Miller to be major.
Capt. Daniel G. Berry to be major.

CAVALRY ARM.

Lieut. Col. Alonzo Gray to be colonel.
Maj. Oren B. Meyer to be lieutenant colonel.
Maj. Charles J. Symmonds to be lieutenant colonel.
Maj. Charles W. Fenton to be lieutenant colonel.
Maj. Edward D. Anderson to be lieutenant colonel.

To be majors, to fill casual vacancies.

Capt. Charles E. Stodter.
Capt. Alexander M. Miller.
Capt. Charles B. Drake.
Capt. Harry O. Williard.
Capt. Lucius R. Holbrook.
Capt. John P. Wade.
Capt. Elvin R. Heiberg.
Capt. Ola W. Bell.
Capt. Abraham G. Lott.
Capt. Edward L. King.
Capt. Samuel F. Dallam.
Capt. William Kelly, jr.
Capt. Henry C. Whitehead.
Capt. William D. Chitty.
Capt. Alfred E. Kennington.
Capt. Edward P. Orton.
Capt. Robert B. Powers.
Capt. Francis H. Pope.
Capt. Herman A. Sievert.
Capt. George E. Mitchell.

PORTO RICO REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

To be captains with rank from June 3, 1916.

First Lieut. Jaime Nadal.
First Lieut. Eduardo Iriarte.
First Lieut. Teofilo Marxuach.
First Lieut. Eugenio C. de Hostos.

To be captains.

First Lieut. Louis S. Emmanuelli.
First Lieut. Pascual Lopez.
First Lieut. Felix Emmanuelli.
First Lieut. Daniel Rodriguez.

To be first lieutenants with rank from June 3, 1916.

Second Lieut. Adolfo J. de Hostos.
Second Lieut. Enrique de Orbeta.
Second Lieut. Enrique Urrutia, jr.
Second Lieut. Arturo Moreno.
Second Lieut. Carlos M. Lopez.
Second Lieut. Rafael Bird.

To be first lieutenants.

Second Lieut. Serafin M. Montesinos.
Second Lieut. Pedro A. Hernandez.
Second Lieut. Manuel Font.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Col. Charles H. Lauchheimer to be the adjutant and inspector of the Marine Corps, with the rank of brigadier general.

Col. George Richards to be the paymaster of the Marine Corps, with the rank of brigadier general.

Col. Charles L. McCawley to be the quartermaster of the Marine Corps, with the rank of brigadier general.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Skipwith Coale, Jackson.

ILLINOIS.

L. D. Fuess, Mount Olive.
D. E. Noonan, Morrisonville.

IOWA.

R. A. Mortland, Montezuma.
W. B. Perkins, Seymour.
G. A. Stout, Pella.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Arthur J. Fairgrieve, Tewksbury.
James B. Logan, North Wilbraham.
Everett P. Sheridan, Warren.
John T. Toomey, Oxford.

NEBRASKA.

Vernon E. Plank, Wolbach.

NEW JERSEY.

Jesse Ward, Butler.

NEW YORK.

O. Edmund Griswold, Riverhead.

OHIO.

Paul Machovina, Berea.
Jesse C. Ruff, Minerva.

OKLAHOMA.

M. M. Henderson, Tecumseh.
Robert L. Windsor, Wagoner.

OREGON.

R. E. L. Bedillion, Bandon.
S. A. Easterday, Clatskanie.
George P. Mims, Medford.
D. M. Roberts, Gresham.
J. W. Stacy, Rainier.

PENNSYLVANIA.

John W. Andrews, Ariel.
J. H. Fagan, Clymer.

TEXAS.

J. D. Hooks, Onalaska.
Rufus L. Hybarger, Pineland.

WYOMING.

H. H. Given, Gillette.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, September 7, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Spirit, heavenly Father, who doeth all things well, help us to lean with more faith and confidence upon Thee that we may be able to solve the intricate and perplexing problems as they present themselves, in accordance with the light Thou hast given us and art ever ready to give to those who seek Thee. The world is plunged into darkness and despair through the selfishness, greed and unhallowed ambitions of men but Thou dost live and out of it all shall come a brighter day when wrongs shall be righted and hate turned to love, for Thy will is good will and shall at last prevail, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory. Thy purposes shall be fulfilled, wrong die and right live on forever. Thus we hope and aspire and pray for now abideth faith, hope, love, these three, but the greatest of these is love. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 3, and 5, and also had agreed to House amendment numbered 4 with an amendment, to bill S. 5886, an act extending the time for the completion of the bridge across the Mississippi River, at Memphis, Tenn., authorized by an act entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled 'An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River,' approved August 23, 1912," in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 6034. An act to make available a portion of the appropriation for the immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for such counters, booths, screens, railings, seats, bunks, kitchen and laundry equipment, etc., as necessary in connection with said station.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 252. Joint resolution authorizing the transfer of the Government exhibit, or such portion thereof as the President may determine is advisable, now at the Panama-California International Exposition at San Diego, Cal., to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition at Gulfport, Miss.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

On August 31, 1916:

S. J. Res. 129. Joint resolution extending until April 15, 1917, the effective date of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914.

On September 1, 1916:

S. 5103. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to lease to Charleston-Dunbar Traction Co. a certain strip or parcel of land owned by the United States Government on the Great Kanawha River, in West Virginia.

On September 5, 1916:

S. 5496. An act to amend sections 5 and 6 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908;

S. 6369. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 6370. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 6497. An act for the relief of Oleanne Marie Zahl Branum.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT CLERKS, COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 367 (H. Rept. ——).

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ such additional assistant clerks as may be necessary during the remainder of the Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, the payment for services, not to exceed the sum of $60, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there such pressing need in these closing hours of the session for extra clerks for the Committee on Enrolled Bills when we have only one bill to be enrolled, the revenue bill?

Mr. LLOYD. Oh, there is the revenue bill and the general deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does that require the employment of these additional clerks? Of course, in the closing hours of other sessions, when we have appropriation bills in great numbers being thrown at us at the very last minute, I can see the need of additional help.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I want to say for the present chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills that he has taken better care of that committee and has made less expenditure than anyone we have ever had, so far as I know; and now at the close of this long session he asks for $60. No other chairman, so far as I know, has ever asked for so small an amount, and, in addition to that, I am assured that he may not spend all of the $60.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Committee on Enrolled Bills needs these extra clerks, but I would like to make this observation: I believe the present enrolling clerk of the House is the best enrolling clerk any legislative body ever had. [Applause.]

Mr. LLOYD. And in that I concur.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I am not making that statement of the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT IN MAINE.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Speaker to lay before the House the bill (H. R. 17807) to provide for holding sessions of the United States district court in the district of Maine and for dividing said district into divisions, and providing for offices of the clerk and marshal of said district to be maintained in each of said divisions, and for the appointment of a field deputy marshal in the division in which the marshal does not reside, with Senate amendments thereto, and I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE—EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday there were two gentlemen on the list for speeches—my colleague from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE]—who did not speak, probably because they were reached sooner than they expected, and I ask unanimous consent that they may address the House to-day for the time that was allotted to them for yesterday, and that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], following them, have leave to address the House for one hour, not to interfere with conference reports or other privileged business.

The SPEAKER. The continuing order is: Mr. DENISON, 15 minutes; Mr. KINCHELOE, 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. They were called yesterday, and I am asking to renew that order for them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to renew the order, together with a request that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] may address the House for one hour, or not to exceed that time, at the close of the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE]. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to couple with that a request that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] may follow the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] for one hour upon the question of the Federal reserve act.

Mr. MANN. I shall not have any objection to that; but let my request be put.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The three gentlemen involved in the request of the gentleman from Illinois are the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE], and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON]. Is there objection?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I think it is absolutely unfair that any man be given an hour to-day, when we are expecting to adjourn to-night. It is well known that there are not going to be half a dozen men in the House to listen to these speeches. The speeches could be printed in the RECORD, and granting the time keeps anyone else from having an opportunity to make a speech—practically monopolizes all of the time of the House to-day. I am a new Member of the House, and if I were an older Member I would object.

Mr. MANN. Oh, we will have plenty of time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma has not the floor.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any assurance that we are going to adjourn to-day?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I do not possess such information as my distinguished friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LINDBERGH. I make the point of order that there is no quorum here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. LINDBERGH. I will withhold it for the moment.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. While the gentleman is withholding it, the Chair will put the request of the gentleman from Illinois about these three Members making speeches.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes some time to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the request after he gets through with the others. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois as to Messrs. DENISON, KINCHELOE, and STEENERSON?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman if he will not cut that down to half an hour apiece.

The SPEAKER. Mr. DENISON has 15 minutes, Mr. KINCHELOE has 10, and the gentleman from Minnesota asks for an hour. That makes 1 hour and 25 minutes altogether.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask the gentleman from Illinois if he will not make it half an hour or three-quarters of an hour?

Mr. MANN. I think there is time enough. I think there will be time enough.

Mr. BURNET. Will not the gentleman make it 45 minutes?

Mr. ALLEN. It will not interfere with privileged matters.

Mr. BURNETT. Then I would like to couple with that the privilege of addressing the House for 20 minutes, after these remarks have been concluded, on the failures of the Republican Party and on the achievements of the Democratic Party.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the requests should be submitted separately.

The SPEAKER. The Chair puts the request of the gentleman from Illinois for the three gentlemen already named. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Now does the gentleman from Minnesota insist on his point of order?

Mr. HEFLIN. While it is being withheld I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes.

Mr. MOSS. I would like to have my request to extend my remarks to come in after this.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought he had put the request. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Alabama asks leave to address the House for not exceeding 20 minutes following the speech of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on two subjects, one the National Guard and the other protection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on two subjects, the National Guard and the tariff. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to address the House for 20 minutes, on the subject I announced a while ago, after the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to couple with the request of the gentleman from Alabama a request that I may be permitted to address the House for half an hour.

Mr. MANN. These requests should be put separately.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SINNOTT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I request that after the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] I may be given the privilege of addressing the House for 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that at the end of the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] he may address the House for 45 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLEN. I would ask that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] be permitted to address the House for 45 minutes, following those who have already obtained permission.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ALLEN] asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] be permitted to address the House not to exceed 45 minutes on the reserve bank bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the gentleman's remarks I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia he may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD on two subjects, our diplomatic representatives and general political conditions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. FLOOD] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD on two subjects, diplomatic relations and general political conditions. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter from Emmet A. Jones, chief of the bureau of agricultural industries, department of immigration and markets bureau, Montgomery, Ala., in reference to the convention of the American Dairy, Food, and Drug Officials recently held in Detroit, Mich.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I could not hear the request of the gentleman. I would like to suggest that it is not a very good practice to go down in front of the Speaker's desk and make a request where nobody else can hear it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I merely followed suit with him. [Laughter.] I was out there when he advanced to the front.

Mr. MANN. Well, I talk loud enough to be heard all over the Chamber, and the gentleman does not.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I endeavor to do that myself. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter received by me, dated August 14, 1916, from Mr. Emmet A. Jones in reference to the American Dairy, Food, and Drug Officials' convention which recently met in the city of Detroit, Mich.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 14, 1916.

HON. J. CHARLES LINTHICUM, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LINTHICUM: The American Dairy Food and Drug Officials met in annual convention at Detroit, Mich., last week. The membership of that organization is restricted to the executive State officer or officers, or their subordinates, regulating the sale of drug, dairy, and other food products.

The object of their official position and the purpose of the national association is to protect human life by preventing the sale of unwholesome food products.

I attended that convention, representing the State of Alabama, bearing my authority from the commissioner of agriculture, who is the executive officer regulating the sale of food products. Upon presenting my credentials to a committee for the purpose of passing on the same I was promptly seated, and the president soon after named me as a member of one of the important committees, showing conclusively that I was recognized as the official representative of Alabama in the convention.

Later on I introduced a resolution in that convention calling upon Congress to enact and put into operation some adequate plan of inspection of dairy products, inasmuch as milk products are especially exempt from the meat-inspection act as well as the pure-food law.

A number of the members of that association seemed to be considerably agitated that such a resolution should be introduced at that convention, and immediately set to work to prevent the discussion and otherwise oppose this resolution. They succeeded by practically doing away with the constitution and by-laws and all other parliamentary rules and usages, and they also succeeded in declaring me as not the official representing the State of Alabama, thereby putting themselves on record as being opposed to inspection of dairy products. The members of that association know, or ought to know, that 61½ per cent of all the butter made in the United States is classed as No. 3. This class is bad butter. A large per cent of this butter is made from cream that is often putrid; 94.5 per cent of the creameries in this country are insanitary to a greater or less degree. I am in position to support these statements by the highest authorities.

I was a legal delegate at the convention held in Detroit of the American Dairy Food and Drug Officials, having my proper credentials from Hon. James A. Wade, commissioner of agriculture and industries, and his excellency Charles Henderson, governor of Alabama.

It was a cowardly act of the officials of that organization to throw me out on a technicality for the specific reason of preventing a fair discussion of the insanitary dairy conditions and the unwholesome butter that the American people must eat or go hungry.

This organization, whose duty it is to prevent such criminal practices, refused to put themselves on record as favoring Federal inspection of dairy products. If the dairies are clean, and if the butter is made from pure, wholesome cream, why should the officials of this organization, who, as I understand, represent the dairy interests, object to inspection?

The American dairy food and drug officials are the ones whom the American people have a perfect right to look to for protection against impure and diseased foods, and for that organization of food officials to take the position to oppose Federal inspection by their official act in convention at Detroit, August 10, they have gone directly contrary to the purpose for which their office was created.

Milk products, the most universally used food, and a food eaten raw, and a food most subject to contamination of impurities and disease, these officials have violated the public trust invested in them by the people of these United States. They have commercialized their office and the association. They have, by their official act in refusing to even consider this important resolution, as much as told the American people that the almighty dollar was of more importance than human life.

The members of the association know, or should know, that 15 per cent of all tuberculosis is of bovine source, and a greater per cent of typhoid fever is directly traceable to milk products. In Alabama alone last year more than 2,600 of our people died of tuberculosis, according to Dr. Schroeder, the highest authority on this subject; 15 per cent of that figure means that 390 of these deaths were preventable. Federal inspection of dairy products is the unquestionable cure for this evil, inasmuch as nearly all the State officials in charge of this work frankly state that they are not able to cope with these conditions, owing to the flood of interstate milk products pouring in upon them, together with inadequate State laws, as well as funds.

It is beyond me why such State officials admit they are not able to prevent the sale of butter made from rotten cream and at the same time refuse to ask Congress to enact a law that would supply Federal aid and would accomplish the end that their office was created for, namely, to protect human life by preventing the sale of impure, diseased food products.

In this case the people's representatives in their pure-food department have refused to do this. The American people must take the matter in their own hands and in no uncertain terms communicate their views to their Congressmen and Senators in Washington.

It was clearly the duty of the members of that organization to take up and discuss the insanitary condition of dairies and to look into and prevent the sale of butter made from cream that is unclean, decomposed, and putrid. These conditions do exist, and State officials refused to do their duty when they took part in disfranchising me at this convention. From the proceedings it would seem that the powerful and, to my mind, iniquitous Butter Trust dominates State officials regulating pure food.

The leading dairy journals and health officials declare that insanitary conditions exist in many instances, and that a large percentage of the milk products are produced from decomposed, putrid, and diseased cream.

We have sought some authoritative statement of the extent of this awful crime against the helpless and the innocent. In the annual report of the United States Department of Agriculture for 1912 it is said (pp. 315, 334) that cream is frequently shipped great distances to creameries to be made into butter and is often received in such a filthy and putrid state as to be thoroughly unfit to enter into the composition of a food product; that an examination of 1,554 lots of cream delivered to the creameries and cream-buying stations showed 113, or 7.3 per cent, to be of first grade; 484, or 31.1 per cent, of second grade; and 957, or 61.5 per cent, of third grade; that the third grade consists of cream that is dirty, decomposed, or very sour; that 94.5 per cent of 715 creameries investigated were insanitary to a greater or less degree; and that 72.6 per cent of these creameries did not pasteurize the milk so as to destroy any disease germs that might be present; that as disease-producing germs are known to survive for long periods in butter from unpasteurized cream, and as butter is eaten in the raw state, this product when made under such conditions as prevail in the majority of creameries can not be said to be wholesome and free from danger to human health; that millions of gallons of cream that have been allowed to stand in the barn, in the cellar, or in the woodshed until it is sour or decomposed is sent to the creamery and, without even being pasteurized, is made into butter; that aside from the danger of pathogenic infection, consumers should not be expected to eat a product from an insanitary place and made from material that is unclean and decomposed.

It is this 61.5 per cent of third-grade butter so terribly indicted by dairy journals and health officials and others, tried and found guilty by such conservative and well-informed men as the senior editor of Hoard's Dairyman and Prof. Farrington, and the sentence confirmed by the quoted highest authority in the land—it is this disease-laden, filthy product, beautifully but artificially colored and artistically wrapped, which a majority of the American people must eat or go hungry.

Allow me to call your attention to two excerpts from the Chicago Dairy Products, March 21, 1916. On page 18 a lengthy address is published, which says:

"Beware of the cream buyer that tells you he would just as soon have old, sour, rotten cream as good, clean, sweet-flavored cream. Today competition in many localities is keen among the cream buyers, and they force one another to accept anything that looks like cream."

What does this association think of this kind of competition? Will you help to maintain or help to reform?

In the same address it is said:

"A good housewife does not leave the supper dishes stand overnight and use them again for breakfast without first washing them. And still the small amount of food particles left on the supper dishes is far less repulsive and objectionable than the dirty, filthy, often bloody pus matter that collects as slime in the separator bowl."

And one of your members stated during the convention this week that he had found the baby's soiled clothes soaking in the separator.

Who eats this cream and butter separated from "the dirty, filthy, often bloody, pus matter that collects as slime in the separator bowl, with the additional flavor obtained from the baby's soiled clothes?"

On page 20 another address is given, in which it is said, quoting:

"It is claimed by the veterinary department of our State that in sections where whole-milk creameries are the most numerous they find a larger per cent of hogs infected with tuberculosis, all of which shows beyond a doubt that the disease is spread from farm to farm through this medium of skim milk. Another case is cited where a number of the family where market milk was produced were infected with typhoid fever, the raw milk from the dairy was delivered, and an epidemic of typhoid fever among the patrons of the dairy was the result. * * * Butter itself may carry disease, according to a bulletin issued by the United States Department of Agriculture recently. It was found that tubercle bacilli existed in a raw-cream unsalted butter for a period of nine months after being made, and in raw-cream salted butter for six months after being made. It was also found that out of 1,233 samples of raw-cream butter made in different sections of the country 163, or 13.2 per cent, contained tubercle bacilli."

Does the producer of this kind of dairy products offer a word of denial to these charges? Do they suggest the slightest remedy?

Ex-Gov. Hoard, of Wisconsin, called, in hearings before a congressional committee, the "father of dairying," treasurer of the National Dairy Union and editor of Hoard's Dairyman, says in his issue of February 21, 1913:

"Resolutions have been passed and passed again. * * * The cry is 'Something must be done,' but nothing is done. * * * No one familiar with the work, and finding himself behind suitable closed doors, has denied the conditions. * * * No one is more interested in this than the Farmers' Cooperative Creameries. * * * They see tendencies working insidiously and eternally to break down quality. They labor under conditions that make them accept poor cream, do poor work, and sometimes keep things in insanitary condition. * * * There are certain tendencies in the creamery business that are demoralizing to the last degree. We refer to the willingness of creameries to accept poor, bad, decomposed cream, knowing, if they do not, the cream will go to a competitor. The large central creameries have been the chief, though not the only, sinners in this respect. They have invaded the territory of the local creameries and forced them to let down the bars to all that is bad in cream. They have invaded the territory of each other until they have absolutely no control over the product they receive from the farmer."

Mr. David Klein, State analyst for the State Food Commission of Illinois, in a letter says:

"Adulterated milk and butter is somewhat frequent. * * * Most of our adulteration consists of dirty milk or that which contains high bacterial content. * * * The question of regulation of dairy products is exceedingly complex. * * * By all means, the problem should be dealt with at its source and not at the end of its journey."

Minnesota Dairy and Food Department Bulletin No. 58, appendix 3, page 58:

"A special investigation has been made of economic and commercial conditions in the creamery industry, and information has been received showing that there is practically a monopoly in some sections; * * * that the cream is received over a wide territory, and much of it is received in a state condition, and that a very large percentage of the butter in the market is below grade."

Yearbook of the United States Department of Agriculture, 1910, page 46:

"The Bureau of Animal Industry has conducted the inspection of butter as it is received at the New York, Chicago, and San Francisco markets. The competition among creameries for the purchase of cream has resulted in cream being accepted which is sometimes in very bad condition, and as a result much butter of inferior quality is placed on the market."

Page 278:

"Through the dairy districts such as Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, etc., the farmers a few years ago delivered to the creameries clean, sweet milk, which was made into a first grade of butter that brought the highest price. Many of the same farmers are to-day delivering cream a week old. This is not done because of lack of knowledge, but because their cream, bad as it is, is accepted by the creamery. If one creamery does not accept it, another will; the farmer, therefore, is simply following the line of least resistance."

In a page advertisement appearing in one of the leading dairy journals was "How to make good butter out of rotten cream."

It would have been a reflection on the intelligence of that organization for me to proceed further in producing evidence showing that insanitary conditions do exist and that a large per cent of the milk products are made from decomposed, putrid, and diseased cream.

Now, I wish to dwell for a few minutes on the effect of such conditions. The health of a community, a State, and a country should come first in the minds and the hearts of officials. Consequently disease-spreading foods should have had their serious consideration.

Dr. E. C. Shroeder, in the hearing before the Committee on Agriculture in the Sixty-first Congress said (p. 319):

"The remarkable thing found by Dr. W. H. Park and his associates was that among a certain number of fatal cases of tuberculosis among infants 10 per cent were due to bovine source; among a certain number of children under 5 years of age, not all of which were fatal, however, something in the neighborhood of 26 per cent were due to bovine source; among children between 16 and 5 years, about 16 per cent of all tuberculosis was due to bovine source." * * *

Page 321:

"The more closely the bovine type is approached, the higher the virulence of the bacilli seems to be." * * *

On page 325 he estimates that 15 per cent of all human tuberculosis is of bovine origin.

On page 324 he says:

"Estimates which have been made—not by myself, however—seem to indicate that about 60 per cent of all bacilli in a given sample of milk are concentrated in the cream. In making investigations myself I have repeatedly made butter from infected cream, and I found that when the cream was infected the bacilli were transferred to the butter. Quite a number of experiments with cheese have been made, and the investigations show conclusively that when cheese is made from infected milk the cheese will also contain infection. If typhoid germs get into milk, their presence there is more dangerous than the presence of the tubercle bacilli."

In the twenty-fifth annual report of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry it is said (p. 152):

"The conclusion is almost forced upon us that the tuberculosis dairy cow is, to say the very least, one of the most important sources of tubercle bacilli with which we have to deal."

Page 160:

"Infection of cattle and hogs is most frequently seen in districts in which dairy interests are most prominent. * * * It has been estimated in the Bureau of Animal Industry that the annual sum that may be charged to loss and depreciation through tuberculosis in cattle and hogs is in the neighborhood of $23,000,000."

According to figures presented at the International Congress on Tuberculosis by the United States Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, tuberculosis destroyed 60,000 more lives in the United States in one year alone than yellow fever destroyed in the United States during a whole century.

Dr. E. C. Shroeder, in the Twenty-sixth Annual Report of the Bureau of Animal Industry (p 200), says:

"I am thoroughly convinced that there is no equal number of cases of tuberculosis * * * that can be prevented as easily, as cheaply, and as certainly as the numerous cases that are due to persons infected with tuberculosis bacilli derived from the bodies of tuberculous cattle."

I felt that every member of this convention is trying to develop their dairy interests for the health and happiness, not the disease and death of their people. They try to inspect the herds and destroy the diseased ones, but how can they compete with interstate butter pouring in upon them free from Federal inspection and regulation, which constantly infects their people and in turn reinfects their herd.

The unscrupulous dairyman and the dishonest creameries and butter factories seem to turn a deaf ear to the thousands of American mothers, whose children are every year being murdered by slovenly farmers and debauching creameries.

Some of the dairy journals have seen fit to attack me personally and officially for my views on this subject and have alluded to me as the "wicked Jones" and made out a case of "hard-headedness" against me, and to my mind a case of "hard-heartedness" against themselves.

If I must choose, I pray that my heart may ever be tender and true to the millions of our people who must buy food and that the cry of the little diseased children and their mothers may never go up against me.

And now, Mr. LINTHICUM, I wish to commend you for the brave and able fight you are making against these criminal practices, and I offer you my services whole-heartedly, and will consider it a favor if you will call on me at any time.

Very truly, yours,

EMMET A. JONES,
Chief of Bureau Agriculture and Industries Department, Immigration and Markets Bureau, Montgomery, Ala.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the achievements of the present session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the achievements of the present session of Congress. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. If it is true, it will be very short. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on two subjects—world peace and the naval bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on two subjects—world peace and the naval appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the achievements of the Republican Party if it had been in power in the last four years. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Romance, pure and simple. [Renewed laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on what the Republican Party would have done if it had been in power in the last four years. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on House joint resolution No. 1.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on House joint resolution No. 1. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EVANS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon what the Democratic Party has done in the last four years while it has been in power.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon what the Democratic Party has done in the last four years. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POINT OF NO QUORUM.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, a while ago I made a point of order that there was no quorum here. I withhold that for half an hour on condition that I may make a statement now as to why I made that point, and it is this: That I understand there is a trading process going on between certain parties in this body and in another body that affects the legislation. I do not know whether that is so or not; but if it is so, we ought to have a quorum here, and I withhold my point now for half an hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withholds his point of order.

Mr. ADAMSON. Can you find out in half an hour?

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT MEMPHIS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there is a bill on the Speaker's desk that the Senate has passed backward and forward two or three times. I would like to move to the House to end it by concurrence.

Mr. MANN. What is it?

Mr. ADAMSON. A bridge bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the Senate bill 5886, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5886) entitled "An act extending the time for the completion of the bridge across the Mississippi River, at Memphis, Tenn., authorized by an act entitled 'An act to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled "An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved August 23, 1912.'"

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, until I saw that the Senate had acted upon this bill yesterday I was very strongly of the impression that it was only recently that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] moved to concur in the Senate amendment on this bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. They have concurred in our amendments with an amendment.

Mr. MANN. I think he moved to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. I thought he did, too, but they are piling one mountain on top of another—I forget their names—Pelion on Ossa.

Mr. MANN. Unless I am very much mistaken, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], when this same bill came over from the Senate before, moved to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. ADAMSON. Suppose the gentleman read what the House did there. He has it all there.

Mr. MANN. This was a House bill, was it not?

Mr. ADAMSON. No. It was a Senate bill. The House amended it, and the Senate now concurs in the House amendments.

Mr. MANN. The bill was reported to the House with certain committee amendments. Then the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] offered some further amendments.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I know I looked into the matter very carefully.

Mr. ADAMSON. The Senate amended that.

Mr. MANN. That went to the Senate, and the Senate amended that. I am sure that that bill came back, and the gentleman from Arkansas moved to concur in the Senate amendments. Now it comes back again from the Senate.

Mr. ADAMSON. I suggest that the Clerk read the action of the House, taken when the bill was last here.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will take time to look it up.

Mr. ADAMSON. Let it lie on the table in the meantime.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Subsequently,

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois finds that this is a different bill, and I move to concur in the amendment of the Senate, in which the Senate couple on a new proviso. They accept the House amendments with an amendment.

The Senate amendment was read, as follows:

That the Senate agrees to House amendment numbered 4 to said bill with an amendment as follows: Insert the matter contained in said amendmeat with an additional proviso, to be inserted at the end of said amendment before the period, to read as follows: ": Provided further, That the term 'passage' as used in the foregoing proviso, for which said sum of 25 cents is made the maximum rate of charge, shall include the right of the passenger to be carried over the approaches and connecting railway tracks of said bridge from the nearest stopping place to receive and discharge passengers at one terminal thereof to the nearest like stopping place at the other terminal thereof. And this proviso shall apply to and govern the authorized charge for passage to be made by the Kansas City & Memphis Railway & Bridge Co. for passage over its bridge and the approaches and connecting railway tracks thereof, across the Mississippi River, at Memphis, Tenn."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for Members of the House not having copies of the bill before them to understand the effect of the amendment. Will the gentleman from Georgia please explain it?

Mr. ADAMSON. The amendment simply provides that where a man has to pay a charge for crossing the bridge he shall have a place to get on and a place to get off at each end of the bridge. That is, that they can not charge him double, but that he can get on at the nearest station to the bridge and get off at the nearest station beyond the bridge without paying any extra fare except the charge for crossing the bridge.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is that all there is to it?

Mr. ADAMSON. That is all there is to it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

CHILD-LABOR LAW.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, some days ago the Democratic Members of the Senate met in caucus and decided on a legislative program for the remainder of the session. The child-labor bill, which passed the House on February 2 and had been before the Senate since that time, was not included among those that were to be passed before adjournment. As the President has assumed the rule of umpire as to what bills should or should not be passed by Congress in addition to his regular duties as Chief Executive of the Nation, we are justified in concluding that he must have been consulted and have known and approved of the legislative program decided upon by the caucus. At least the program, omitting the child-labor bill, was published in the daily papers, and the President, so far as we know, made no objection to it.

But as soon as the action of the caucus became known over the country, telegrams began coming to Washington urging action on this bill before adjournment. The women of the country particularly, through their clubs and organizations, began sending telegrams demanding that the child-labor bill be passed.

It is interesting to note that a short time before this Mr. Hughes had made a statement of his personal views on extending the right of suffrage to women, and there was much discussion in the press of the country of the effect his statement on that question would have on the coming election in those States where the women vote.

Suddenly the President appeared one day at the Capitol unannounced and, if the reports in the daily papers can be taken as true, called some of the Democratic Senators before him and told them that the legislative program of the caucus must be rearranged and the child-labor bill must pass before adjournment.

Surprise was freely expressed about the Capitol at this precipitous action of the President; many of us could not, while others would not, understand the sudden reversal of the President's attitude toward this bill and his insistence that it be passed now. There was no national emergency connected with it, nor any public interest which would particularly suffer if the passage of the bill should be deferred until December.

Subsequent events, however, have thrown some light on this matter. The date of the President's notification of his renomination had been fixed and was soon to be. His speech of acceptance was to be a catalogue of the wise and beneficent legislation that had been enacted by the Democratic Congress under his benign influence and guiding hand. And, of course, this catalogue would not read well with many of the people unless the child-labor bill were included.

The caucus program was forthwith rearranged and the bill was passed.

On the 2d of September the President was notified of his renomination, and in his speech of acceptance he made the following statement, in reviewing the legislation for which the country, as he claims, is indebted to the Democratic Party under his administration:

We have effected the emancipation of the children of the country by releasing them from hurtful labor.

These are fine words. They appeal to human sentiment. And I have no doubt my friend Mr. HEFLIN, the gentleman from Alabama, one of the few States whose representatives fought so hard to prevent the passage of the bill, was swayed with profound emotions as he heard his chief tell in these touching words how the children of the country had been saved and emancipated from hurtful labor by the Democratic Party. And possibly there may be some voters somewhere in the country who will blindly accept this statement for what it says.

But to those of us who know the facts it is a huge joke. It is truly ludicrous. Those who are familiar with child-labor legislation in this country and who know the past records of the candidates of the two great political parties on this subject can not help wondering what motive inspired the President in claiming that the Democratic Party has emancipated the children of the country from hurtful labor. Could it be possible that the President has been ill advised or is otherwise not correctly informed on this subject?

Why, Mr. Speaker, in 30 States of the Union wise child-labor laws have been enacted by Republican legislatures and signed by Republican governors. I have not yet been able to learn whether the laws of Kentucky and Maryland were enacted under Republican or Democratic legislatures. If under the former, then the number would be 32. Many of these laws were enacted while the President was yet a school-teacher, and most, if not all, of them were enacted before he became President. The child-labor law of the District of Columbia, I am informed, was passed during a Republican administration. And the only States that have no child-labor laws or whose laws are entirely inadequate to protect their citizens from the evils of child labor are the States that always have been Democratic and where real Republicans can not grow.

Now, the child-labor bill that has just become a law was reported to the House by the Labor Committee, of which I am a member. On the motion to favorably report the bill out, four Democrats and five Republicans voted in the affirmative. Three of the Democratic members of the committee opposed it and filed a minority report against it. Three of the Democratic members of the committee fought the bill on the floor of the House.

If the five Republican members of the Labor Committee had opposed the bill the Democrats alone never could have gotten the bill before the House at this session, even if they had been disposed to do so.

In the House a determined fight was made on the bill by the Democrats alone; they even tried to kill it by a prolonged and determined filibuster which was aided by the able chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. WEBB. The Democratic leader, Mr. KITCHIN, opposed the bill and voted against it.

When the final vote on the passage of the bill was taken, 179 Republicans and only 158 Democrats voted in favor of it. Only 2 Republicans voted against it, while 44 Democrats are recorded against it.

So the record, with which we may reasonably presume the President was familiar, shows that generally speaking this bill was supported by the Republicans and opposed by the Democrats, and that without the aid of almost the solid Republican vote it never could have been passed by this Congress.

In the Senate every Republican Senator but two voted for the bill, while a number of Democratic Senators not only voted against it but conducted a determined fight to prevent its passage.

All who are at all familiar with this subject know that all the States have adequate child-labor laws of their own, except North and South Carolina and possibly two or three other Southern States where the large cotton mills are located; and therefore the provisions of this bill will only affect those few Democratic States.

Why, then, should the President declare in his speech of acceptance that the Democratic Party has "effected the emancipation of the children of the country by releasing them from hurtful labor"?

The facts are exactly to the contrary. The only States where the children have not been emancipated by releasing them from hurtful labor are Democratic States.

Such is briefly the record of the legislation of the country on this subject.

But what are the records of the two presidential candidates on the subject of child labor?

In 1907, nine years ago, while Mr. Hughes was governor of the State of New York, he made the following recommendation in a message to the legislature:

I recommend to your careful consideration the important subject of child-labor laws for the protection of children in securing for them their rights through an elementary education and in surrounding them with appropriate safeguards, making an especial appeal to human sentiment and that nothing should be left undone to give them full effect.

I am informed that during the term of office of Gov. Hughes child-labor laws were enacted by the Legislature of New York which followed fully the recommendation of the governor and received his approval.

Years after Gov. Hughes was urging the enactment of child-labor laws and was getting results at the hands of a Republican legislature, putting his words into deeds, Mr. Wilson was ridiculing the idea of child-labor legislation by Congress and declaring to the young men of the country that such proposed legislation was but the scheme of politicians.

In a lecture on constitutional law, delivered in 1911, Mr. Wilson, speaking of the power of the Federal Government with reference to child-labor legislation, said:

Its power is to regulate commerce between the States, and the attempts now made during every session of Congress to carry the implications of that power beyond the utmost boundaries of reasonable and honest inference show that the only limits likely to be observed by politicians are those set by the good sense and conservative temper of the country

The proposed Federal legislation with regard to the regulation of child labor affords a striking example. If the power to regulate commerce between the States can be stretched to include the regulation of labor in mills and factories, it can be made to embrace every particular of the industrial organization and action of the country. The only limitation Congress would observe, should the Supreme Court assent to such obviously absurd extravagances of interpretation, would be the limitations of opinion and of circumstances.

Thus, according to Mr. Wilson's views before he became a politician, this child-labor bill that Congress has just passed "carries the implications of the power to regulate commerce between the States beyond the utmost boundaries of reasonable and honest inference"; it is an "obviously absurd extravagance of interpretation."

Of course, now that Mr. Wilson is no longer lecturing learnedly to the young men of the country on constitutional law, but has become a candidate for reelection to the Presidency, he has an entirely different and larger audience to reach, and the rules of interpretation of the Constitution are entirely different. What was then an "obviously absurd extravagance of interpretation" now becomes a very proper and benign law for the "emancipation of the children of the country from hurtful labor."

Such are the records of the two candidates for President upon this important question of child-labor legislation. And their records on this subject are not unlike their records on other important subjects in which the people of the country, and particularly the laboring people, are interested.

Mr. Speaker, my only purpose in calling the attention of the House and of the country to these matters at this time is that I think the statement of the President in his speech of acceptance will be misleading to the people. The fact is, the subject of child-labor legislation is not, never has been, and should not be a partisan question. It is one that affects the welfare of the whole Nation, and no political party nor the candidate of any political party should attempt to influence the voters of the country by a pretense or claim that such legislation has been partisan. I think it is most unfortunate that the President should have claimed in his speech of acceptance that the child-labor law just passed by Congress is one of the fruits of Democratic legislation.

Neither the Democratic Party nor the President is responsible for this law. The bill would have passed the Senate in December, or at least before adjournment, in March, without any pressure by the President.

The President, however, is entitled to credit for forcing the bill through the Senate before adjournment. But in view of his former opinions on child-labor legislation, as well as his strange statement on the subject in his speech of acceptance, we are justified in the conclusion that the purpose of his demand for immediate action on the bill was purely political.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, the President forced the passage of this bill before adjournment for the same reason that he prevented the passage of the immigration bill. He forced it, not against the opposition of the Republicans, for we have all, with the exception of two in the House and two in the Senate, been in favor of the bill and wanted it passed as soon as possible; he forced it against the opposition of members of his own party and in the face of an approaching national election.

The country knows that the President will veto the immigration bill as soon as it passes the Senate. A veto of this important bill, in which the laboring men of the country are so deeply interested, would cost the President many votes. So he and his advisers have prevented the passage of the immigration bill before adjournment in order that his veto of the measure may be postponed until after the election.

Thus the country beholds the playing of politics in high places. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to say to the gentleman that the child-labor laws of Kentucky were enacted under a Democratic administration.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. I want to make the same observation with regard to the Ohio law.

Mr. DENISON. I thank the gentlemen for the information.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman in his remarks has referred to the fact that Mr. Wilson, before he became President, made the statement in one of his books that a child-labor law enacted by Congress would be unconstitutional.

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to ask the gentleman a question: Is the President entitled to any credit for urging Congress to pass a law which, before he became President, he declared would, if enacted into law, be a violation—involve a dishonest interpretation—of the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. DENISON. That is a very pertinent question, and one that the country will have to answer.

Mr. LONDON. Does the gentleman contend that a Democratic President has no right to learn anything?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. He can not.

Mr. DENISON. I do not, of course, make the contention that he has no right to learn anything.

Mr. MEEKER. Does the gentleman insist that the Democratic President has learned anything?

Mr. BARKLEY. He has not learned anything from the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DENISON. I repeat that we are justified in the conclusion that the purpose of his demand for immediate action on this bill was entirely political. [Applause on the Republican side.]

BRITISH EMBARGO ON TOBACCO.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I have the honor to represent in this House a great tobacco district. I was born and reared on a farm, and raised tobacco during the most of my boyhood years, and I think I am familiar with the hardships and obstacles with which the tobacco grower has to contend.

There are no more patriotic, industrious, and law-abiding citizens in this Republic than the tobacco growers of Kentucky, Virginia, and Tennessee, and yet they are the poorest and smallest paid laborers for the amount of work they do in this country. [Applause.]

These people are appealing to the American Congress for a right to which they are justly entitled, and that is an open market for their tobacco to every country on earth.

In March, 1915, by an order in council of the British Government, Great Britain placed an embargo on tobacco, together with other commodities. As a result of this embargo practically all tobacco exported from this country at that time was consigned to the Netherland Oversea Trust. The Netherland Oversea Trust then required every exporter to guarantee, by executing a bond, that the tobacco exported should go only to the country to which it was consigned, which in effect cut out the market of the European countries, except Great Britain. The fact is practically 60 per cent of the competition of the dark-tobacco buying in this country comes from Germany and Austria.

The State Department, through its able Secretary, Hon. Robert Lansing, and his assistants, immediately sent a strong protest to the British Government against this embargo. After various protests, the State Department finally succeeded, in November, 1915, in having this order in council of the British Government set aside. The result was, in a short time thereafter, the price of tobacco began to increase rapidly. The pathetic thing about this transaction was that by the time the tobacco increased to a good price nearly all of it was out of the hands of the growers. But notwithstanding this the tobacco growers, encouraged by future prospects, planted the crop of 1916 with great hopes that these high prices would continue, and they were also informed, and I think correctly so, that there would be a 25 per cent greater demand for tobacco this year than in 1915. With these assurances, the tobacco growers of my district, together with the rest of Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia, have planted and are now housing one of the biggest and finest crops of tobacco that has been raised in these States for many years. Now, to their disappointment, Great Britain, without a reason and arbitrarily, has again placed an embargo upon tobacco, which became effective the 31st of last month.

So unless this embargo is removed or modified before this year's crop goes on the market the tobacco grower will be confronted with the sad fact that his crop of tobacco is to be sold with practically no bidders from the European countries. Practically 80 per cent of the tobacco grown in my district is export tobacco. The State Department now is earnestly protesting against this embargo and is doing everything in its power to have it removed, but with no power under the law to retaliate in any way.

Only last week I received a letter from Ross-Vaughn Tobacco Co., of Owensboro, Ky., saying that they had shipped 233 hogsheads of tobacco, worth $30,000, to Philadelphia, consigned to Copenhagen, Denmark, and asking me to go to the British Embassy here and see if they would get authority from London letting the shipment go. I went to the embassy and pleaded in behalf of this company. I was informed by them that they had already wired London for permission for this shipment, but had not received a reply. I then asked them if they would not hurry the matter and was informed very frankly that there was no way to hurry it. I left immediately in disgust. I submit to you if it is not a shame that our citizens have to endure this kind of treatment. [Applause.]

I am delighted, however, to know that the Senate has passed amendments 265 and 266 to the revenue bill, which empower the President to enforce retaliatory measures to prohibit this great injustice to tobacco growers and to exporters of other commodities in this country, which amendments are as follows:

Amendment 265: That whenever any country, dependency, or colony shall prohibit the importation of any article the product of the soil or industry of the United States and not injurious to health or morals the President, within his discretion, shall have power to prohibit, during the period such prohibition is in force, the importation into the United States of similar articles, or in case the United States does not import similar articles from that country, then other articles the products of such country, dependency, or colony.

Amendment 266: That whenever during the existence of a war in which the United States is not engaged the President shall be satisfied that there is reasonable ground to believe that under the laws, regulations, or practices of any country, colony, or dependency, contrary to the law and practice of nations, the importation into their own or any other country, dependency, or colony of any article the product of the soil or industry of the United States and not injurious to health or morals is prevented or restricted the President is authorized and empowered, within his discretion, to prohibit or restrict, during the period such prohibition or restriction is in force, the importation into the United States of similar or other articles products of such country, dependency, or colony as in his opinion the public interest may require; and in such case he shall make proclamation stating the article or articles which are prohibited from importation into the United States; and any person or persons who shall import, or attempt or conspire to import, or be concerned in importing, such article or articles into the United States contrary to the prohibition in such proclamation shall be liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $50,000 or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, in the discrertion of the court. The President may change, modify, revoke, or renew such proclamation in his discretion.

So you will see from the reading of these amendments that whenever any country shall prohibit the importation of any article the product of the soil or industry of the United States and not injurious to health or morals the President of the United States, in his discretion, is empowered to prohibit, during such period, the importation into this country of similar artcles, or if the United States does not import similar articles from that country, then any other articles. And after he shall make a proclamation stating the prohibitory articles the countries which continue to import them here shall be liable to a fine and imprisonment. These two amendments, if adopted, will give the President the power to retaliate whenever injuries are done to the people of this country, like the embargo placed upon tobacco by Great Britain.

I do not believe this country should or will suffer these outrages to be perpetrated upon the American people. Tobacco is not one of the necessaries of life nor a contraband of war, and no reason can be given why this embargo is placed upon tobacco by Great Britain except that she and her allies hope to buy the tobacco from the tobacco grower at their own price and then sell it to the other countries of Europe at an enormous profit to themselves. Great Britain can not with any consistency give as a reason for placing this embargo on tobacco that she does not want Germany to have it. Germany's fighting powers would not be increased any if her soldiers got all the tobacco they wanted to chew and smoke; nor would they be decreased any if she did not get any. Besides, every dollar that Germany spent for tobacco would leave that much less in her treasury with which to buy ammunition, guns, and something to eat and wear for her soldiers. That argument or excuse would fall to the ground of its own weight. This country is big enough and strong enough to protect the lives and property of its citizens, and I believe she will do it. On a great question like this I am neither pro-English, pro-ally, or pro-German, but I am pro-American. I want to right these wrongs, and I believe in doing it. The God of the Universe created the high seas for the whole human family, and I do not believe in permitting any nation to monopolize them for her own aggrandizement, to the detriment of any other nation and her citizens. [Applause.] If these two amendments are adopted, which will give the President of the United States power to retaliate, I am sure that he will be glad to exercise this right at once in behalf of the tobacco growers of this country, if necessary. His every act since he has been President of the United States toward labor has always been in favor of the laboring man and the downtrodden. I do not think he would have to exercise this power, for the moment Great Britain understands that we mean business and will tolerate the injustices to our citizens no longer, she will raise this embargo, for she needs us and what we have to sell worse than we need her. I am opposed to and shall fight to the last ditch against Great Britain or any other country coining the sweat and labor of the tobacco growers of my district into money to make her richer by the unfair and unjust methods of this embargo.

If I had my way about it, I would make these amendments even stronger than they are. I would not only give the President power to prohibit imports to this country as a retaliatory measure, but I would also give him power to lay an embargo, in his discretion, upon exports consigned to the countries that place an embargo upon such products as tobacco, because England wants to buy our products worse than we want hers. I would offer that amendment now if it were in order, but I realize under the rules of the House such an amendment would be subject to a point of order at this stage of this legislation.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. Is it not that policy which you have been discussing that made it possible for Wilson to keep us out of war?

Mr. KINCHELOE. It is not. It is the firm stand that this great President has taken in his diplomatic relations with foreign countries, together with his love for peace, that has kept us out of war.

The Members of Congress and United States Senators from the tobacco-growing districts have been making this fight for the tobacco growers ever since the embargo was first laid upon tobacco in March, 1915, and are doing all in their power to have these two amendments adopted.

Tobacco is a product that takes 12 months in the year to produce and sell, and in former years the tobacco growers have been compelled to sell their tobacco at almost starvation prices. The tobacco grower not only gives practically a year's time and labor to the raising of tobacco, but gives his best land and best cultivation to it. They are now housing a great crop of tobacco, not only in quantity but in quality, and I want to see a free and open market this fall in order that this crop may bring the best prices possible. The tobacco growers, land owners, and tenants alike are looking to Congress for this relief, and I believe when these facts are detailed to you opposition to these two amendments will be small.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes; I yield with pleasure.

Mr. BENNET. Did the gentleman vote for the Sutherland amendment the other day?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. I think in that the gentleman upheld the rights of his constituents, and that he did the wise thing.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I voted for the Sutherland amendment because my people are affected in this matter, and I will vote for any other amendment, whether offered by a Democrat or a Republican, to stop an embargo on the products of this country going to a neutral nation, and I do not care whether it is put on by England or Germany or any other country; we are too big a country to submit to anything of that sort.

Mr. BENNET. I think the gentleman is right in putting his Americanism above his Democracy.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I think so; I do not think Mr. Hughes, your candidate for President, has any corner on patriotism or Americanism in this country, notwithstanding he exploits it all over the country wherever he goes, in trying to make an issue in this campaign. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Tobacco is the money crop of my district, and when the price is low it affects every character of business.

Personally, I have been assisting in the waging of this fight to remove this embargo on tobacco ever since I have been in Congress, and I expect to continue this fight until this injustice to my people has been removed, for the happiness and prosperity of over 3,000,000 people in this Republic are dependent almost entirely upon the raising of tobacco, and if I can assist in some way in the removing of this diabolical embargo on tobacco, placed there by Great Britain, I will feel that I have rendered great service to my people.

When these two amendments shall have been adopted, as I believe they will, and the 3,000,000 people living in the tobacco section of this country are apprised of this fact, happiness and contentment will be with them as never before, and this Congress will receive the undying gratitude of them all. [Prolonged applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for one hour.

POLITICAL ISSUES AND PARTY CLAIMS.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for this courtesy. I want to make a few calm, dispassionate remarks on the subject of the political issues and party claims. I like to approach this subject in a judicial way. The word "issue" when applied to politics is often used with such looseness as to be confusing. Strictly speaking, in order to raise an issue, there must be an affirmation on the one side and a negation on the other. It should be remembered that four-fifths of all the legislation in Congress is based upon the unanimous report of committees composed of the two leading parties, and sometimes third-party members; and there is no division on party lines, but only an effort to perfect the legislation to accomplish the end in view. A good illustration of that is the child-labor law which has been discussed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON]. There were no politics in that law. There was a unanimous report from the committee upon it, and more Republicans, proportionately, than Democrats voted for it.

This is a growing country, and the need for new laws is constantly appearing. The Democratic orators in Congress and out have this year been especially active in making claims "in behalf of their party" of legislation accomplished since their advent into power. The claims are very extraordinary and extravagant, but it is noticeable that nearly every one relates to legislation, and not to administration. Political issues can properly be divided into two classes; those which relate to the administration or execution of existing law or policy, and those which relate to new legislation, or the formation of a policy to be followed. Legislation which is properly the subject of a political issue should be disputed legislation, dividing the parties on party lines, and must relate to subjects on which the parties are clearly divided.

It is not fair for the political party in power to claim all the credit for all the legislation enacted during its term of control, regardless of this distinction. Most of the legislation for which the Democratic Party claims entire credit really originated under previous Republican administrations. The Federal reserve act was the outcome of the work of the Monetary Commission created under Taft. The Federal Trade Commission was a Republican measure and was expressly advocated in the Republican platform of 1912, but never mentioned in the Democratic platform. The income-tax amendment to the Constitution was passed during a Republican administration. The first time that rural credits attracted public attention was during the administration of President Taft, who sent a special message to Congress on the subject and later appointed a commission to investigate the matter in Europe. The Republican platform of 1912 contained a plank in favor of rural credits, and a similar plank was later inserted in the Democratic platform of that year. Federal aid to roads was advocated by all leading political parties in their platforms. The parcel-post law was enacted and the service established before the present administration came into power; and so we might go on almost to the end of the list of Democratic accomplishments.

In reading over President Wilson's speech of acceptance and the campaign speeches printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, there is one thing that strikes one most forcibly, and that is that so much space is devoted to claims based upon legislation and so little is said about administration. Evidently the Democratic Party has great faith in legislation as a remedy for human ills. Bryan is known to fame as "The apostle of the quantitative theory of money," but Wilson seems to be the apostle of the quantitative theory of legislation. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

He said the Democratic Party has fulfilled all its promises and points out what it has done, nine-tenths of which consists in the enumeration of new enactments, but he overlooks the fact that the chief promises which his party made were to reduce the cost of living and to practice economy in public affairs, and both of these promises have been ruthlessly broken. [Applause on the Republican side.] The cost of everything has certainly advanced and extravagance has run riot both in legislation and administration, so that war taxes have been imposed in times of profound peace, and the burden of taxation for the ordinary operations of public affairs, excluding any question of military preparedness, has increased enormously. What good does it do the man whose meat or grocery bill has been increased 20 per cent, or the farmer or the motorist whose gasoline bill has been doubled, to tell him that "we gave you the trade commission act, the Clayton antitrust law, and besides that the Federal reserve system and rural credits?" What does it boot the man whose shoes and clothing cost him more than ever that "The laws against trusts have been clarified by definition with a view to making it plain that they were not directed against big business," as remarked by President Wilson in his acceptance speech? The Democratic newspapers and orators have been profuse in their condemnation of the Republican candidate, Mr. Hughes, for criticizing the performances of the administration. Before I go on with that I want to say a word about trusts. It is claimed on the part of the Democratic Party that they have enacted trust legislation. When the price of gasoline rose 100 per cent last fall, entailing an enormous expense upon the farmers of my district, because they use gasoline for motive power for their traction engines and do most of their farming in that way, and also entailing enormous expense upon all who use motor boats or automobiles, I introduced a resolution asking the Department of Justice to prosecute those responsible for this unnatural increase. I took the ground that it was self-evident that it was not a natural increase in response to the law of supply and demand, but that it was an artificial rise in price through combination and monopoly. The Department of Justice answered that they had no evidence sufficient to prosecute anybody, but that they would instruct their United States attorneys throughout the country to keep watch, and they said one thing which was remarkable.

They said that in these times of European war everybody that dealt in anything would be likely to claim that the rise in price was due to the war. I made up my mind at that time that all of the dealers, especially in gasoline, must be Democrats, because they were blaming the war for everything, but that, according to the Department of Justice, was the excuse given. I then introduced a bill providing for Congress to fix a maximum price on gasoline through the Trade Commission. The Trade Commission investigated, pursuant to another resolution at the session before, this question of gasoline prices, and they found, as a matter of fact, that the rise in price was not due to natural causes, but must be the result of natural monopoly or combination. A similar conclusion was reached after the investigation by the Bureau of Mines and the Committee on Mines and Mining and by the Interior Department. There seems to be no question that the high price of gasoline was due to a monopoly, and yet with all these improved antimonopoly laws the Democratic Party is boasting about how helpless we are, according to the Department of Justice, and can get no relief. [Applause on the Republican side.]

There has been nobody put in jail for a violation of the antitrust laws during this administration that anybody ever heard of. [Applause on the Republican side.] They have pulled the teeth out of the antitrust law and they have instituted, according to the President's acceptance speech, the Trade Commission for the purpose of telling the people how they should monopolize and still not violate the law. Two years ago a leading member of the President's Cabinet, Mr. Bryan, went through the Northwest and made campaign speeches. Invariably he opened his speech by saying that for 12 years he had been prosecuting attorney, and had arraigned the Republican Party, the party which was then in power, for its misdeeds, but now that his own party had come into power he appeared for it as attorney for the defendant. The analogy is sound and complete. But now when our candidate for President and the Republican speakers criticize this administration for its performances the Democrats and their organs complain because they say we are criticizing them without telling them what we would have done under the circumstances. They are criticizing Mr. Hughes for his policy in this campaign, and yet his policy is exactly the policy they had pursued when they were in the minority and when we were in the majority and in power. It is therefore perfectly proper and fair for the Republicans to hold up the performances of the Democratic Party, both as to legislation and administration, to the public view. It is the only logical view to take of a political campaign under free institutions. This is a Government of parties. The American Nation is the jury, and that party which has possession of the offices and is in power is the defendant.

It is the duty of the minority in Congress to criticize the majority and hold them up to their responsibility. The country is benefited by an active and vigilant minority. We are but discharging our duty and rendering the country a valuable service in pointing out the disgraceful pork-barrel legislation that has recently been enacted. The $50,000,000 for flood control of the Mississippi is largely, it is said, to reclaim private lands, and the $20,000,000 for the nitrate plant is merely to manufacture cheap fertilizers for the South, and these are proper subjects of criticism. There are numerous indefensible items in the rivers and harbors bill. Many of the items in the appropriation bills seem to have been designed so as to extract as much money as possible from the Northern States and spend it in one section of the country, to wit, the South. When these things were called to the attention of the American people by Mr. Hughes and others gentlemen on this floor raised the cry that we were "waving the bloody shirt." Nothing can be farther from the truth. It was not that kind of a garment we were waving. What we were waving was a greasy, pork-besmirched shirt which they themselves were guilty of soiling. You are fond of pointing to the "record" of your party, but what you refer to is mostly words, words, words, either written or spoken. What the people want is deeds. The performance of promises does not consist merely in things written in legislation or said in speeches, but in results and in things done. The test of your policies was from March 4, 1913, to August 1, 1914. Then there was no European war, and the commerce and industry of the whole world was in a normal state. What was the result of your policies from March 4, 1913, to August 1, 1914? That was before the European war began, and the commerce and industry should have been normal. Where, then, was our prosperity? More than three-quarters of a million idle workmen were reported from our large cities in 1914 and idle freight cars by the hundreds of thousands.

The balance of trade was falling and the Treasury balance disappearing. Then came the war, in August, 1914. Congress was in session. The President appeared to make a special address in September to recommend the imposition of special war taxes. The dominating note in the message and in the departmental reports in the fall of that year was that the hard times, the shrinking customs and postal receipts, were due to the European war. The administration had been in power 17 months before the war began, but had offered no explanation of the industrial depression, the shrinking customs and postal receipts, and hard times; but within a few weeks after the war began, then explanations were profuse. The whole industrial depression, they said, was due to the war in Europe. The Postmaster General, in trying to explain the extraordinary falling off in postal receipts during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914—mind you, it was the fiscal year ending a month before the war began when the receipts had fallen off, showing that the business was smaller—in his official report said:

> In July, 1914, the first month of the fiscal year 1915, the rumblings of the European war were plainly heard, and the postal receipts declined perceptibly.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

He said that the rumblings of the war were heard and affected the postal receipts before the war began.

I am very glad, however, that the Postmaster General committed himself to an unvarying test of prosperity. We have heard and seen applied a good many tests of prosperity.

Some say it is the total manufactures, some say it is the total bank deposits, some say it is the total number of freight cars, and some say it is the balance of trade, but the Postmaster General, in his annual report, and the same thing is repeated by two of his assistants, says:

> It is a noteworthy fact that in no other activity, governmental or private, are conditions of prosperity or depression more quickly reflected than in the revenues of the postal establishment. Having a close relation to the affairs of all the people, the postal receipts may be used as a thermometer, as it were, to ascertain existing conditions of business, and as a barometer to forecast those to come.

With all due respect to the barometer part, I do not believe you can forecast so much, but you can certainly state what has happened. The quotation is a maxim in political truth, and it only has this qualification, that the laws in regard to mailable matter and postage should be the same for the two periods compared.

In comparing postal receipts in the years before parcel post and after, this distinction should be borne in mind.

"Now, for a good many years," says the Postmaster General in his official report, "the ordinary and usual increase in receipts has been 7 per cent, or a fraction over 7 per cent."

It is a notable fact that the tendency to blame the European war for the business and industrial depression continued until the summer of 1915, when orders for all kinds of supplies came in and business began to revive. The postal receipts then began to grow again. When there was business depression it was due to the war, and when business revived it was credited to the Democratic Party. Common fairness would have required that credit for business revival should have been given where it belonged, to the European war demand, but never a word was heard on that score. On the contrary, the chief effort has been to prove that the war orders were but a small part of the total business in our foreign and domestic trade. They began to say that after all it was the Underwood law that was beginning to show its merits. They began to magnify our prosperity on every occasion, and to attribute it to Democratic legislation and Democratic tariff policies.

The table of postal receipts from month to month follows.

From this table it will be seen that the falling off in the normal increase, which is 7 per cent, appears in the first eight months of 1914, and during the last four months there is an actual decrease which continues until July, 1915, when the war orders for munitions and supplies of all kinds began coming in, and by September, 1915, and from then on the receipts have been far above the normal, showing the real source of our prosperity.

Statement of postal receipts at the 50 largest post offices, by months, from January, 1910, to July 1, 1916, inclusive, showing the percentage of increase or decrease.

Month.	Year.	Receipts.	Per cent increase.	Per cent decrease.
January	1910	$9,006,960
	1911	9,642,524	— 6.1
	1912	10,374,610	— 7.5
	1913	12,386,358	—10.7
	[1] 1914	12,629,225	— 1.1
	1915	11,586,390		—9.0
	1916	12,832,655	+ 9.8
February	1910	8,732,830
	1911	9,397,872	— 6.0
	1912	10,127,769	— 8.1
	1913	11,242,089	—10.9
	1914	11,637,402	— 3.2
	1915	11,074,330		—4.8
	1916	12,805,615	+13.5
March	1910	10,729,133
	1911	11,175,486	— 4.1
	1912	11,361,515	— 1.6
	1913	12,833,338	—12.9
	[2] 1914	13,257,925	— 3.3
	1915	13,223,870		— .25
	1916	14,463,984	+ 8.5
April	1910	9,075,224
	1911	9,715,129	— 6.0
	1912	10,612,765	— 9.2
	1913	11,565,746	— 8.9
	1914	12,456,547	— 7.7
	1915	12,183,884		—2.2
	1916	13,285,070	+ 8.3
May	1910	8,561,262
	1911	9,237,842	— 7.9
	1912	9,988,187	— 8.1
	1913	11,484,106	—15.9
	1914	11,519,727	— 1.1
	1915	11,485,139		— .3
	1916	13,445,301	+14.5
June	1911	9,325,118	— 5.0
	1912	9,341,831	— .01
	1913	10,568,012	—13.2
	1914	11,324,912	— 7.1
	1915	11,558,467	— 2.5
	1916	13,112,942	+11.8
July	1911	7,827,425	— 4.7
	1912	8,760,176	—10.7
	1913	10,053,371	—14.7
	1914	10,536,394	— 4.7
	1915	10,529,001	— .02
August	1910	8,511,822
	1911	9,111,302	— 7.0
	1912	9,803,385	— 7.5
	[3] 1913	10,374,217	— 5.8
	1914	10,250,204		—2.6
	1915	10,661,912	— 4.8
September	1910	9,920,635
	1911	10,228,787	— 3.1
	1912	10,233,005	— .00
	1913	12,077,730	—18.0
	1914	11,775,702		2.6
	1915	12,341,479	4.8
October	1910	9,723,408
	1911	10,246,147	— 5.4
	1912	11,785,754	—15.0
	1913	13,278,774	—12.7
	1914	12,751,040		—4.2
	1915	13,207,259	— 3.5

[1] Limit raised 50 pounds.
[2] Books admitted.
[3] Weight limit raised to 30 pounds.

Statement of postal receipts at the 50 largest post offices, etc.—Cont'd.

Month.	Year.	Receipts.	Per cent increase.	Per cent decrease.
November	1910	$9,979,477
	1911	10,295,412	— 3.1
	1912	10,757,250	— 4.4
	1913	12,001,539	— 1.1
	1914	11,316,311		—6.0
	1915	13,349,450	17.9
December	1910	11,562,213
	1911	11,858,917	— 2.6
	1912	12,387,422	— 4.4
	1913	14,973,479	—20.3
	1914	14,241,922		5.1
	1915	15,905,241	11.6

Never in the history of this country have the different bureaus of this Government been so perverted to partisan purposes as they have been during this administration. [Applause on the Republican side.]

As proof of that I cite to you the fact that when the Postmaster General came in he was hardly "dry behind the ears" in his office before he changed the system of bookkeeping and wiped out a postal surplus of his predecessor as shown by the books of the auditor's department, who is an official of the Treasury. He wiped it out by main strength, because he said he was going to estimate it on a different plan, and then he went to work to show the figures, and he claimed that for the first time in 30 years there was a postal surplus. That was the year ending June 30, 1913.

Now, mind you, he had only been in office 3 months and 26 days. There was not a single Democratic law on the statute books. The Taft administration was in power until the 4th of March, 1913—8 months and 4 days of that fiscal year.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I certainly will.

Mr. COX. The gentleman recognizes, does he not, that that report to which the gentleman now refers was made by four men, and among them Gen. Stewart, Second Assistant Postmaster General, who was a Republican who had held that position for 16 years under a Republican administration, signed that report to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, it is so palpably wrong that I do not care who made it. You can not fool anybody who knows anything about that business. Of course, we know that subservient officials will do almost anything in order to hold their jobs, especially Republicans under a Democratic administration. Mr. Burleson had been in office 3 months and 26 days of that fiscal year, and he arrogated to himself the accumulation of four and one-half million dollars of postal surplus; and it was all due, he said, to the glorious legislation of the Democratic Party, although there was not a line of Democratic legislation on the books. [Applause on the Republican side.] The tariff act was not enacted until October. July, August, and September expired before it was enacted. Why should he claim that this postal surplus—the first in 30 years—was the great achievement of his party, when in fact it was accumulated by the Republican administration of President Taft that preceded him? The most he was entitled to claim was a million and a half for the 3 months and 26 days in which his party had been in office.

The next year he claimed $3,500,000 as a surplus for the fiscal year 1914. Then comes the fiscal year 1915, and there was an $11,333,000 deficit, wiping out all this boasted postal surplus.

But another thing happened. In order to force a showing of a surplus in the previous year he refused to pay the rural carriers their salaries as fixed by Congress. [Applause on the Republican side.] He withheld from them $2,225,000, which a Democratic House and Senate, in this year A. D. 1916, ordered him to pay unwillingly, and which he had wrongfully withheld from them. [Applause on the Republican side.] It was a rebuke to an executive officer and to the President that they ought to take to heart, and when you consider that that must be deducted, then the deficit grows by that amount.

The department estimates that for this past fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, they will have a surplus of $5,800,000, of which they say they paid over $5,200,000 to the Treasury and kept $600,000 as a working balance.

Assuming that they have this surplus for the last year, which will be the fourth year of the administration, and we add together $3,500,000 and $1,500,000; that is $5,000,000, and $5,800,000 more; that is $10,800,000; but we deduct $2,225,000 and $11,333,000, the deficit for the last fiscal year, and the money withheld from the carriers, which has now been ordered paid to them, and we have for the four years a net postal deficit of $2,758,000. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, was it not remarkable that so versatile a writer and politician as the President should write a letter of acceptance and forget the most important department of his Government and its achievements? The Postal Service reaches every man, woman, and child in the United States in daily contact, and yet in his letter of acceptance he totally forgot this great service that the Postmaster General has been boasting of for the last four years. Why is that? I will tell you what I think. The Postal Service under the present administration started out with popularity, but placed at the head of that department was a very strong, a very ardent, Democratic politician. He started out, not to render service to the people, not to administer the functions of that department efficiently and well, but to make political capital for the Democratic Party, and seeing that the receipts of the Government were falling off and that it was necessary to impose war taxes he conceived the idea that they were going to bleed the Postal Service for the general expenses of the Government. So the first proposition came to substitute the contract system for rural carriers instead of having them appointed under the civil-service law—letting out the routes by contract. The Postmaster General figured that he was going to save $18,000,000 by that. Also—and this was where the civil-service fidelity came in—he was going to abolish 2,800 assistant postmasters, or abolish their title, so as to be able to put in some new men, good and worthy Democrats, I have no doubt. But such publicity was given to the scheme, and the newspapers gave such voice to the resentment of the public, that the contract system for the rural service was abandoned. Even the Democrats in both houses were opposed to it.

What was the next proposition? That was to secure legislation authorizing the establishment of motor routes of 50 miles. The proposition went forth to motorize nearly all the rural routes in the country, consolidating the ordinary horse-drawn vehicle routes of 24 miles or less each and making two or three of those routes into one motor route. And, mind you, the man who ran the motor would not be under the civil service.

They would thus be able to do away with many, perhaps 25,000 civil-service employees, and substitute these contract men on the motorized routes. But this proved to be an unpopular proposition, and instead of getting it sanctioned by law, the Democratic House and Senate by law again rebuked the malfeasance in office of the administration of the Post Office Department by saying to them, "You must reorganize your motor routes. You must reemploy the old carriers. You must not establish new motor routes unless they are petitioned for by the patrons of the routes." And in the same provision the department was required to standardize the horse-drawn-vehicle routes. That was a limitation upon the discretion of the department that had never been thought of before; but they themselves said and thought that they could not trust this administration of the department with any discretion of that kind.

I want to call attention to another performance. In the great cities of Boston, New York, and Chicago, for instance, they took the old mail carriers and classified them into carriers of lower grades in order to reduce their salaries. Old and faithful employees were thus demoted and deprived of $100 or $200 a year. Their complaints were heard in Congress. So another clause went into the Post Office appropriation bill, requiring this administrative branch of the Government to reinstate those demoted carriers and restore them to their salaries. Can you wonder at the fact that the President of the United States forgot to say anything about the preformances of this department?

Here is what a Democratic Senator, Senator HARDWICK, of Georgia, said about it:

"This is not an effort to cripple a great department of the Government, but, on the contrary, it is an effort to keep a department of the Government from absolutely crippling and ruining a great department of the public service."

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Then, again, says Senator HARDWICK:

"If my State were not as certainly Democratic as it is, the conduct of the Post Office Department in that State would have lost it to the Democratic Party, and as it is it may cost it many votes; although, thank God, we can stand it and still have plenty of votes to spare. If we were a State in the Middle West, it would be impossible for the Democratic Party to carry it with any such administration of its Post Office Department as we have had there in respect to this matter of rural-mail service."

There were a lot of others. One of the Members of this House from Georgia was almost as vigorous in his remarks on this floor.

Senator GALLINGER, the leader of the Republicans in the Senate, said:

"The manner in which they have torn to pieces the rural mail service in my State and cut it off has been something intolerable."

Senator GALLINGER further said:

"I want to say that the destruction is universal. I have been deluged with appeals and protests from my own State and from other New England States that the administration of the Rural Delivery Service was absolutely indefensible."

The newspapers took this up, and the result was legislation to force this department to cease its malpractice and abuse of discretion.

In this connection I want to say something in the same line, but which affects the claim of the Democratic Party to loyalty to the civil service. In the fall of 1914, when the annual report of the Post Office Department came before the Committee on Post Office and Post Roads, it contained a very innocent recommendation for new legislation which they wanted put into the appropriation bill as a rider. It simply declared that the Post Office Department should have authority to establish substations of any post office in the country.

The thing went through without much attention. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] incorporated it in the appropriation bill, which he introduced, and it passed the committee and the House without debate. It went to the Senate and was stricken out; but, as I am told, through the urgent lobbying of the Post Office Department, the conferees were induced to put it back into the bill. But, as you will remember, that bill failed in a filibuster in the Senate and never became a law. Now, I want to explain the effect of it, if it had become a law. It would have enabled the Post Office Department, as they said they intended, to make one head post office in each county, all the other offices to be substations in charge either of clerks at $900 or more a year, or, if they did not have an income of $900, they would be substations in charge of a contract supervisor, the same as the drug-store stations in the cities.

That, of course, would have removed all the 40,000 fourth-class postmasters who are now under the civil service, and it would have given the appointment of all the contract substation superintendents to the postmasters in the county seats, who would control their salaries and their tenure of office. The postmaster at the county seat would have been the biggest political boss ever known to American history. [Applause on the Republican side.] By that time every county-seat postmaster was a Democrat, and the First Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Roper, a very shrewd politician, who is now managing the speakers' bureau of the Democratic national committee, and who appointed all the fourth-class postmasters of the United States during his incumbency of office, was a very ardent advocate of this proposition. To show that the present administration was vitally interested in it, I will say that after the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads voted it down it reappeared in the annual report of the Post Office Department as a recommendation for new legislation in the appropriation bill. After the explanation the committee turned it down, and the Democrats on the committee, I believe, were influenced largely by the fact that it would enable the department to take from Members the patronage of the second and third class offices. So we defeated it in committee, and the department was so persistent that they went over to the Senate and got it inserted as an amendment to the postal-savings law.

Mr. AYRES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. Who does the gentleman mean by "we" defeated it, the minority of the committee?

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, no; the whole committee. The department through its influence got it inserted by the Senate in the postal savings bank bill, and the conferees on that bill, of which I was one, opposed it, and the chairman and the two Democratic conferees, on the ground that it took away their patronage, were against it. The House sustained our position, and it went out.

That was not the end of it. When the appropriation bill went to the Senate and passed and came back to the House and conferees were appointed, lo and behold, the representatives of the department again brought in this proposition for a substation and for authority to abolish the 40,000 fourth-class postmasters in the country and make them subservient to the postmaster of the county seat, who would very largely fix their compensation and tenure of office, and insisted that it should go into the conference report. They brought to bear all the pressure they were capable of, and I never have been able to understand their great anxiety in the matter. I informed them it was not a proper subject for conference, because it was not in dispute between the two Houses, and that I should make a point of order against it, and no effort was made to put it in the bill.

Now, the four items—first, to get rid of the assistant postmasters; second, to do away with the rural carriers and to establish a contract system; third, to motorize the routes; and fourth, to abolish the fourth-class post offices, were all in the interest of the spoils system. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You understand that it makes no difference; when the party in power has control of the postmasters, then they can appoint whoever they please. What they need is vacancies. The trouble with the civil service is that all the fourth-class postmasters have not been kicked out, and there are a few left that passed an examination. Under this they could create vacancies in the twinkling of an eye, and they would all be filled by deserving Democrats. I have mentioned these things to show you the record of the administration of the Post Office Department under Woodrow Wilson.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The gentleman is the ranking Republican member of the Post Office Committee, and I would like to have him comment on the statement of the President in his speech of acceptance that the Democratic Party had created the parcel post.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not think he says that; but if he does, it is not true. I think he says that they extended the parcel post.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The ordinary Democratic speakers claim it in a vague way as a Democratic achievement, and the President went them one better.

Mr. STEENERSON. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to say, in a general way, that it seems to me that the President and his supporters in the claims that they have made have misconceived the functions of the President. The Constitution says that the President shall take care that the laws are faithfully executed. That is his principal function. Nine-tenths of what is stated by the Democrats and the President about the achievements of the party consists in making new laws, but nothing about administering efficiently the existing laws.

As a good illustration, I noticed in the paper this morning the following statement from Dr. Wiley, formerly the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, who supported Mr. Wilson four years ago:

ADMINISTRATION INDIFFERENT TO PURE FOOD, SAYS WILEY.

WASHINGTON, September 2.

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, the noted pure-food expert, who was active in the campaign for Wilson in 1912, has come out for Hughes.

In a letter made public here to-day, Dr. Wiley says he favors the election of Hughes for reasons entirely different from those held by most of his supporters.

"It is not because of the Mexican or the foreign policy of this administration nor by reason of its domestic policies," says Dr. Wiley, "that I favor the election of Mr. Hughes.

"It is because of the indifference of the administration of President Wilson to the cause of pure food and drugs. Practically all of the abuses which were injected into the pure-food law by the preceding administrations are still in force. Benzoate of soda is still regnant. The fumes of burning sulphur are marching along undisturbed.

"There is evidently a lull in the activities of the administration of the law. Coca Cola, declared by the Supreme Court misbranded and amenable to the pure-food law, has not been molested. No attempt has been made to enforce the law on the bleaching of flour. The repeal of the mixed-flour law, that splendid safeguard to the purity of our bread, has been tacitly approved by the Treasury Department.

"Mr. Hughes, in his activities on the Supreme Bench, has stood like a stone wall for the proper administration of the food law. I believe his election would see a radical change in the attitude of the Government toward pure food and pure drugs, so vital to the welfare of our people. For this reason I sincerely hope that Mr. Hughes will be chosen our next President.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for me to read a sentence from the President's speech of acceptance?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota (reading)—

We have created, extended, and improved the service of the parcel post.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is not true. It was created before this administration came into power and everybody knows it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Was it not created during the Cleveland administration, and was not the first route established at that time—in 1896?

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman is mistaken. I will not yield for any historical misstatements of that kind.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Oklahoma is thinking about the Rural Delivery Service, and not about the parcel post.

Mr. HASTINGS. I thought the gentleman from Minnesota was speaking about the Rural Delivery Service?

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I said that evidently the President and his supporters had misconceived the functions of the President, because they speak almost entirely of new legislation and have not said a word about how he has administered existing laws. He waited to accept the nomination until he had a few more scalps on his belt in the shape of new laws, the last being the child-labor law, which he dangled before the people. That is not the business of the President. He can recommend, but he should not force legislation in that way. Nor is it a thing to be especially boastful of. He wants it to appear that he is the greatest lawgiver since Moses. What he ought to show is that he has been the best administrator of the law since Abraham Lincoln, and he can not do it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

What the country needs is efficiency in administration and execution of the laws. This tendency to make new laws and create new functions and functionaries is an expensive matter to the people. Instead of lightening the burdens of taxation, the present administration has added to them. Not only have they packed pork barrels and enacted extravagant appropriations, but they have created more new offices than any Congress ever did before. There is published a Senate document each year giving the number of these new offices for each session. The record for the present session is not yet completed, and probably will not be until after election. But the record for the Sixty-third Congress shows that 24,900 new offices were created which add an expense of $26,000,000 per annum for their salaries. As the appropriations are much larger this present session, it is a fair estimate that more than 50,000 new offices have been created already. Mind you, this has nothing to do with the military program, or the Army and Navy, but relates to the civil service exclusively.

No fair-minded man can review the Mexican policy without coming to the conclusion that it has been a lamentable and dismal failure from beginning to end.

It is not only a failure, but a colossal blunder. One hundred and fifty thousand American citizens, good, worthy, and industrious people, not exploiters of peons, as has been alleged, have been turned from their homes, and many of them robbed and outraged, and more than 500 of them murdered. The outrages committed upon American citizens are enumerated in the letter of Mr. Lansing to the Carranza government which I will insert in the RECORD, and which is a graphic description of the results of watchful waiting. Viewed from a legal standpoint, the policy of the administration is also indefensible. The power to declare war is in Congress. The President, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and the Militia, may suppress insurrection and repel invasion, but he can not carry on offensive warfare and invade the territory of another nation without committing an act of war, as the Constitution has vested the power to declare war in Congress. He is not authorized to commit acts of offensive war or to begin a war of aggression without a previous declaration of war by Congress. A declaration of war is an act of Congress, and is signed by the President, and is one of the laws of the Union, and the Constitution expressly provides that the President shall have power to "execute the laws of the Union."

The first two things—suppress insurrection and repel invasion—he can do without consulting Congress, but the third should succeed, not precede—a declaration of war. In the case of Vera Cruz the President actually made war and invaded the country and seized the town before he obtained authority from Congress to do so. The resolution that was offered in Congress and subsequently passed was not even a declaration of war, but a declaration that we authorized the use of the military forces for an invasion of Mexico, and added the hypocritical declaration that we did not intend to make war on the people of Mexico. It was like slapping a man in the face and then saying that we did not intend to assault him. Speaking from the legal point of view, the seizure of Vera Cruz was an act of aggressive war committed by the President without authority of Congress. It was an act for which there is no precedent. The next invasion was the so-called punitive expedition. Now, it may be conceded that as a part of the power to repel invasion the President had the right under international law to pursue the hot trail of bandits into Mexico and punish them. After the raid on Columbus our troops did pursue the raiders, and they were either disbanded or killed, and our forces returned to the United States. Then came the organization of the punitive expedition. Before sending it negotiations with the Carranza government were opened in Washington, and it was officially announced from the White House and the State Department that an arrangement was about to be completed. But here comes the latest blunder. Before the negotiations were completed the punitive expedition invaded Mexico, and the Mexican Government demanded their withdrawal. Under these circumstances the Carrizal incident occurred, and some of our brave officers and soldier boys were killed, and our troops were forced back to their Mexican base.

Has any explanation ever been made of why the Secretary of State did not complete his negotiations before sending the expedition? By entering into negotiations he recognized that he had no right to send the expedition without consent.

The President, in explaining his foreign policy, says he treats small nations with the same consideration as great ones. Suppose that a warship in the harbor of Victoria, British Columbia, had sent a boat crew ashore and they had been arrested for some violation of the rules of the harbor, and the commanding officer had demanded an apology and they were released, and then a demand for a salute to the flag, and refusal. Then, do you suppose that the President would have ordered the sailors and marines to land and take the customhouse at Victoria? And suppose he had done so, what would have been the opinion of the American people of such a course? Would not the cry at once have gone up that the President had commenced a war of aggression without authority from Congress, or of law? Or, suppose that bandit raiders from Canada had invaded Montana, and suppose that after they had been pursued and disbanded and our forces returned, that we had begun negotiations with Great Britain for permission to send a punitive expedition to further punish the remnant of the bandits, and while these negotiations were pending our armed forces were actually sent to invade Canada, but after being ordered out were fired upon. There would be no question then of the illegality of such procedure. It would be a violation of our Constitution and laws, as well as of international law. But this is precisely the conduct of the President toward Mexico, and it does not bear out his statement that it is his policy to treat strong and weak nations alike. From the point of international law and right, Mexico has had the best of the argument in these conflicts. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two minutes more, in order that he may answer a question that I desire to ask.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would be glad to answer any questions if I had the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would interfere with the order of proceedings, which has already been fixed. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the naval appropriation bill and upon the rural credit bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PEACEABLE SETTLEMENT OF RAILROAD STRIKE.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit some remarks upon the President's peaceable settlement of the railroad strike and the attitude of ex-Supreme Court Judge Hughes upon that subject. The gentleman nominated for President by the Republican bosses criticizes the President of the United States for bringing about a peaceable settlement of the greatest railroad strike that ever threatened the people of the United States. The Republican candidate for the office of President is indeed hard pressed for an issue. It seems that he is willing to oppose any position taken by the President, it matters not how grave and serious the question or how just the position of the President. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If the President had not acted and the strike had come, the President would then have been compelled to use force in breaking up the strike [applause on the Democratic side], and, Mr. Speaker, if the President had stood quietly by and permitted the strike to come, Mr. Hughes would have been the very first man to criticize—yes, and to denounce him for not preventing the strike. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If the course suggested by Mr. Hughes had been followed, the transportation facilities of the country would now be tied up, stagnation of business would prevail, and inside of a week the people of Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, and other large cities would be upon the verge of starvation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But the candidate of the Republican Party, it seems, is willing to take up anything as an issue if his support of it will get him votes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not.

Mr. MEEKER. Just for a question.

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. No. I have but little time. Mr. Hughes is not fair when he tries to make the country believe that the settlement of the railroad strike was government by force. The failure to settle that strike would have produced business stagnation, starvation, and industrial war, and when President Wilson settled it he rendered a great service to the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

President Wilson, in trying to settle the strike, said to railroad employer and employee: The matter in controversy affects both of you and it also affects the public, and if you should not agree and the strike should occur it will paralyze business and work great injury to people all over the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Then we hear him pleading with both parties to the controversy. He points out the necessity for a peaceable settlement of their differences. He shows how the business of farm and factory would be injured and he points out to them how utterly helpless the people would be if the strike should come. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And finally, Mr. Speaker, the trainmen said: "Mr. President, your appeal touches us deeply. You have shown a disposition to do the fair and just thing, and we do not desire to embarrass you or to injure the country, and while there are several matters of difference between us we are willing to defer settlement of all of them but one, and that is, the eight-hour-a-day service for trainmen.

"Many of the railroads of the United States have already adopted the eight-hour plan, and they are pleased with the change from the old system. The trainmen look better and they fare better than those of us who are held down to the old system. We are convinced that the eight-hour principle for this character of work is right and just, and we feel that from the just and the humane standpoint we are entitled to it.

"We have seen the beneficent results of the eight-hour plan enjoyed by the other railroads and the other trainmen and we have determined to secure the adoption of that principle for our brotherhood. If the railroad presidents, some of whom have privately admitted that our contention is right, will give us a trial on the eight-hour plan, we will continue to work, and all of the other matters in controversy can be settled between us later."

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

But the spokesman for the railroad presidents said, "It will cost us money to adopt the eight-hour plan. We are willing to arbitrate the proposition." Whereupon the trainmen said, "We are willing to arbitrate all of the other questions in dispute, but there is nothing to arbitrate concerning the eight-hour plan until you institute it and obtain facts regarding its operation. We are willing for the trial of the eight-hour plan to determine whether it shall be temporary or permanent, but we insist that you put it on trial. Other roads have done so, and the good results to both roads and trainmen justify us in demanding that the experiment be made for us." This the railroad presidents declined to do, and the trainmen said, "We will order a strike." Then the President of the United States said, in substance, "Gentlemen, let me suggest a peaceable and a fair solution of this matter. I take it that both of you are willing to yield a little here and a little yonder in order to prevent a strike and that both of you are willing to concede that the public has rights in this matter which are paramount to those that you possess; and realizing, as I do, that a railroad strike would bring business ruin to the country and produce starvation in many sections of the United States, I am going to suggest that the eight-hour plan be adopted temporarily and given a few months' trial, and in order that the railroads may not be burdened with additional expense by adopting the eight-hour plan, I will appoint a commission to investigate the operation of it, and if it is shown that the inauguration of the eight-hour plan increases your operating expenses, you shall have the necessary increase in freight rates."

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, could the President have been more considerate, fair, and just?

What did the trainmen say? They said, "We are willing to put aside all other matters in dispute and take the eight-hour plan on trial, and if this is agreed to we will not quit work, and there will be no strike." [Applause on the Democratic side.] What did the railroad presidents do? They refused to accept the suggestion of the President of the United States. And I submit that under all the circumstances their conduct showed no consideration for the public but was inexcusable and indefensible and, Mr. Speaker, the demeanor of some of them was exceedingly suspicious. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It was rumored here in the Capital of the Nation that certain railroad presidents had said before they left New York that no suggestion of the President would be accepted, and that the strike would surely come.

Yes; it was rumored that certain railroad presidents, belonging to the Republican Party, had agreed to be stubborn and unyielding and by their conduct force a strike, which would destroy the prosperity of the people and bring financial ruin to the country in the hope that it would injure President Wilson politically and help the Republican candidate in his race for President.

Was there ever a more gruesome game undertaken or criminal conspiracy formed by political desperadoes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Here is a statement that seems to substantiate the rumor that a conspiracy had been formed to force a railroad strike. I read from the New York World a statement made by a railroad president immediately after the President of the United States had signed the bill which prevented the strike. The statement was made by E. P. Ripley, president of the Santa Fe Railroad system.

He said, "I am sorry the strike has been called off," and now let me read what the World had to say editorially about this heartless statement of Mr. Ripley.

Sorry that American industry is not to be paralyzed? Sorry that thousands of innocent people are not to be ruined financially? Sorry that losses of hundreds of millions of dollars are not to be inflicted upon the country? Sorry that the people of the great cities are not to be in a state of famine, with all the suffering and death that this would cause? Sorry that the United States is not to be plunged into a civil war?

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, in the settlement of the strike, the President of the United States has prevented stagnation and ruin in every line of business in the country, and he has done this without injuring any railroad in the United States. He has prevented industrial war, bloodshed, and starvation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And yet Mr. Ripley, a partisan Republican, expresses regret because President Wilson has prevented untold suffering and misery amongst the people of our country. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, the big political bosses are sore because they are out of power. They are sore because they can not dictate the policies of the President or control the action of Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

When the Republicans were in power the bosses had their way, and they got what they wanted, either by furnishing big campaign funds or by threatening to produce a strike or a panic.

In 1907, when Mr. Roosevelt was President, the stock gamblers of Wall Street desired Government money to carry on their operations, and they called on President Roosevelt for Government funds. He did not respond just then, and they threatened to produce a panic. They did produce a panic, demoralized business, and brought ruin to hundreds of thousands of our people. Then Roosevelt surrendered and opened the Treasury of the United States and let those who had produced the panic have millions of the people's money. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And those who got that Government money loaned it out in New York at a high rate of interest, and profited greatly at the expense of the public by the panic that they had produced by the ruin that they had wrought. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Did Mr. Hughes say then that Roosevelt's act in trying to get rid of the panic was a cowardly surrender to those who had not only threatened to produce but who had actually produced a panic? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Roosevelt used to say, "Down with the bosses"; but President Wilson says, "Down with the conditions that produce the bosses." With the Federal reserve act he took from a few money lords in Wall Street the power to produce panics, which tied up the money supply of the country and destroyed values over night. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And in passing the strike-settlement measure he has prevented the carrying out of a strike conspiracy, which, if it had been successful, would have demoralized trade, shut down industries, and injured business of every character in the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

When a Republican President was held up by the panic-producing plutocrats of the East and they demanded access to the funds of the Government, and that Republican President surrendered to them the key to the United States Treasury, Mr. Hughes found no fault with that criminal conduct. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But when a patriotic Democrat, like President Wilson, the servant of all the people, is face to face with a great railroad strike, whose attendant evils would bring business disturbance and ruin in nearly every field of endeavor, and when the President prevents that public calamity by peaceable means to the good of all the people and without injury to employer or employee, why, Mr. Hughes calls it government by force. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

According to Mr. Hughes's philosophy, it is all right to suspend a statute or open the Public Treasury to big organized interests when they demand it, but all wrong to avert a railroad strike by doing the thing necessary to prevent demoralization of trade and business ruin amongst the whole people of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If 20 per cent of the railroads of the country had already adopted the eight-hour plan, and employer and employee were both pleased with its operation, and if the presidents of these roads had said that the practical and beneficial results had been such as not only to fully justify the roads in its adoption, but that they would not exchange the eight-hour plan for the old system, was not the President of the United States justified, in the face of a threatened strike, in requesting the other roads to institute the eight-hour plan as an experiment, in order that we could try it out and let a commission appointed by the President watch its operation, with the view of reporting all the facts as to its feasibility and cost of operation and of granting an increase in freight rates, if necessary, to meet any additional expense placed upon the roads by the eight-hour plan? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Then when certain Republican railroad presidents declined to submit the matter temporarily to Government investigation they showed a desire to aid in forcing a strike rather than a disposition to aid the President in preventing it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And, Mr. Speaker, I submit to this House and to the country that President Wilson was not only justified in taking the steps he did to prevent the strike, but that he is entitled to the united praise of the American people for preventing the greatest industrial disturbance and business calamity that ever came upon the country, a calamity that would have cost the people of the United States $100,000,000 a day. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In seeking to settle the railroad strike and prevent widespread disaster and untold suffering amongst the American people the President has not sought to injure the railroads in question and he has not injured them. When President Wilson prevented the strike he performed a solemn duty and rendered signal service to the whole people of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The railroads have rights and I respect them. I realize that they are rendering a great service to our people. Their trains are the vehicles of transportation and their roads the indispensable arteries of commerce. The commercial and industrial welfare of the country and the very lives of our people are dependent upon the railroads, and I for one favor just and fair treatment for all these mighty agencies in the service of my country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am the friend of railroad employer and employee, and if I know my own heart I want to see both of them fare well and prosper.

Mr. Speaker, the people also have rights, and it is my duty as a Representative to see that those rights are respected. Constant and uninterrupted railroad service is absolutely necessary to the conduct of our business and to the well-being and happiness of the American people [applause on the Democratic side], and the President of the United States owes it to the people to see to it that no quarrel between railroad employer and employee should be permitted to tie up these transportation facilities and bring stagnation and business ruin to the people of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There are several strikes pending now. We would like to hear about them.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; and the American people are going to strike the boss-ridden Republican Party a tremendous blow on the 7th of November. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It may be that some of the strikes that the gentleman has in mind are being inspired for political purposes; but I can assure the gentleman that as long as President Wilson is in the White House no strike of a national character will be permitted to curse the American people, while it fights the battles of the time-serving Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Thank God for Woodrow Wilson. The cause of the humblest man commands his attention and every honest American citizen has a friend in him. [Applause on Democratic side.] When he was governor of New Jersey he gave to the trainmen of that State the full-crew law, but just across the line in the State of New York Gov. Hughes vetoed the full-crew bill passed by the legislature of that State [applause on the Democratic side], and when the people of New York City asked that the street car fare to Coney Island be reduced from 10 cents to 5 cents, stating that they could ride from one end of New York City to the other for 5 cents, a greater distance than that to Coney Island, and that if the reduction could be had it would be a blessing to the poor children in the city who could then be taken to Coney Island on Sunday for the sunshine and fresh air. What do you suppose Gov. Hughes did about it? Why the legislature passed the bill granting the 5-cent fare and he killed it with his veto. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Talk about the old boss-controlled Republican Party of today being the party of Lincoln, when Lincoln stood for the policy that placed the man above the dollar. Why, if Lincoln could come back to life there is one thing certain and that is he would repudiate the political oligarchy of PENROSE, SMOOT, and CRANE. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I can not yield.

Mr. MEEKER. Then I will make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. You can not take the gentleman from Alabama off the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. But the desire to do it, Mr. Speaker, is in keeping with the spirit of fairness found in some of the hide-bound Republicans in this House. They rise in defense of plutocracy. They applaud those who stand for the aristocracy of the dollar, and they serve their masters, the special interests; but when some friend of the people rises here to plead for right, for justice, and humanity some hickory-nut-headed helgibite is ready to make the point of no quorum. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, without fear or favor, but with a courage sublime and an eye single to the public good, President Wilson meets and masters public questions. In settling the railroad strike he pursued the wisest and best course open to him, and out of the 126 Republicans voting on the question in the House, 70 voted for President Wilson's plan as against the position of the Republican candidate for President, Mr. Hughes. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In the Senate, Senator LA FOLLETTE, a Republican, voted for the President's plan as against the position of Mr. Hughes, while PENROSE and SMOOT voted against the measure, the passage of which has prevented industrial war and business disaster of every kind, kept the wheels of industry going and the transportation facilities performing their helpful functions to the people of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to print as a part of my remarks a portion of the arbitration commission's report on the railroad strike that threatened the eastern roads a few years ago. This report is signed by Charles R. Van Hise (chairman), Oscar S. Straus, F. N. Judson, Otto M. Eidlitz, Albert Shaw, and D. Willard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extracts are as follows:

THE SERIOUS NATURE OF A CONCERTED STRIKE.

Never in the history of the United States has there been a concerted strike on all the railroads of a great section of the country. The strikes have usually been upon individual roads, although in some cases strikes have taken place upon a number of roads at the same time. The present arbitration, involving as it does a concerted movement affecting 52 railroads, is therefore a new phase of development.

On January 27, 1912, the locomotive engineers made uniform requests upon all the railroads in the eastern district. The railroads affected by these demands had in 1910 an aggregate of 66,876 miles of main track, as compared with 266,185 for the whole United States, or 25.1 per cent of the total mileage. These railways represent nearly 40 per cent of the aggregate revenues and expenses of all the railways of the United States, from 42 to 47 per cent of the traffic, something over 40 per cent of the total number of employees, of the number of engineers, and of the compensation of these employees. The population of the great region immediately affected by this movement is over 38,000,000, as compared with approximately 54,000,000 for the remainder of the country, or about 42 per cent of the total population. If we assume that the wealth of the region is in proportion to the amount of railroad traffic and to the density of population, it may be fairly concluded that the territory affected by this demand represents at least four-tenths of the wealth of the country. As we have seen, the managers, after several conferences with the locomotive engineers, refused to accede to the requests of the engineers. The question of a strike was then submitted to the men. The vote showed 93.3 per cent of the men in favor of a strike, provided a satisfactory settlement could not be made. All that was necessary for a strike to take place was the assent of the grand chief engineer in conjunction with the general committees of the different railroads. This assent is necessary, for if a strike is voted by the members of the brotherhood, the grand chief has the veto power.

At the hearings of the arbitration it seemed to be the opinion of the parties concerned that if the engineers had declared a strike it would have effectively tied up the railroads in the eastern district.

An effective strike on these railroads, extending through an area that includes all of New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Ohio, Indiana, the lower Peninsula of Michigan, much of Illinois, and a small part of West Virginia, would have had most disastrous effects upon the commerce and industry of this entire region, to say nothing of its effects upon the remainder of the country. Indeed it would be difficult to exaggerate the seriousness of such a calamity. While no statistics on the subject are available, it is safe to say that the large cities of the East, if the strike had taken place, would have found their supply of many articles of food exhausted within a week. Of so important a commodity as milk the cities have not usually more than a day's supply. Many of the people in the cities would therefore have been short of food if the strike had taken place. Assuming that no damage were done to their property, the loss of the railroads through cessation of business would have been enormous.

* * * * * * * *

But the loss to the public would have been vastly larger than that of both parties to the conflict. Of necessity, building operations and many other lines of employment would have ceased in whole or in part; for not only are the people of the great cities dependent upon the railroads for their daily food supply, but the great industries depend on the railroads daily for their materials, and a week's failure on the part of the railroads to deliver materials to the manufacturers would have made it necessary for many to shut down even if the owners had wished to continue them in operation. But in any case many of the owners would have been compelled to shut down their plants, inasmuch as they could not afford to continue manufacturing articles of commerce which they had no means of transporting to the places of sale.

It thus appears if a strike of railway employees were successful in stopping traffic, its effects upon the industry of the country would be analogous to those of a general strike, simply because a great number of other industries could not continue if the railroads ceased to operate.

* * * * * * * *

A case in the United States somewhat analogous to a railway strike for an entire region was the anthracite coal strike in 1902, where the stoppage of coal supply to a great commercial and manufacturing interest was deemed a calamity which compelled the intervention of the President of the United States. However, the stoppage of the anthracite coal supply was not nearly so serious as would be the stoppage of railway traffic, for bituminous coal can in an emergency in large measure take the place of anthracite, but there is nothing under modern conditions that can take the place of the railroads for transportation.

In short a general strike on the railroads for a great section of the country would have paralyzed the industries of that section, and even if food were obtainable millions of laboring people would have felt the pinch of want. If a strike of the character indicated lasted only for a single week, the suffering would have been beyond our power of description; and if it had continued for a month the loss, not only in property but in life, would have been enormous. Also, as usual in such cases, the disater would have fallen most heavily upon those least able to bear it. While the rich might have felt themselves poorer because of depleted bank accounts, they would have had sufficient for the necessities of life. The middle classes would have been injured financially, but still they could have subsisted. The working classes would have suffered acutely. They would have been the ones to feel soonest, longest, and most intensely the unspeakable calamity of a general railroad strike.

At first thought it may appear that this picture is overdrawn, but it should be remembered that never has a railroad strike affected an entire region of the United States. There have been strikes on particular railroad systems. In such cases the neighboring roads took care of the more pressing necessities of the great terminal centers, and there was no acute suffering except at minor points served exclusively by one railroad system.

THE GENERAL RAILWAY STRIKE IN FRANCE.

A general strike for the eastern territory would put the Eastern States in much the same situation as France was placed two years ago, when there was a general strike on the railroads of that country.

On October 12, 1910, the National Federation of Railway Employees of France and the Federation of Unions of Railway Engineers and Firemen of France called a general strike on all the railways of the country. Immediately afterwards work came nearly to a standstill on the northern and western lines, and the next day the strike extended to a number of other lines. In ordering this strike the men asserted it was their legal right to cease work.

At various places during the strike there were acts of violence, "trains were held up, signals destroyed, rails ripped from the ties, telephone and telegraph wires cut." Many cities and towns were threatened with famine. There was immediately a large increase in the price of food. In this respect Paris fared better than some of the smaller towns, because of the prompt use of the Seine in bringing in food from the sea.

The Government appreciated at once that if this general railway strike were allowed to continue, the nation would be paralyzed. Therefore upon the very day that the general strike was declared, the ministers, using their full authority under military laws, called for the mobilization of the strikers, commanding them the following day to join the colors for three weeks' military training. The military duty to which the employees were summoned consisted in the maintenance of the railways in normal working order and in obeying the orders of their official superiors. Disobedience would entail the punishment provided for by military law. The Government announced that the roads would be operated and the people of Paris would be fed.

So effective was the action of the Government that by the day following the strike a sufficient number of men had obeyed orders so that many passenger trains were running into Paris.

The strike of the railway men was regarded by the public in general as an act of criminal violence; indeed the ministry stated that the strike put the country in a condition of civil war. The action of the Government, with the prompt support of public opinion, led the railway labor organizations on the 18th of October to declare the strike terminated. Thus the total duration of the attempt for a general railway strike was six days.

In the later discussions in Parliament the principle advocated by M. Aristide Briand and the ministry was accepted, "that public servants must be required to discharge their duties regularly and without interruption." Indeed so imperative was it considered for the welfare of France that the railways be operated that in the discussion in the chamber, October 28, M. Briand declared that "if the Government had not found in the law that which enabled it to remain master of the frontiers of France and master of its railways, which are indispensable instruments of the national defense, if, in a word, the Government had found it necessary to resort to illegality, it would have done so." (The New International Year Book, 1910, pp. 269–271.) This he regarded as defensible under the doctrine Salus publica suprema lex.

THE EASTERN DISTRICT AND FRANCE COMPARED.

In connection with this arbitration it should be remembered that the population in 1910 of the territory concerned was more than 38,000,000, whereas the population of France in 1911 was 39,601,509. The great congested centers of the eastern district are much larger and more numerous than those of France. The figures in the United States, as given by the census of 1910, and in France for 1911, are as follows: New York City, population 4,766,883, is larger than Paris, 2,888,110; Philadelphia, 1,549,008, is nearly three times as large as Marseilles, 550,619; Boston, 670,585, is considerably larger than Lyons, 523,796. In France the only other two cities which exceed 200,000 in population are Bordeaux, 261,678, and Lille, 217,807; whereas in the eastern part of the United States there are three other cities that exceed 500,000—Cleveland, Baltimore, and Pittsburgh; two that exceed 400,000—Detroit and Buffalo; three that exceed 300,000—Cincinnati, Newark, and Washington; and four that exceed 200,000—Jersey City, Indianapolis, Providence, and Rochester.

The area of the country involved in this arbitration is one and one-half times as great as that of France. The main-track mileage of the eastern district is 66,876 miles, whereas that of France is only about 36,000.

Thus the comparison of a strike on the railroads of the eastern district with a general railroad strike in France is justifiable from every point of view—that of the mileage of the railroads concerned, that of population as a whole, the size of the cities, and the territory involved.

THE PUBLIC INTEREST PARAMOUNT.

It is evident, therefore, that for a great section of the United States a railroad strike can no longer be considered as a matter which primarily affects the railroad operators and employees. It does affect them and affects them seriously, but the public is far more deeply concerned. Indeed the interests of the public so far exceed those of the parties to a controversy as to render the former paramount. To this paramount interest both the railroad operators and employees should submit. It is therefore imperative that some other way be found to settle differences between railroads and their employees than by strikes.

If in the United States there were a general strike for the eastern territory, comprising, as we have seen, two-fifths of the population and approximately half the wealth of the country, every effort would undoubtedly be made to terminate the strike promptly and to operate the railroads, even though it became necessary for the President of the United States and the governors of the States to act in concert to the extreme limits of the laws and their reserve powers, which at times of national emergency are large. The military forces, both State and national, would undoubtedly be available if necessary to prevent any interference with the men who desired to work; but it is not easy to see how more than a fraction of the number of engineers necessary to run the railroads could be secured promptly. Hence the probable consequences of an effective engineers' strike would be those already described.

* * * * * * * *

CONCLUSION.

It is well understood by the board that the problem for which the above plan is a suggested solution is a complex and difficult one. The suggestion, however, grows out of a profound conviction that the food and clothing of our people, the industries and the general welfare of the Nation, can not be permitted to depend upon the policies and the dictates of any particular group of men, whether employers or employees, nor upon the determination of a group of employers and employees combined. The public utilities of the Nation are of such fundamental importance to the whole people that their operation must not be interrupted, and means must be worked out which will guarantee this result.

The above report is unanimously agreed to by the five members of the board appointed by the Chief Justice of the United States, the presiding judge of the Commerce Court, and the Commissioner of Labor; it is signed by Mr. Willard, with an explanatory statement; Mr. Morrissey files a dissenting opinion.

CHARLES R. VAN HISE, Chairman.
OSCAR S. STRAUS.
F. N. JUDSON.
OTTO M. EIDLITZ.
ALBERT SHAW.
D. WILLARD.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 14533. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee simple to the district school board No. 112 of White Earth Village, Becker County, Minn., for a certain tract of land upon payment therefor to the United States in trust for the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota;

H. R. 12889. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell the unsold and unappropriated portion of lands within the town site of Newell, S. Dak., and for other purposes;

H. R. 10989. An act making appropriation for the preservation, improvement, and perpetual care of Huron Cemetery, a burial place of the Wyandotte Indians in the city of Kansas City, Kans.;

H. R. 2208. An act for the relief of James L. Yokum;

H. R. 1963. An act for the relief of John E. Keys;

H. R. 1636. An act for the relief of Karen S. Sorenson and James Lyle;

H. R. 16532. An act authorizing an adjustment of the boundaries of the Whitman National Forest in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14824. An act to prevent fraud at public auctions in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 26.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 150,000 additional copies of Senate Document 500, Sixty-fourth Congress, entitled "The Federal farm-loan act," of which 50,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 100,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

WILLIAM HAROLD KEHOE.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FIELDS. To ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6279) for the relief of William Harold Kehoe.

The SPEAKER. The House fixed its own program by unanimous consent, and it was to be a speaking program. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is recognized.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in criticism of the action of the Board of Education of Washington yesterday afternoon in postponing the opening of the public schools.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] yield to the gentleman to make his request?

Mr. BURNETT. If it is not taken out of my time, Mr. Speaker, it will be all right.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in criticism of the action of the Board of Education yesterday afternoon in postponing the opening of the city schools for two weeks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in criticism of the Board of Education of Washington in postponing the opening of the schools for two weeks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 11707. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, approved April 19, 1908, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 237. Joint resolution authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster of Gulfport, Miss., with a special canceling die for the Mississippi Centennial Exposition celebration; and

H. J. Res. 252. Joint resolution authorizing the transfer of the Government exhibit, or such portion thereof as the President may determine is advisable, now at the Panama-California International Exposition at San Diego, Cal., to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition at Gulfport, Miss.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5450. An act to amend section 108, chapter 5, of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911;

S. 5916. An act authorizing an investigation to determine the true north and west boundaries of the Warm Springs Reservation in Oregon; and

S. 5611. An act providing for noncontiguous homestead entries within the former Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., of land of the character described in the enlarged homestead act of February 19, 1909.

THE POLITICAL CAMPAIGN.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, no party since the Civil War has done as much for the benefit of the great masses of the people as has the Democratic Party during the past three years.

In fact, even before we gained full control of the executive and legislative branches of the Government we forced through legislation that was of inestimable good to the great agricultural people of this country.

PARCEL POST.

Some Republicans claim credit for the enactment of the parcel-post law. They have no warrant whatever for any such claim. For 16 years that party had full control of the Government. Had they desired to do so they could have enacted a parcel-post law at any time during that period, but the express companies had such control of the Republican Party that it did not dare to pass that beneficent piece of legislation. That monster corporation had its representatives on the floor of the Senate, and their opposition to parcel post was so powerful that no Republican leader ever dared to favor it. But when the outraged people turned that old satellite of the special interests out of the House of Representatives the real friends of the plain people got busy, and by an overwhelming majority passed the parcel-post law and forced it down the throats of an unwilling Republican Senate, and a subservient Republican President. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Who is there so bold as to assert that a Republican Speaker under the Joe Cannon rules would have ever allowed such a piece of legislation to even be considered on the floor of the House? When we got control of the House we elected Speaker CLARK, a man of the people and for the people, and he neither had the desire nor the power to throttle legislation.

SPEAKER'S POWER CURTAILED.

No Democrat believed that Speaker CLARK would ever abuse his power, but fearing that the party of the special interests might sometime be reinstated we changed the rules so that no tyrannical Speaker could ever again dominate Congress with an iron hand.

We took from the Speaker the power to appoint committees. This authority in the hands of autocratic Speakers had before been the club with which they had been able to beat truckling Members into submission.

The Democrats snatched this power from any Speaker, and now the members of committees are elected by the entire House. When, in 1913, the will of a long-suffering people prevailed, the toiling masses came into their own. [Applause on Democratic side.]

SECRETARY M'ADOO.

The President selected as his Secretary of the Treasury a man who sprang from the ranks of the common people, and whose great heart beat in unison with nature's noblemen. He found that under Republican administrations, whenever the gamblers of Wall Street had a panicky sensation, the Secretary of the Treasury had placed millions of the people's money in their coffers so as to enable them to keep up their nefarious transactions.

Mr. McAdoo said to these harpies, "It's all right for you to use the Government money when the Government don't need it, but it is right and fair that you should pay a reasonable interest for the use of it. [Applause on Democratic side.] Wall Street demurred, and swore they would never pay it; but Mr. McAdoo was firm, and, as a result, ever since he went into office, every national bank that has had the use of Government deposits has had to pay interest on it at the rate of 2 per cent. During the three years of his incumbency more than $3,000,000 have been turned into the Federal Treasury as a result of this order.

Had Roosevelt and Taft done this the Government would to-day have been at least $15,000,000 the richer. How many miles of good roads would that have built for the farmers?

TARIFF AND INCOME-TAX LEGISLATION.

One of the first legislative enactments of a Democratic Congress under a Democratic President was the revision of the tariff and an income-tax law.

Republicans said the revision of the tariff would ruin the farmer, and yet the truth is that the farmer has received better prices for his products under the Underwood bill than he ever got before. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Compare the price of cotton, for instance, during the Wilson administration with what it was under Roosevelt and Taft. How well do we of the South remember how cotton under the Roosevelt administration went down to 8 cents per pound; and the farmer could not get money for it even at that low price.

He had to take clearing-house certificates for it, while the money was tied up in the banks of New York.

When the European war broke out two years ago, cotton was bringing 12 cents per pound. The paralysis of all business ran it down to 5 or 6 cents per pound, and Republican spellbinders in my district told the people that it was the Democratic Party that did it. Some of them even went so far as to declare that there was no war and that the Democratic Party had started that story to get the people's cotton for nothing. My constituents know some of these men. Some of them are now running for office in my district, but the people are too honest to ever trust them with power.

The income-tax feature of this law requires those with bloated fortunes to pay at least some of the taxes to run the Government that they had robbed so long.

ELECTION OF SENATORS.

Under the Republican administrations United States Senators were elected by the legislatures of the several States.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. For a question.

Mr. MEEKER. Can the gentleman explain why the Democratic Senate has not passed the immigration bill?

Mr. BURNETT. No; I can not. I wish I could. I think that some timorous Senators are following the same course that the gentleman's President, Mr. Taft, did when he defeated it by a veto written by Mr. Nagel, and never written by the President. I think the Senators who are holding it up deserve condemnation, but in that respect they have nothing on the Republican Party that twice defeated it. Even Mr. Roosevelt, when a Republican Member of Congress went and asked him to aid in passing the bill then before the House, said: "No; Bishop Ireland has been here to see me, and the bishop does not think it ought to pass, and I agree with him." This, too, after he had sent one or two messages to Congress advocating the illiteracy test for alien immigrants. The gentleman's party is originally responsible for the defeat of what I believe to be the best piece of legislation that has been before Congress for years, and if he can get any comfort out of it, let him do so. He may take the sweet unction that his candidate, Mr. Hughes, has never declared that he would aid it otherwise than Taft and Roosevelt did.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will admonish the gentleman from Alabama that he must not refer to Senators. He can discuss the presidential candidates as much as he pleases.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall revise my remarks, and I will cut out unparliamentary references. There is one who imagines himself a candidate for President that will never see daylight in November. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, while I differ with the gentleman from Alabama on many political questions, I want to say that no man in Congress has worked as earnestly or assiduously for the passage of that great immigration bill as he has.

Mr. BURNETT. Such men as Lorimer, under the old system of electing Senators, could bribe enough legislators to get to the United States Senate, one of the greatest lawmaking bodies in the world. The Democrats secured the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution requiring Senators to be elected by the people, and now no Senator can gain his seat by bribery and corruption.

FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

The Democrats knew that so long as Wall Street held the purse strings of the country the producers of wealth had nothing to say about the price of their sweat and blood, nor about the price of the products of their toil. So we passed the Federal reserve bank law, the greatest piece of constructive legislation ever enacted up to that time.

Under this law the money was taken from the coffers of New York banks and placed in banks throughout the country, where it would be accessible to those in need.

The cotton spinners of England and New England started in to depress the price of the cotton crop of 1915, and in the early fall of that year did beat it down to 8 or 9 cents a pound.

Then it was that Mr. McAdoo said, "No; gentlemen, you can not force people in distress to sell the products of their toil and the toil of their wives and children for a song. Under the Federal reserve law I can and will place $15,000,000 of Government money in the banks of the South, with more to follow if necessary, and every dollar of it must be loaned to the farmer on his cotton warehouse receipt at the rate of 6 per cent interest."

The buyers and cotton gamblers then said, "Well, if there is to be no distress cotton, and if we are not to be again permitted to grind the faces of the poor, we had better begin to bid up on cotton."

They had to do so, and it went up to 10 and 12 and even 15 cents per pound, until a good bale of cotton and the seed out of it will now bring more than $100 cash.

Does any southern farmer who loves his toil-worn wife and children want to defeat this Congress and this President and go back to the days of Roosevelt prices and Joe Cannon rules? No; they were betrayed once, and will never take the risk again. [Applause on Democratic side.]

They love their homes and those whom God has made dependent on them too well to vote for candidates—national, State, or county—who would again deliver them into the power of the cormorants of Wall Street.

FARM-LOAN BILL.

The Democratic Party was not satisfied with this great achievement in the interest of the workingman. We believe that that man is the happiest man who owns some little spot where he can gather his wife and her little brood about him and call it home.

'Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home.

[Applause.]

So we went to work to put it in the power of every farmer to own his own home. As a result that other masterpiece of legislation was enacted by Congress and approved by the President which puts it in the power of every farmer to borrow money for 40 years, if he wants to do so, at the rate of 6 per cent interest, for the purpose of buying, paying for, improving, and stocking his farm. So wisely has this law been drawn that if from misfortune he can not even pay the interest he is given an extension on that item, and thus can not be forced to lose his home. If he wants to pay it all off and stop the interest at any time after five years he can do that.

If he desires and is able to do so he can make partial payments at stated times, and thus liquidate the entire principal and interest without great trouble.

Did the Republican Party ever think long enough about the man who toils to even consider such a law as that? Yet they are asking working people to defeat Mr. Wilson for President, and to beat me for Congress with a man who still belongs to a party that has ever been the ally of those whose fortunes were made by the sweat of other men's brows.

GOOD-ROADS BILL.

For years the Republican Party professed to be the champion of good roads, and yet I challenge any one of them to show where his party ever appropriated a dollar to help the man who hauls his products over muddy ways.

Seven years of Roosevelt gave them nothing, four years of Taft gave them nothing, although their platforms promised much.

This Democratic Congress has passed a bill which will give millions of dollars each year to the building of roads for the man who all his life has been paying the mud tax.

Alabama this year will get over $100,000 of this money, and more each year that follows.

Which party, I ask the farmers and laborers of the country, has been their friend, and which flag do they prefer to follow?

CHILD-LABOR AND OTHER LAWS.

We passed the child-labor law advocated by all the labor and farmers' organizations of the country; we passed the bill to stop gambling in farm products; the agricultural warehouse bill; and scores of other wise and beneficent laws that the country would never have had but for the supremacy of the Democratic Party.

Does any farmer or laborer want to go back to the fleshpots of Egypt, and give the power to a party who never lowered its eyes to see or opened its ears to hear the calls of distress from the men who toil?

Only a few days ago the Democrats passed legislation that prevented the most stupendous strike that ever threatened any land. If it had taken place, thousands of people would have starved in a month. Business would have been paralyzed, cotton would have dropped to 6 cents a pound, and other farm products, except in the cities, would have gone to nothing for lack of transportation facilities. Yet many Republican Members voted against this bill.

But, Mr. Speaker, the crowning glory of this administration is the fact that it has kept us out of war.

Those who owned large interests in Mexico have hounded the President for nearly four years in their efforts to force us into war with that country. Those who would fill their swelling coffers from the sales of guns and cannons and munitions for the murder of human beings have exhausted every energy to desolate homes, and make widows and orphans and weeping mothers, whose sons they would feed to the guns of an enemy.

But a Democratic President with the steady hand of a trained pilot has guided the ship of state thus far through peaceful waters, and I do not believe the people will turn that ship over to Hughes and Roosevelt. Let the people choose in November which pilot they prefer. Mr. Hughes said at his Roosevelt luncheon that he and Roosevelt were in perfect accord. If so, he agrees with Roosevelt in his desire for war with Germany and in his hatred of the German people. When Roosevelt spoke in Maine a few days ago he was loud in his denunciation of the German people, and yet Judge Hughes telegraphed him his congratulations on that speech. Do the people want war or peace? The ides of November will tell, and I for one have no fears of the result.

THE HUGHES CAMPAIGN.

I shall not criticize the Republican Party for invading the sanctity of the Supreme Court to get a candidate for President. The stress of the situation no doubt required them to do this. They realized that Roosevelt had to be defeated, and they perhaps knew that none of the little men who were candidates could do it. Hence they had to take the judge. The leaders of that once great but now discredited party have no doubt already rued the day that they fell upon Judge Hughes to drag them out of the low planes into which they had fallen. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

The campaign of Judge Hughes through the West has no doubt been disappointing to such big Republicans as my good friends from Illinois, Mr. MANN, Mr. CANNON, and others who are giants in the grand old party.

He pitched his campaign on the lowest plane that any candidate for President has ever done except four years ago when Roosevelt and Taft condescended to call each other liars, and applied other compliments to each other that they borrowed from the billingsgate of the London fish market.

Judge Hughes has in his campaign waved the bloody shirt, and tried to arouse sectional prejudice that even his own party can not stand for.

Mr. Speaker, I will read one little extract from an Oshkosh paper, the leading Republican paper of Wisconsin, to show how his own party is absolutely ashamed of their nominee.

A QUESTION OF TASTE.

[From the Oshkosh Northwestern, Aug. 11, 1916.]

To every sensitive and sensible voter the spectacle of a candidate for the highest office in the world running around the country kissing babies, shaking hands with the crowd, and begging for votes is certainly very unpleasant. It adds nothing to the dignity and respect that ought to be associated with the great presidential office. If President Wilson should have the good taste to remain quietly at home during the campaign after Congress adjourns and allow his Cabinet ministers and his party leaders to make the political speeches it would count in his favor among right-thinking people. But if Judge Hughes is to go out after votes like the ordinary demagogue traveling through the country at a speed which will enable him to see the greatest number of people in the shortest possible time, he can at least take high ground in his speeches and discuss politics as a great statesman and not as a great demagogue. It is the sensible people who decide things, in the long run, and surely they will think better of him if he will make the change.

A few days ago the press carried the statement that Mr. Wilcox, the chairman of the Republican campaign committee, had been summoned to St. Louis by Judge Hughes, to show cause why he should not be deposed on account of inefficiency. The question arose at once in the minds of many as to whether Mr. Wilcox had been summoned to decide whether he should be deposed by Judge Hughes for inefficiency, or whether he should take Judge Hughes down for the same cause. I confess that Democrats trembled for fear Judge Hughes would be withdrawn, in order that a strong man like the minority leader or Uncle JOE CANNON could be substituted in his place. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Does my memory serve me right that a gentleman by the name of Bryan, a few times a candidate of the Democratic Party, went around over the country seeking votes?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; and that same gentleman was defeated, great and good man though he was, just as the gentleman who is the nominee of the gentleman's party is going to be by the people of this country on the 7th day of November next. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon is recognized for 45 minutes.

A PARTIAL REPLY TO "DEFENSE OF MR. SAMUEL HERRICK."

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in the last Monday's RECORD, on page 16145, under the heading "Defense of Samuel Herrick," occurs an extension of remarks by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. These remarks were not delivered on the floor, but they were slipped into the RECORD under leave to print. These remarks contain some severe strictures upon me. The remarks are full of slurs and insinuations and criticism on account of a bill known as the Sherman County settlers relief bill which I introduced at this session of Congress and is now a law.

This bill appropriated some $94,000 for the relief of settlers and claimants in Oregon who lost their lands. The remarks in the RECORD are occasioned by a report of an interview which I gave to the press informing a number of the beneficiaries that Samuel Herrick, an attorney of the city of Washington, was not entitled to any fees in securing the passage of this bill.

The gentleman from South Dakota states that he comes to the defense of this attorney for the reason that this attorney, Samuel Herrick, is a voter in his district and a fellow citizen of South Dakota, although at present he is a practicing attorney in the city of Washington and has been such for 15 years. The gentleman inserted these remarks in the RECORD without according me the usual, or what might be expected, courtesy of consulting me to learn the reasons for my position. I regret that the gentleman from South Dakota is not present. I tried to get his office by phone, but was not successful. He bases his remarks upon a certain article which appeared in the Portland (Oreg.) Journal of August 7, and the article is as follows:

WASHINGTON, August 7, 1916.

Congressman SINNOTT, greatly pleased by the passage of his bill appropriating $94,000 for the relief of the settlers of Sherman County, Oreg., who were dispossessed by the Eastern Oregon Land Co., is strongly of the opinion that attorneys claiming fees for services in securing passage of the bill are entitled to nothing on that account.

Samuel Herrick, a Washington attorney, has contracts with a number of the claimants providing that he is to receive 20 per cent of the sum realized for presenting their case to Congress. The bill provides that not more than 5 per cent shall be paid on account of such claims, and Mr. SINNOTT says Herrick is not entitled to that.

HERRICK OF NO ASSISTANCE.

"Herrick was of no assistance at all in securing passage of this bill," says the Oregon Congressman. "He was rather a detriment than a help.

"When I came to Washington I went into this matter fully to determine why it was that this legislation had not made headway. I found that bills before Congress, which Herrick had prepared, failed to distinguish between good claimants and those who admittedly had no claim, although a report of Special Agent T. B. Neuhausen detailing the merits of the different claims was available.

"Many of the items in the bill thus presented could not be defended and the measure was consequently held up."

I wish to reiterate and repeat that language here on the floor of the House, that this attorney was of no practical assistance in securing relief for these poor evicted settlers, but, on the contrary, his witless work, his ignorance of the subject matter, and the dishonest bills which he has been behind are the reasons the entire subject has for many years been in bad odor in the House and these settlers have been denied relief for many years. The interview further reads:

In conversation with Herrick I learned that he had drafted the bill without reference to Neuhausen's comment on these claims. I then introduced the bill which has passed, in which I included meritorious claims that I felt could not be successfully attacked. This bill has passed through my efforts and the efforts of other members of the Oregon delegation. Herrick had nothing to do with it, and no one owes him anything for services, so far as I can see.

That statement is substantially correct, except that I am given too much credit in this paragraph. While I introduced the bill which passed at this session of Congress, the bill which I introduced was the bill that was reported favorably upon as a substitute for the Herrick bill at the last session of Congress. I introduced the bill at this session of Congress because I was assured by Members who had theretofore been objecting to the Sherman County relief bill that they were satisfied with that bill and would not object to it. I wanted to hold the ground so far gained and not jeopardize the chances for partial relief by a change of bills, so I introduced that bill at this session of Congress, feeling reasonably sure that I could secure some relief for some of those unfortunate settlers and applicants by the introduction of the bill.

In this connection it may be well to explain for the benefit of those who are not familiar with the rules of the House how these bills are considered.

Bills containing private claims, unless in very exceptional cases, which do not occur once in 10 years, can only pass the House by unanimous consent; that is, the bill is called on the calendar and read by the Clerk. Any Member who is opposed to a bill when it is called may rise in his place and without assigning any reason may say, "I object, Mr. Speaker." This statement is sufficient to defer action on the bill, and, if renewed, results in the defeat of the bill objected to.

Claim bills are placed upon what is known as the "Private Calendar." The Private Calendar is called only on Fridays.

The second and fourth Fridays of each month are devoted to private pension claims and to bills removing political disabilities and the charges of desertion. The remaining Fridays of the month alternate between the Committee on Claims and the Committee on War Claims. From this you will see that the House can devote very little attention to private bills reported from the Committee on Claims, which committee has jurisdiction over such claims as the Sherman County settlers' claim. There are always a great many bills to be considered whenever the Private Calendar is reached. It results from this that if there are objections to any particular features of a private claim bill the House will not take the time to eliminate objectionable features, but some Member will arise and object in toto to the bill, so that time may be had for consideration of other bills which can be briefly considered and passed.

It is thus evident that a questionable or suspicious bill can not be considered, but its consideration will be blocked at once by any Member objecting.

Why, my bill, cut to the bone as it was from distrusted claims, was twice at this session blocked by Members objecting, and passed the House only in the absence of a Member who had objected to its consideration.

I desire now to call attention to a significant thing: All of this interview in the Portland Journal was not printed in last Monday's extension of remarks. This paragraph was omitted, and it was designedly and maliciously omitted for the purpose of enabling Mr. Herrick to build up a man of straw in an attempt to misrepresent me, so that he could make the insinuation that I had abandoned all those whose names were not in the Sherman County bill which I introduced at this session of Congress. Here is the paragraph that was left out wherein I stated—

I do not believe all the meritorious claims have been recognized in the bill we have passed, and intend to introduce another to pick up the stragglers.

That paragraph was omitted from the extract from the Portland Journal set forth in this extension of remarks. I am going to be charitable enough to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] to acquit him of the charge of full authorship of these remarks in the RECORD. I am fully convinced that these remarks in the RECORD were for the most part gotten up by Mr. Herrick, and that Mr. Herrick is the real author of them. They bear the earmarks of his ignorance of the entire subject matter of the Sherman County settlers' relief, of the Neuhausen report, and ignorance of the very bills which he himself has been promoting.

This extension of remarks is in three parts: First, there is a fulsome eulogy of Mr. Herrick, with laudatory quotations from letters of misinformed friends of Mr. Herrick, in the years 1907 and 1908—but wait till I cite you to letters and official records of 1907 not so laudatory; second, a criticism of me for not having secured relief for everyone mentioned in the Neuhausen report; and, third, a defense of the bills which Mr Herrick had been promoting and endeavoring to secure the passage of for some eight or nine years. Mr. JOHNSON states this in his extension of remarks:

After a thorough investigation of the matter, I am of the opinion that the criticism of Mr Herrick's services by the gentleman from Oregon, Mr. SINNOTT, was entirely uncalled for and unjust, and that as a matter of fact the passage of the measure in the form advocated by the gentleman from Oregon operated as an injustice to the settlers whose claims were eliminated.

It will be interesting to observe the fruits of this "thorough investigation."

Then Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota speaks of Herrick:

Mr. Herrick is a fellow citizen of mine, a resident and a voter of South Dakota, and known to me to be an upright, conscientious, and able lawyer, particularly in his specialty of public and mining law.

Then there follow extracts from a number of letters speaking of Herrick's probity and his integrity and uprightness.

Mr. Speaker, I have not brought this controversy to the floor of this House and did not intend to bring it in here; it has been forced here by the insertion of remarks under leave to print. Before I get through, if I have sufficient time, I propose to show that this man, who is so extravagantly and autobiographically extolled, omitted significant quotations from letters received by himself in the year 1907, the year in which he received so many of the effusions of "epistolary" eulogies quoted in the extension of remarks on last Monday, which will throw additional light upon character and reputation.

I have initiated no attack on the gentleman's reputation or character. My criticism has been of his diligence and work for his clients. He has put his reputation and character in issue to bolster up his unjust attempt to filch fees from my constituents. Accordingly I am compelled, regretfully, I must say, to meet this issue.

HERRICK'S RECORD.

I hold in my hand certified copies of letters and orders in the suspension and disbarment proceedings against Samuel Herrick in file No. 21-310 of the Department of the Interior.

This file shows that Samuel Herrick, whose eulogistic autobiography for advertisement purposes at "Uncle Sam's" expense was printed in last Monday's RECORD, was by the Commissioner of the General Land Office recommended for suspension from practice, in the year 1907, before the Department of the Interior and its bureaus. This recommendation was approved by the Secretary of the Interior, James Rudolph Garfield. Unfortunately for my constituents, this suspension was not promulgated but was withdrawn on condition that Mr. Herrick acknowledge his misconduct and apologize to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. This he did, at the same time receiving a severe reprimand from Secretary Garfield with the written pointed statement of the Secretary—I quote—that any further misconduct on your part in your practice before the General Land Office or any bureau of this department will be considered as sufficient cause for your immediate disbarment.

This record further discloses that Mr. Herrick was repeatedly called to account for reprehensible practices and improprieties in the practice of law before the General Land Office.

It further discloses conduct in line with his claims and misrepresentations made in this Sherman County relief bill matter.

It discloses unfounded claims of services rendered, of demands for fees where he was not employed—I quote—and without rendering any important service.

This record further discloses—I quote—methods of practice not in accordance with the practice of reputable attorneys.

It further discloses misrepresentations for the purposes of advertisement on the part of Mr. Herrick, misrepresentations of having reversed the decisions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in cases which were not reversed and in cases where appeals were not taken and in a case where the record—I quote—fails to show that you appeared as attorney for Rivers.

I have only 45 minutes allotted to me on the floor. When this Sherman County matter was up in the Sixty-second Congress, Mr. MANN, the Republican floor leader, objected to the consideration of the Sherman County bill, saying that it would take him three hours to discuss the subject. This record which I hold in my hand is too long to read, though I wish I had the time to read it, but I will print it at the end of my remarks. I regret that I have not a full day to cover the matter and expose Mr. Herrick's record and his abortive and bungling efforts in behalf of these claimants. I shall also print at the end of my remarks a letter which Mr. MANN, the Republican floor leader, wrote to me concerning this subject. Mr. MANN, as you all know, makes a specialty of carefully scrutinizing all claim bills and objects to doubtful and suspicious bills. It was his objection which blocked the Sherman County bill in the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. Speaker, the Sherman County settlers' matter arises out of the fact that in the year 1900 a number of settlers and claimants in Sherman and Wasco Counties, Oreg., of lands declared to be public lands by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in 1891, which holding was approved by Secretary of Interior John W. Noble in 1893 and Secretary of Interior Hoke Smith in 1893, were evicted on account of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, that court holding that the lands in question were not public lands, but that they belonged to the Eastern Oregon Land Co., successors in interest to The Dalles Military Road Co., grantees of the United States.

In 1904 an act of Congress was passed directing the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the value of these lands at the date of the ouster and also the value of the improvements placed upon the land by the various settlers and claimants still in possession, also in case of purchase from the road company the price paid. Pursuant to that act of Congress, Mr. T. B. Neuhausen, a special agent of the Interior Department, was sent to Oregon to ascertain these facts. Mr. Neuhausen, after an extended investigation, made a report to Congress concerning the value of these lands and the improvements placed thereon by the evicted claimants and settlers. That report was published as House Document No. 36 of the Fifty-eighth Congress, third session. That report is also copied in a report which I hold in my hand, being House Report No. 786, Sixty-second Congress, second session. The report is a report made to accompany Senate bill 295 of the Sixty-second Congress. Senate bill 295 was one of the Herrick bills which had passed the Senate.

Mr. Neuhausen, commencing on page 18, and the following pages up to page 30, set forth the names of the various claimants,

First he set forth the name of the claimant and a description of his land, then the acreage, then the value of improvements on the land not sold or removed, then the date of the ouster, the value of the land per acre, and total value of the land at the date of the ouster. In some cases the values were omitted. Here is the page from that Neuhausen report, and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to insert this page and other excerpts in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAKER). Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The excerpts from the report are as follows:

Classified list.—Summary of data relating to claims within the overlapping limits of the grants to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. and The Dalles Military Road Co. in Sherman County, Oreg.

[Claims marked with an asterisk (*) are located in Wasco County.]

I.—HOMESTEAD CLAIMANTS.

Class A.—Those who asserted a homestead claim and actually resided upon the land claimed, but who never received patent therefor and are not now in possession thereof.

Case No.	Name of claimant	Description	Acreage.	Improvements not sold or removed.	Date of ouster (in 1909)	Value at ouster.
						Per acre.	Total.
1	Harry Hill	SW. ¼ NE. ¼ and lots 1 and 2 sec. 1, T. 1 S., R. 16 E.	129.00	$175.00	May 16	$9.00	$1,080.00
2	Hiram E. Powell, deceased	S. ½ NW. ¼ and lots 3 and 4 sec. 1, T. 1 S., R. 16 E.	167.63	100.00	Spring	9.00	1,508.67
3	Otis B. Messinger	NW. ¼ sec. 13, T. 1 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	Apr. 7	9.00	1,440.00
4	David W. Hall, deceased	NE. ¼ sec. 35, T. 1 S., R. 15 E.	160.00	.....	Spring	9.00	1,440.00
5	William S. Powell	W. ½ SE. ¼ and NE. ¼ SE. ¼ sec. 1, T. 2 S., R. 15 E.	120.00	185.00	Apr. 27	9.00	1,080.00
6	Luther B. Hill	NW. ¼ sec. 11, T. 2 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	Summer	5.00	800.00
7	Alva B. Craft	SE. ¼ sec. 11, T. 2 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	10.00	Mar. 7	8.00	1,280.00
8	Benj. E. Dougherty	SW. ¼ sec. 11, T. 2 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	Apr. 18	10.00	1,600.00
9	Theron S. Hill, deceased	NE. ¼ sec. 15, T. 2 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	Summer	11.00	1,760.00
10	James H. Clements	SW. ¼ sec. 15, T. 2 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	Mar. 7	8.50	1,360.00
11	Absalom B. Allison	NE. ¼ sec. 21, T. 2 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	95.00	Apr. 14	8.00	1,280.00
12	Edgar Lewis	SE. ¼ sec. 21, T. 2 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	60.00	Apr. 12	7.00	1,120.00
13	Elizabeth A. Bates	NW. ¼ sec. 23, T. 2 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	105.00	Apr. 14	8.00	1,280.00
14	Lena Wegener	SW. ¼ sec. 23, T. 2 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	Apr. 17	8.00	1,280.00
15	Rufus H. King (in possession as lessee)	SE. ¼ sec. 27, T. 2 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	10.00	Mar. 7	12.00	1,924.00
16	Charles K. Huff	NE. ¼ sec. 33, T. 2 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	Apr. 4	10.00	1,600.00
*	Adam Holder (see Class C)	N. ½ NE. ¼ and N. ½ NW. ¼ sec. 35, T. 2 S., R. 16 E.	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
*	Timothy Brownfull (see Class C)	N. ½ SW. ¼ and N. ½ SE. ¼ sec. 35, T. 2 S., R. 16 E.	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
17	Grace T. Hill	S. ½ SW. ¼ and S. ½ SE. ¼ sec. 35, T. 2 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	25.00	Spring	10.00	1,600.00
*	Friedrich W. Matthias (see Class C)	SE. ¼ sec. 5, T. 1 S., R. 17 E.	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
18	John B. Coon (in possession as lessee)	NW. ¼ sec. 1, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	158.49	.....	Mar. 8	9.00	1,426.41
19	Merit F. S. Henton	SW. ¼ sec. 1, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	60.00	Apr. 20	9.00	1,440.00
20	Robert L. Allison	NE. ¼ sec. 3, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	18.00	Apr. 17	10.00	1,600.00
21	Clark E. Brown	SE. ¼ sec. 3, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	75.00	Mar. 8	9.00	1,440.00
22	Reuben D. Allison	SW. ¼ sec. 3, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	10.00	Apr. 17	9.00	1,440.00
23	Adolph Perrault (in possession as lessee)	NE. ¼ sec. 9, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	1,125.00	Feb. 27	11.00	1,760.00
24	Lester A. Heath	SE. ¼ sec. 9, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	70.00	April	11.00	1,760.00
25	Warren D. Marshall	NE. ¼ sec. 11, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	570.00	Apr. 12	10.00	1,600.00
26	Harold L. Chenoweth, deceased	NW. ¼ sec. 18, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	do	10.00	1,600.00
27	Levant L. Minton	SW. ¼ sec. 13, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	Oct. 26	9.00	1,440.00
28	Anastasse Perrault	NE. ¼ sec. 17, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	340.00	Feb. 27	7.00	1,120.00
29	John Willet	SE. ¼ sec. 17, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	70.00	do	7.00	1,120.00
*	Augustus Smith (see Class C)	SE. ¼ sec. 21, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	175.00	Mar. 9	6.00	960.00
*	Cascious W. Fairchild (see Class C)	SW. ¼ sec. 29, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	.....	.....	.....
*	Philander C. Davis (see Class C)	NE. ¼ sec. 5, T. 4 S., R. 17 E.	167.00	.....	.....	.....	.....
30	John W. Willis	SW. ¼ sec. 5, T. 4 S., R. 17 E.	159.00	.....	Spring	5.00	800.00
*	Charles A. Stanton (see Class C)	SW. ¼ NW. ¼ and W. ½ SW. ¼ sec. 21, T. 3 S., R. 17 E.	123.00	.....	.....	.....	.....
31	Alfred F. Hawley, deceased	NE. ¼ sec. 29, T. 3 S., R. 17 E.	160.00	.....	Nov	6.00	960.00
32	Grant Hawley	NW. ¼ sec. 29, T. 3 S., R. 17 E.	160.00	10.00	Apr. 28	7.00	1,123.00
33	Lee Mounts	E. ½ SW. ¼ and W. ½ SE. ¼ sec. 29, T. 3 S., R. 17 E.	160.00	.....	do	6.00	960.00
34	Diedrich Patjens, deceased	S. ½ NW. ¼ and N. ½ SW. ¼ sec. 33, T. 3 S., R. 17 E.	160.00	50.00	Mar. 9	5.00	800.00
35	Ellen E. McLeod (in possession as lessee)	SW. ¼ sec. 35, T. 3 S., R. 17 E.	160.00	.....	May 2	5.00	800.00
36	George M. Simpson	SW. ¼ sec. 13, T. 4 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	April	5.00	800.00
37	Henry Nachand	SW. ¼ sec. 5, T. 4 S., R. 17 E.	160.00	.....	Apr. 17	5.00	800.00
38	Minnie M. Smith (now M. Fairfield)	NW. ¼ sec. 9, T. 4 S., R. 17 E.	160.00	215.00	1898	4.00	640.00
39	Edward Nachand	N. ½ NE. ¼ and E. ½ NW. ¼ sec. 11 T. 4 S., R. 17 E.	160.00	20.00	Apr. 17	5.00	800.00
40	Cascious W. Fairchild	SW. ¼ sec. 29, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	55.00	Feb. 26	5.00	800.00
41	Frank Watkins, deceased	NE. ¼ sec. 25, T. 4 S., R. 17 E.	160.00	.....	Sept. 12	7.00	1,120.00
42	William Daugherty deceased	W. ½ NW. ¼ SE. ¼ NW. ¼, and SW. ¼ NE. ¼ sec. 13, T. 5 S., R. 17 E.	155.00	580.00	June	3.00	459.00
43	Alice M. Coats, deceased	W. ½ NE. ¼ sec. 28, T. 5 S. R. 17 E.	160.00	250.00	April	2.00	320.00

These are generally meritorious claims, the individuals having resided upon the lands until dispossessed. If the company is in a position to release these lands, the claims might be perfected and patented and the rights of the individual claimant thus preserved.

Class E.—Land entered as homestead, but with little or no residence shown thereon and only slight improvements. Party not now in possession.

Case No.	Name of claimant.	Description	Acreage.	Improvements not sold or removed.	Date of ouster (in 1900).	Value at ouster.
						Per acre.	Total.
75	Eugene Cushman	SE. ¼ sec. 35, T. 1 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	.....	$12.00	$1,920.00
76	Thomas F. Cochran (additional homestead entry).	NE. ¼ SE. ¼ sec. 9, T. 1 S., R. 17 E.	40.00	.....	Spring	.50	300.00
77	Walter P. Lyons (see settlement claims, Jesse P. Barnet).	SE. ¼ sec. 1, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	.....	.....	.....
78	Geo. S. Donaldson	SW. ¼ NE. ¼, W. ½ SE. ¼ and SE. ¼ SE. ¼ sec. 5, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	Spring	3.00	480.00
79	Sam C. Klair (see applicants for cash entries, Charles H. Schwartz).	SE. ¼ sec. 11 T. 2 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	.....	.....	.....
80	Charles Davis (see applicants for cash entries, Charles H. Schwartz).	SW. ¼ sec. 11, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	.....	.....	.....
81	Richard G. Closter (deceased)	W. ½ NE. ¼ and W. ½ SE. ¼ sec. 33, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	Oct. 15, 1897.	5.00	800.00
82	Alex. McDonald	E. ½ NW. ¼ and E. ½ SW. ¼ sec. 33, T. 3 S., R. 16 E.	160.00	.....	Oct. 17, 1899.	5.00	800.00
83	Johann Suhr	SE. ¼ sec. 31, T. 3 S., R. 17 E.	160.00	.....	Oct. 24	5.00	800.00
84	John D. Glass	SE. ¼ sec. 33, T. 3 S., R. 17 E.	160.00	.....	.....	5.00	800.00
85	Harry J. Adams	NW. ¼ sec. 3, T. 4 S., R. 16 E.	161.07	.....	.....	5.00	805.00

Classified list.—Summary of data relating to claims within the overlapping limits of the grants to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., and The Dalles Military Road Co. in Sherman County, Oreg.—Continued.

III. APPLICATIONS TO PURCHASE UNDER ACT OF SEPT. 29, 1890.

[Claims based on occupancy and attempted purchase without entries of record.]

Class (a).—Applicants who apparently gave up occupancy of land between the date of application and date of Supreme Court decision (Jan. 8, 1900) and were not in possession at that date, even as lessees.

Case No.	Name of claimant.	Description.	Acreage.	Improvements not sold or removed.	Date of ouster.	Value at ouster.
						Per acre.	Total.
128	Godfred Guinther	E. ½ sec. 29, T. 1 N., R. 16 E	320	$180.00
129	Christian Guenther, deceased	N. ½ N. ½ sec. 33, T. 1 N., R. 16 E	160	100.00
130	Thomas Calvert	E. ½ NE. ¼ and E. ½ SE. ¼ sec. 33, T. 1 N., R. 17 E	160	100.00
131	Manuel D. Adams	S. ½ SW. ¼ sec. 11, T. 1 S., R. 16 E	80		1893	$11.00	$880.00
132	Benjamin B. Clark	NW. ¼ sec. 15, T. 2 S., R. 16 E	160
133	John A. Moore, deceased; no claim	S. ½ sec. 31, T. 1 S., R. 17 E	320
134	Obed Cushman, deceased	N. ½ sec. 29, T. 2 S., R. 17 E	320		Spring, 1897.	5.00	1,600.00
135	James A. W. Scoggin	E. ½ sec. 11, T. 4 S., R. 17 E	320		Left in 1897.	2.00	640.00
136	Justus A. Dickerson, deceased	N. ½ sec. 3, T. 5 S., R. 17 E	320			5.00	1,600.00

Mr. SINNOTT. Over in the back of this Neuhausen report, commencing at page 34, are set forth the affidavits of these various claimants concerning their claims. Where affidavits could not be obtained Mr. Neuhausen reports the facts ascertained as to residence, improvements, and cultivation. In some instances following the affidavits and reports Mr. Neuhausen set forth his opinion as to the merit of certain claims.

Now, this Mr. Herrick has been promoting a bill contemplating the payment to every person whose claim is listed between pages 18 and 30 of the Neuhausen report where the value of improvements and the value of the land are indicated following the name of the claimant, notwithstanding the fact that over in the back of the report Mr. Neuhausen in a number of cases suggests that the claimant is entitled to no relief. Mr. Herrick drafted his bill on the theory that the values of improvement and land following the name of claimants between pages 18 and 30 of the Neuhausen report was the amount Mr. Neuhausen found due and recommended for payment, wholly ignoring the fact that in a number of cases it is obvious from the affidavit of the claimants in the back of the report and also from Mr. Neuhausen's comments that no relief was warranted.

In Mr. Herrick's extension of remarks by proxy in last Monday's RECORD he now defends his bill by stating "and the amount going to each settler being the sum recommended by the special agent." He also makes the following argument:

> In this connection it is to be noted that none of the prior bills, and which have been so severely criticized, appropriated a lump sum for the payment of these claims, but only so much of such sum "as may be necessary," and then specified the sum as the amount recommended in the report of Special Agent Neuhausen. As to some of these claims Neuhausen recommended no relief to be extended, and consequently under the terms of these bills none would have been received by the claimants. Consequently the criticism above quoted, "that bills before Congress which Herrick had prepared failed to distinguish between good claimants and those who admittedly had no claims," falls of its own weight. Both the qualifying words after the mention of $250,000, the further provisions as to the maximum amount to be paid each settler, and the authority given the Secretary of the Interior to make the payments constituted ample safeguards against any excessive amount being paid to any claimant.

This position is refuted by the most cursory reading of the Herrick bill, which is as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That to adjust the claims of Harry Hill and other settlers, commonly known as the Sherman County settlers, on lands in Sherman and adjoining counties in the State of Oregon, there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary, said sum to be paid in such amounts and to such persons, their heirs or legal representatives, as are mentioned in the report made by Special Agent Thomas B. Neuhausen, of the Department of the Interior, under authority of the act of Congress approved February 26, 1904 (33 Stats., p. 51), as embodied in pages 22 to 35, inclusive, of House Document No. 36, Fifty-eighth Congress third session; the amount to be paid to each settler his heirs or legal representatives, being the value of the land settled on by each, respectively, together with the value of the improvements erected by each, respectively, where such improvements were not sold or removed by the settler: Provided, however, That in those cases where the settler purchased land from The Dalles Military Road Co., or its successors, the amount to be paid to such settler, his heirs or legal representatives, shall be the amount so paid by him as consideration in his said purchase: Provided further, That no purchaser or assignee of any of said claims shall receive therefor a greater amount than was paid to the settler for his assignment.
>
> SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make the payments herein provided for out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall draw his warrant therefor upon the Treasury.

It is also refuted by an examination of the Neuhausen report by the act of Congress authorizing the investigation, and in addition to this Mr. Herrick told me in my office that his bill was drawn on the theory that the values following the names of claimants between pages 18 and 30 were the sums which Mr. Neuhausen found due and recommended payment.

When I read the affidavits and Mr. Neuhausen's comments in the back of the report, and when I ascertained Mr. MANN'S reasons for objecting to relief in the Sixty-second Congress, I sent for Mr. Herrick. He came to my office, and on my asking him if his bill was not drawn on the theory that the amounts following the names were the amounts Mr. Neuhausen found due, he told me that that was the theory of his bill. I then told him that that theory contemplated the payment of some claims that were indefensible and of others where Mr. Neuhausen had specifically stated that no relief was justified. I pointed to claim No. 75, Eugene Cushman, on page 21, listed for $1,920. Mr. Neuhausen made no recommendation one way or the other as to this claim. I read to Mr. Herrick the report on this claim on page 96, which is as follows:

CASE 75—EUGENE A. CUSHMAN.

[Homestead entry No. 4694, dated June 8, 1893, for SE. ¼ sec. 35, T. 1 S., R. 16 E., Willamette meridian. Canceled Nov. 28, 1893.]

REPORT.—Cushman built a cabin on the land within six months after the date of his filing, but he never resided in same, as his right to the tract was immediately disputed by William E. White, who held title under purchase from The Dalles Military Road Co. White afterwards (Dec. 20, 1895) made cash entry No. 4130 for the tract and received patent therefor. (See case 126.)

THOS. B. NEUHAUSEN,
Special Agent, General Land Office.

I asked Mr. Herrick how he could defend the payment of $1,920 to Eugene Cushman under such circumstances. His sole reply was that Mr. Cushman was one of his clients. I then observed his dense ignorance of the Neuhausen report. The statement that the Herrick bill only contemplated the payment of the sum recommended by the special agent is a misrepresentation. The language of the bill admits of no such construction. In a great many cases Mr. Neuhausen made no recommendations at all. In the very case of Uriah Serviss, mentioned in Mr. Herrick's extension, no recommendation of payment was made. The act of Congress authorizing the investigation merely authorized him to ascertain the value of the lands at the date of ouster, the improvements placed on the land of party in possession, in case of purchase from the road company the amount paid by the settler to the road company. In some cases, however, he called attention to the spurious nature of the claim. Here is the language in the Herrick bill.

> Said sum to be paid in such amounts and to such persons, their heirs or legal representatives, as are mentioned in the report made by Special Agent Thomas B. Neuhausen. * * * The amount to be paid to each settler, his heirs or legal representatives, being the value of the land settled on by each, respectively, together with the value of the improvements erected by each, respectively, where such improvements were not sold or removed by the settler.

The statement in the extension of remarks that the Herrick bill—

> Then specified the sum as the amount recommended in the report of Special Agent Neuhausen—is absolutely unfounded. That language is not in the bill. It is further intimated that there was some discretion vested in the Secretary as to what claimants should be paid. There is nothing in the language of the bill to justify such an interpretation. Grasping at straws to defend his abortive bill, he first contends that only payments recommended by Mr. Neuhausen were to be made, whereas in a great many meritorious cases Mr. Neuhausen made no recommendation, also in a number of indefensible cases no recommendations are made. Conscious of the untenableness of his position, he falls back on some discretionary power vested in the Secretary of the Interior, in no way expressed in the bill. Admitting, for the sake of the argument, that such an interpretation could be contorted from the language of the bill, the very effort to so explain the bill on the floor of the House would arouse immediate objection to its consideration.

It must have been some such bill as this which was referred to in the letter to Mr. Herrick of March 4, 1907, which he inserts in the "extension of remarks" from which the following quotation was taken: "It seems to me you have nearly broken the record. The passage of this bill has been marvelous." For surely the passage of a bill so ambiguous, such a hodgepodge from Mr. Herrick's own viewpoint, would have been marvelous.

Bills should not be drawn so loosely even by an attorney who six years after his admission to the bar had a practice, according to his written statement, only "netting me more than $12,000 per annum" (vide file 21-310 at the end of these remarks). They should not be drawn by an attorney who, according to the exhibit excerpts in Monday's extension of remarks, is on the 17th day of January, 1907, proclaimed "the very best land lawyer in the United States," though 10 months thereafter, on the 29th day of November, 1907, 6 years after admission to the bar, with a $12,000 income, he is pleading his youth and inexperience to escape the suspension from practice recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Assistant Attorney General of the United States, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior (vide file 21).

Now, let me call to your attention the legitimacy of some of these claims as found by the committee and see whether or not it is possible to secure the passage through this House of a bill containing claims of such doubtful character. In fact, had the Senate of the United States known what was contained in the Herrick bill, what vicious claims would have been paid under it, the bill would not have been introduced in the Senate and would never have passed the Senate. I say it was the duty of Mr. Herrick to notify the Oregon delegation in the Senate and in the House of the illegitimacy of a number of these claims. After I took my seat the Senate bill was passed. I endeavored to get a favorable report from the House committee upon this Herrick bill because I was not aware of the viciousness of a number of these claims, but as soon as I ascertained the character I told the chairman of the House committee about them and he immediately referred the Herrick bill to a subcommittee, and as a result thereof the Herrick bill was cast aside, together with its author, and a substitute bill was reported by Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota at the last session of Congress. This was not reached in time for consideration. That subcommittee bill I introduced at this session of Congress and it is now the law.

Let me call your attention to some of the claims condemned by the committee that the Herrick bills would have paid.

Claim No. 26, Harold L. Chenowith, listed at $1,600 on page 18. This was a homestead entry made in 1893, ouster occurred in 1900.

On page 57 Mr. Neuhausen, without making any recommendation for or against, states—he appears to have resided for a short period on the land in a small cabin erected by him and to have built fencing worth about $50 at the date the company assumed possession

Claim No. 31, on page 19, is listed at $960. Mr. Neuhausen on page 19, referring generally to claims No. 1 to 43, states: "These are generally meritorious claims." However, no recommendation one way or the other is made concerning these claims, but as to this claim 31 on page 60 the affidavit concerning this claim, a homesteady entry made in 1893, ouster in 1900, shows that the entryman—never established his residence on his homestead claim. He hauled some lumber onto the land a few months after making his filing with the object of building a house, but the house was never built. * * * Entryman never cultivated the tract.

The Herrick bill would have allowed this entryman $960.

Claim No. 39 is listed at $800. No recommendation one way or the other was made by Mr. Neuhausen as to this claim, which was a homestead entry. The affidavit on page 67 shows that entryman resided on the land three or four nights every six months, that he had 1 acre plowed. He was to receive a present of $820. His entry was in 1895, ouster in 1900.

Claim No. 75, Eugene Cushman, $1,920; no recommendation by Mr. Neuhausen. Page 96 of report shows he never resided on the land. This was a homestead entry. Entryman's right to the tract was disputed by another person, who secured entry and received patent.

Claim No. 78, George S. Donaldson, listed at $480 on page 21. On page 97 report shows residence on the land consisted in sleeping in a small cabin worth about $20 for a few nights; no improvements, no cultivation. Entry made in 1894, ouster in 1900.

Claim No. 136, Justis A. Dickerson, listed on page 26 at $1,600. On page 136 the report shows as follows:

CASE 136—JUSTUS A. DICKERSON, DECEASED.

[N. ½ sec. 3, T. 5 S., R. 17 E., Willamette meridian. No entry allowed.]

REPORT.—This entryman is dead and there are no known heirs. Various inquiries were made to determine his connection with this tract. The local land-office records show that he made application to purchase this half section on July 6, 1895. It further appears that he made soldier's homestead filing for the W. ½ SE. ¼ and E. ½ SW. ¼ sec. 34, T. 4 S., R. 17 E., Willamette meridian, on April 30, 1887 (homestead entry No. 2575); that he received final certificate No. 1042 on December 19, 1888, and patent on July 19, 1890.

By mistake this applicant built his homestead cabin on the N. ½ sec. 3, and evidently was under the impression that the land he was residing on was the tract covered by his homestead entry. When the error was discovered, John Donohue, now of Hood River, Oreg., on behalf of the heirs, made application under the act of September 29, 1890, for the N. ½ sec. 3.

There were no improvements except the homestead cabin, which should have been located on the adjoining section 34 (outside of the overlap).

THOS. B. NEUHAUSEN,
Special Agent, General Land Office.

And such claims would have been paid by the Herrick bill. One could go on and enumerate dozens of other such claims whose payment would be made if the bill has any application at all to the Neuhausen report.

Perhaps it is not surprising that a superficial or careless reading of the Neuhausen report would lead to the assumption that the valuation set opposite the names of the claimants between pages 18 and 30 was the amount found due or recommended for payment to the respective claimants, and also that wherever such valuation was omitted, as it was in some thirty-odd cases, no payment was recommended.

Such a bill could never receive consideration in the House of Representatives and was not entitled to receive consideration, and when it is discarded and another measure put through without the assistance of the promoter of such an abortive nugatory measure, the bungler who contracts to furnish prompt, careful, and diligent professional services, and who accomplishes nothing but delay and disappointment, is entitled to no reward.

It is contended in the extension of remarks that it is unconstitutional to limit fees. This question need not enter into this matter, for, conceding for the sake of the argument this position, every one of these claimants in the bill which is passed, in my opinion, could successfully set up the defense of malpractice, if such a term can be applied to attorneys' services. They can set up the defense of failure of consideration, negligence, inattention, and failure to perform as far as they are concerned, on Mr. Herrick's part, resulting in long years of delay to claimants whose claims were unquestioned. The drafting of a blanket bill making the good claims to stand or fall with unworthy claims was the grossest kind of professional neglect and inattention, which I do not think any jury in Christendom could countenance. As far as I am able to ascertain, the gentleman has contracts with the beneficiaries which if he can enforce will enable him to grab at least $5,000—how much more I don't know—from the beneficiaries, not on account of any cause and effect as far as he is concerned, but merely due to the coincidence of the possession of a contract and the passage of a bill in spite of his interference.

Gentlemen, the only object I have in this matter is to protect my people, these unfortunate settlers and claimants, from the extortions and the exactions that this man is trying to "pull off" on them. [Applause.] These men are getting little enough I wish they could receive more. Many of their sums are cut down from the amount which Mr. Neuhausen found to be the value of their land and improvements. The committee decided to place a maximum of allowance at $2,000; in other words, no one was to be allowed more than $2,000. Yet it is insinuated in the extension of remarks that the amount allowed Uriah Serviss was cut down because he was not a resident of Oregon. I wonder if the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], who states that he has made a thorough investigation of this matter, stands sponsor for this contemptible insinuation:

Possibly the fact that Uriah Serviss has for a number of years lived in the State of California and not in Oregon may account for the lack of interest in his claim and the allowance to him of a totally inadequate sum.

There were 11 persons given relief in my bill the value of whose holdings, as found by Mr. Neuhausen, ranged from $2,631 to $3,840. Uriah Serviss was listed at $4,000. Every one of these persons or their heirs, with the exception of Uriah Serviss, are residents of the State of Oregon. One man lives in my own home town. Most of the others are my warm personal friends. The committee saw fit to put a limit of $2,000 as the highest allowance. Ten men from the State of Oregon suffered by this limitation; one man, or his heirs, lives in the State of California. Is there any justification for such aspersion? If the gentleman, in pursuit of his "thorough investigation," had consulted his friend Mr. YOUNG, of the neighboring State of North Dakota, who reported this bill at both sessions of Congress, he could have secured information, if he was seeking it, that would have saved him from standing sponsor for such misrepresentations and innuendo.

I desire to show up the cunning and craftiness of this man. I have not seen him since the last session of Congress. The Sherman County substitute bill was reported February 24, 1915. I did not see him for a long time prior to that date, nor have I seen him since, nor has Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota, who reported both bills, yet let me cite the letter he sent out to some of those who had contracts with him, as soon as the bill passed the House at this session. See how this letter is cunningly calculated with artful naïvete to convey the impression "I did it."

JUNE 10, 1916.

GEORGE MEADER, Esq.,
Wasco Oreg.

DEAR SIR: I am pleased to advise that the House of Representatives has finally passed the Sherman County bill, containing the appropriation for you. I shall now follow this up before the Senate committee in efforts to get favorable action there and keep you advised. Of course, it will be my efforts to have the bill amended so as to cover the claims of those which were left out by the House. But if I possibly fail in that, I will endeavor to urge this bill through to passage with the hope that at a subsequent Congress relief can be secured for the other claimants.

Congratulating you on the success thus far, I am,
Yours, very truly,

SAMUEL HERRICK.

Note the assumed tone of vigilance and activity. "I shall now follow this up before the Senate committee."

Is it suggestive of the military dispatch and expedition of Gen. Grant, "I propose to move immediately upon your works," or is it rather suggestive of the gentleman's assumption and brass, "Sonorous metal blowing bragging sounds"?

"I shall now follow this up before the Senate committee."

What hypocrisy in intended implication? He did not appear before the House committee at this session of Congress. Nor did he appear before the House committee since I took my seat March 4, 1913.

Here is another letter from Mr. Herrick written with affected ingenuousness in February, 1915, in which he recommends the passage of the bill which he reprobates so severely in the extension of his remarks.

FEBRUARY 26, 1915.

C. W. BARZEE, Esq.,
Portland, Oreg.

DEAR SIR: Am pleased to advise that House Committee on the Public Lands has finally reported out the Sherman County bill. Unfortunately it cuts down some of the claims and rejects a large number of others, but as I previously wrote you it seems to me it will pay to secure passage of the bill in its present form and then go after the rejected claims in a subsequent Congress. You also observe that it cuts down my compensation to five per cent, and while I regard this as unjust in view of the work I have done in the past six or seven years, I am willing to accept it rather than endanger its passage at this session. I have always had faith in the justness of these claims, so that I would rather lose three-fourths of my fees than that the claims should fail.

Inclosed I hand you a copy of the bill as reported out and shall endeavor to send you a full copy of the report, though same is rather bulky. Awaiting your advice, I am,
Very truly, yours,

SAMUEL HERRICK.

He had nothing to do with securing this report. Such letters were calculated to impress claimants with the idea that it was his accomplishment, that he was "on the job." The seeming generous and magnanimous renunciation of three-fourths of his alleged fees was intended to impress claimants with his soulful interest and activity in their behalf.

There are many reputable conscientious attorneys in the city of Washington who render valuable and efficient aid in connection with the consideration of bills before committees. But on the other hand the city of Washington is infested with a number of legal leaches and avaricious attorneys who secure contracts and barnacle themselves onto bills, and especially claim and Indian bills, with everything to gain and nothing to lose, who make the most extravagant claims about their influence and efforts, and who have practically nothing to do with the passage of bills, whose efforts consist almost solely in artificial manifestations of feverish activity, such as writing to Members, writing to parties interested, "keeping them advised," and telling them to prod up their Congressman, writing about committee meetings, giving notice of the reports of bills. This is about all they ever do. When they have such a matter as the Sherman County subject, with a 230-page report to wade through and analyze, they are unwilling to undergo such tedious labor, but are willing to fatten and profit on the labors of others. It is time the general public should be apprised of this situation.

Mr. Herrick refers to his conference with the Oregon Senators with a view of securing amendments and to urge the unconstitutionality of the limits on attorneys' fees. Senators LANE and CHAMBERLAIN and myself consulted about the matter of Senate amendments. We determined that it was unwise to offer Senate amendments late in the session with everyone anxious for adjournment. Such amendments would send the bill back to the House, perhaps to pigeonhole it indefinitely, particularly so for the reason that both Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota, of the Claims Committee, and Mr. MANN advised against Senate amendments. We deemed it best to secure further relief, if possible, by the introduction of a bill at another session.

Mr. Herrick's contracts with the claimants calls for payment within 30 days after the claimants received their warrants. He is writing to the various beneficiaries seeking a power of attorney to receive and transmit their warrants. He states in his letter that he does not ask any authority to indorse the warrants. If he obtains possession of any of these warrants he will no doubt send them to the claimants in care of some bank with a sight draft attached, or with an order to the bank to turn the draft over to the payee on payment of his unearned fees. I have felt it my duty to inform the beneficiaries of the facts concerning Mr. Herrick's connection with the Sherman County relief bill. I have not all of their addresses. If, after knowing the facts, they see fit to reward him it certainly is no concern of mine. In his extension of remarks he quotes from letters of beneficiaries commending him on his success. Whatever information these persons have received, they have received it from Mr. Herrick, and it is safe to say he has been affected with no undue modesty in transmitting such information. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has again expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. I herewith add a letter from JAMES R. MANN, the Republican floor leader:

UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
OFFICE OF REPUBLICAN LEADER, CAPITOL BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., September 6, 1916.

Hon. NICHOLAS J. SINNOTT,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SINNOTT: I see by the RECORD that some attorney is claiming some credit for the passage of the Sherman County settlers' claim bill.

You are the one who is entitled to the full credit for the passage of this bill. No one had ever made serious progress in the House with these claims until you came in. The Senate had, prior to your coming in a former Congress passed a bill on the subject which was so filled with glaring mistakes that it never had any chance in the House. I remember when you discussed these claims with me in your first term, and I went over the matter very carefully with you and finally said to you that if you would go through the claims yourself and cut out those to which I and others made objections and take charge of the matter yourself that we would aid in the passage of the bill. This you did. And though the bill was a very long one and had many claims in it, and it is unusual to pass such bills by unanimous consent, your bill finally went through because of the conscientious work you had done upon it.

Any attorney that may have been mixed up in the matter only prevented the passage of the bill in a previous Congress. He certainly did nothing toward helping to pass the bill in this Congress. Again I say, you are the man who did the work and are entitled to the credit.

Yours, very sincerely,

JAMES R. MANN.

I herewith add certain letters and records referred to in my remarks from file No. 21:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., September 6, 1916.

Pursuant to section 882 of the Revised Statutes, I hereby certify that the annexed are certified copies of papers in the case of Samuel Herrick in file No. 21-310 of this department.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the seal of the Department of the Interior to be affixed, the day and year first above written.

[SEAL.]

BO SWEENEY,
Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

—

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, October 16, 1907.

SAMUEL HERRICK,
Ouray Building, Washington, D. C.

Recommendation for his suspension, by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with papers in the case.

OCTOBER 17, 1907.

Respectfully submitted to the Assistant Attorney General for recommendation.

J. W. HOLCOMBE,
Chief of Appointment Division.

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE,
November 23, 1907.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: Upon consideration of the record made in this proceeding, and especially the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office herein, October 16, 1907, that Samuel Herrick, of Washington, D. C., be suspended from practice before this department and its bureaus for the period of 60 days for unprofessional conduct in the distribution of advertising matter offensive to the General Land Office, and calculated to mislead and unfairly influence prospective clients, I have to advise that said recommendation be approved by you and that an order of suspension be at once issued.

G. W. WOODRUFF,
Assistant Attorney General.

Approved: November 23, 1907.
JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD,
Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., October 16, 1907.

Honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR:

SIR: The records of this office show that Mr. Samuel Herrick, attorney of this city, was admitted to practice, as attorney, before your department and its bureaus during the year 1901.

My attention having been called to the fact that facsimile copies of a personal letter addressed to Mr Patrick H. Loughran, prepared on an official letterhead of your department and of this office, signed by the chief, the examiners of mineral claims and contests, and the clerks of the Mineral Division, were being circulated as advertising matter by Mr. Loughran and the firm of Herrick & Herrick, on the 24th of September I addressed a communication to Mr. Loughran directing that he answer on October 7 to the charge of unprofessional conduct with respect thereto, and subsequently, my attention having been called to what I regarded as equally unprofessional conduct on the part of Mr. Samuel Herrick in connection with the printing and distribution of the copies of the aforesaid letter, I verbally informed Mr. Herrick of my intention of serving him a formal notice to respond to charges, and as he indicated a willingness that his case be consolidated and heard along with that of Mr. Loughran without the formality of notice on October 4 I addressed to him the following communication:

"In view of your conversation with me some days ago in reference to the citation of September 24, 1907, to Mr. Patrick H. Loughran, I wish to advise you that I have notified Mr. Loughran that I will hear the matter covered by my letter of the above date on Saturday afternoon, October 5, 1907, at 3 o'clock p. m., in my office in the General Land Office.

"If it is your pleasure that citation be waived in your case and you submit to a hearing at the same time covering your connection with the matter set out in the letter to Mr. Loughran, it will be agreeable to me to take the matter up concerning both yourself and Mr. Loughran at that time."

On Saturday the 5th Mr. Herrick appeared, waived service of notice and specification of charges, and was heard in his own behalf as well as in connection with Mr. Loughran's case.

By letter of even date herewith I have forwarded to your department my report and recommendations in the case of Mr. Loughran, a copy of which I inclose herewith for a more specific statement of the case herein against Mr. Herrick. I find that Mr. Herrick associated himself on June 21, 1907, with Mr. Patrick H. Loughran, then a clerk in this office, for the practice of mining law, and that conjointly with Mr. Loughran during the month of July, 1907, had printed or lithographed a letter, personal in character, addressed to Mr. Loughran, while a clerk in the Mineral Division of this office, by his associates and fellow employees and widely distributed as advertising matter copies thereof in conjunction with the business of Herrick & Herrick, and that in certain cards and other advertising matter sent out by Mr. Loughran and the firm of Herrick & Herrick Mr. Loughran was represented in the one instance as "More recently examiner of mining claims and contests in the Mineral Division of the General Land Office" and in the other as "Recently examiner of mining claims and contests," whereas in fact Mr. Loughran had never held the position of examiner of mineral claims and contests in the General Land Office, which fact Mr Herrick well knew. I further find that Mr. Herrick aided and assisted in the printing or lithographing of the letter, and in the distribution and circulation of copies thereof, knowing that the letter was given to his associate, Mr. Loughran, as an expression of friendly and personal esteem, and that the signers thereof did not intend that the letter should be used for advertising purposes by him, but for use only by Mr. Loughran in personal presentation. He assented to, if he did not actually participate in, the distribution of copies of the letter after he was informed that emphatic objection had been made to such use of the letter by one of the signers. He must have known that the printing or lithographing of the letter and the circulation of copies thereof advertising his and Mr. Loughran's business was a violation and betrayal of the confidence reposed in Mr. Laughran by his former friends and associates. The records of this office further show that this is not the first time Mr. Herrick has been called to respond to charges affecting his standing as an attorney, and I personally warned him a short time since, and the record herein will disclose that I called his attention thereto in the hearing in this case, that I would not longer tolerate his methods of procuring business before this office, and only desisted from recommending action by your department upon his solemn assurance that he would not continue such improper practices. While the extreme action of disbarment might be taken against him, yet in view of the fact that he is a young man, and considering the serious effect that disbarment would have upon his future prospects and would also affect his associates in business, I am unwilling to recommend that that step be taken at this time, but am convinced that his conduct in these particular cases fully demonstrates the necessity of his understanding that he can not continue before your department and its bureaus unprofessional practices.

I, therefore, recommend that he be suspended from practice before your department and its bureaus for a period of 60 days and until such time thereafter as this office is put in possession of the original letter and he has satisfied this office that the lithographs or prints, plates or forms, if any, in his possession or in the possession of his associates, as well as all copies of the letter in his possession or in the possession of his associates, or in any manner under his control, have been destroyed and that satisfactory evidence is submitted showing that he has addressed a letter to all the addressees of the circular letter hereinbefore referred to advising them that the printing and the circulation and distribution of the letter were without the authority or the knowledge or the consent of the parties signing the letter and met with the disapproval of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Very respectfully,

R. A. BALLINGER, Commissioner.

A. Copy of letter of October 4.
B. Transcript of testimony at hearing.
C. Letter from Chief of Field Division Glavis, containing copy of letter, card, and other advertising matter.
D. Copy of report and recommendation in Laughron case.

APRIL 19, 1907.

Mr. SAMUEL HERRICK,
Attorney at Law, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Pursuant to charges set forth in letter "P" of February 11, 1907, wherein it was stated, in substance, that you were charged with fraudulent conduct and a violation of the regulations governing the practice of attorneys before the Department of the Interior in the matter of securing certain contracts with one McLean, and others, and, in pursuance of your answer to said charges herein filed, under date of March 26, 1907, and, in further pursuance of the hearing thereon had before me and the honorable assistant commissioner on the 17th day of April, 1907, I have to inform you that to the extent of a technical violation of rule 9 of said regulations you were found to be guilty of speculating in relinquishments, and I so hold, but, in view of the circumstances fully presented and considered on said hearing, I am of the opinion that I am not warranted in either disbarring or suspending you from practice, in which the honorable assistant commissioner concurs.

It is to be understood, however, that this is not to be taken as, in any sense, a sanction of any violation of the regulations affecting the practice of attorneys before the Interior Department, but, on the contrary, such regulations will be rigidly adhered to.

Respectfully,

R. A. BALLINGER, Commissioner.

MESSRS. OGDEN & SLATER,
Thomas, Okla.

GENTLEMEN: By decision of the 20th instant the Commissioner of the General Land Office held Mr. Ogden's entry for cancellation, on the contest of Elva V. Seward. In our opinion, an appeal from this decision to the Secretary of the Interior ought to be taken on your behalf, and we should be glad to prosecute such appeal as your Washington counsel. Of course, we have no desire to interfere in any way with your local counsel (if any you have), but our long experience has thoroughly convinced us that every land claimant should have Washington counsel, who can personally present their case to the officials of the Interior Department, and who have therefore much better chances of success than have attorneys far remote from the National Capital. As to our ability, etc., we can refer to Messrs. A. N. Byers, of Harrison, Okla.; J. T. Martin, of Ponca, Okla.; E. C. Ballew, of El Reno, Okla.; C. C. Cleveland, of Leesville, La.; W. A. Wiegand, of Great Falls, Mont.; Delmer D. Imus, and Jacob I. Wood, of Kalama, Wash.; Richard De Haven, of Antelope, Oreg.; Clifford Hales, of Rugby; R. C. Butts, of Bowdon; J. V. Law, of Voltaire—all in North Dakota; Bernard Cole, of Wagner; Frank Thompson, of Armour; Dr. R. C. Kelsey, of White Rock—all in South Dakota—and others; all of whose cases we have recently won before the Secretary, reversing the commissioner in each; also, to many clients and attorneys in your own territory, including Jesse J. Dunn, Esq., of Alva, the president of the Oklahoma Bar Association, and to our cousin, Hon. Myron T. Herrick, of Cleveland, Ohio, the nominee for governor of that State.

Having for years made a specialty of public-land practice, particularly of homestead contests, we believe we can render you valuable services in an endeavor to have the commissioner's decision reversed, the entry sustained, and the contest dismissed. We would prepare and file the appeal, together with brief in support thereof, and in addition would orally argue the case before the Secretary's legal advisers, if necessary, for a retainer of $25 and a further fee of $75, the latter to be paid only in the event we succeed in securing favorable decision from the Secretary.

If these terms are satisfactory, kindly let us hear from you at an early date, in order that we may immediately commence efforts to save your homestead. Meantime we remain,

Very truly yours,

HERRICK & HERRICK.

MEMORANDA IN RE SAMUEL HERRICK, ATTORNEY.

October 28, 1903, Mr. E. G. Spillman, attorney of Kingfisher, Okla., addressed this office a communication complaining of the practices of Messrs. Herrick & Herrick, and inclosed a letter from this firm to Messrs. Ogden & Slater, of Thomas, Okla. (copy of letter attached). I find no press copy of notice of citation to Herrick & Herrick, but on the attorney's docket appears this undated memorandum:

"Herrick & Herrick, attorneys, Washington, charges by E. G. Spillman, Eureka, Cal. Charges for disbarment. Parties summoned before this office and exonerated."

In a letter addressed to Mr. E. G. Spillman, of Kingfisher, Okla., he is informed that Herrick & Herrick were summoned before this office to answer to the charges preferred by him and that—

"Mr. Herrick earnestly disclaimed any intentional violation of the rules of the office in any unprofessional action as to the rights or interest of other attorneys. He expressed regret for having used words calculated to create a wrong impression as to his methods."

Mr. Spillman's attention was further called to the fact that Herrick & Herrick were very young men and "not so well and full advised on the questions of professional duties and responsibilities as are older and more experienced members of the profession."

March 14, 1905, Mr. Samuel Herrick was advised by letter "A" of the receipt of a communication from the local land office at Chamberlain, S. Dak., transmitting affidavits affecting his actions while judge of election of the town of Herrick, S. Dak. Mr. Herrick was advised that "the papers were transmitted for the consideration of this office, but before taking any action you are requested within a reasonable time to file in this office such statements touching the matter as you may deem proper."

Charges were dismissed in letter "A" to the register and receiver at Chamberlain, S. Dak., March 28, 1905.

December 10, 1906, this office advised Mr. Herrick in substance that G. W. Searcey of Fort Cobb, Okla., had complained that after his case pending before this office had been decided, Mr. Herrick notified him of the decision although he had not been retained as counsel. Furthermore, Mr. Herrick had advised Searcey that he had secured a favorable decision from this office for him and demanded security for an agreed contingent fee of $100. The records further show that Mr. Herrick had filed appearance for Searcey in this office and had been notified of office action by reason of such appearance. In closing this case January 7, 1907, it was said—

"It is clear from your answer and the statements made by Mr. Searcey that you did file your appearance and demand payment of fees from Mr. Searcey without being employed by him and without rendering any important services in his case. Your sworn statement that you honestly believed that you had been employed which were believed to be based on certain correspondence, and Mr. Searcey's request that no further action be taken, induced this office to dismiss the matter and close the case."

December 15, 1906, Mr. Samuel Herrick was advised that J. E. Kelley, attorney, of McCook, Nebr., by letter of December 11, 1906, complained of his action in writing certain letters to Mr. Kelley's clients, which letters he transmitted, and Mr. Herrick was advised from this office—

"This office is not favorably impressed with these methods of practice, they being not in accordance with the practices of reputable attorneys before the courts and this department. Within 10 days you are expected to explain, in writing, the matters herein complained of.

—

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., September 7, 1904.

SAMUEL HERRICK, Esq.,
Attorney at Law, Washington, D. C.

SIR: On May 4, 1904, you addressed and mailed to Stanislaw Czierniejeski, of Crivitz, Wis., a letter in which you used the following language:

"Noting that you have a homestead contest pending in the General Land Office with James W. Henderson, we write to suggest that we should be very glad to represent you therein as your Washington counsel. Of course we have not the slightest intention or desire to interfere with your local counsel, if any you have, but our long experience has firmly convinced us that every land claimant should be supplied with Washington lawyers. As to our ability, etc., we refer you to our cousin, Hon. Myron T. Herrick, Governor of Ohio; to the parties on inclosed list, all of whose cases (among others) we have recently won before the Secretary, reversing the commissioner in each, within the last 16 months; also to many clients and attorneys in your own State.

"Having for years made a specialty of land practice, particularly of homestead cases, I believe I can render valuable services in an endeavor to have the case finally decided in your favor. We would enter appearance on your behalf, prepare and file brief before the commissioner, and in addition before the Secretary if the case were appealed, for a retainer of $25, and a further fee of $50, the latter to be paid only in the event we succeed in securing favorable decision from the department.

"If these terms are satisfactory, kindly let us hear from you at an early date, in order that we can immediately commence work to win you this land. Meantime we remain."

With this letter you inclosed a list, giving the names and post-office addresses of a number of persons, "all of whose cases (among others)" you say you "have recently won before the Secretary, reversing the commissioner in each, within the last 16 months."

Among the names on this list I find those of B. W. Sharborough, Claus W. Anderson, Jesse J. Murphy, Hon. J. P. McCumber, Hon. F. H. Register, and A. B. Huntley, who, after careful search both of the records of this office and of the department, do not appear to have been parties to any appeal prosecuted to the Secretary.

Your letter warrants the conclusion that all of the decisions of this office, to which you refer, were erroneous and unwarranted by the facts before it, and were reversed for that reason when, in fact, some of them were not "reversed," but were only modified on the showing of supplemental facts presented in the first instance to the department and not submitted for the consideration of the office prior to its decision.

John D. Rivers, one of the persons you mention, was a contestant in a case against Patrick J. Gerin, but the record fails to show that you appeared as attorney for Rivers.

You are hereby requested to make such explanation in justification of your said letter as you may care to submit, in order that this office may be fully advised before it takes further action in the matter.

Very respectfully,

J. H. FIMPLE,
Acting Commissioner.

—

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., November 27, 1907.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

MR. SECRETARY: In accordance with request received this morning by telephone, I return herewith orders of November 23, 1907, directing the suspension from practice as attorneys before the department and bureaus thereof for 60 days from that date of Samuel Herrick and Patrick H. Loughran, of Washington, D. C.

Very respectfully,

V. WARNER,
Commissioner.

—

NOVEMBER 29, 1907.

REASONS WHY SAMUEL HERRICK SHOULD NOT BE SUSPENDED FROM PRACTICE BECAUSE OF THE TESTIMONIAL LETTER TO PATRICK H. LOUGHRAN.

I. Samuel Herrick did not advise such circularization, but strenuously objected to it, and was only induced by Loughran to permit it under protest.

II. I was much younger than Loughran, both in years, in the practice of law, and with respect to the Interior Department. I had never been in the Interior Department, whereas Loughran had for years served satisfactorily as a special agent, and as a clerk in several divisions of the General Land Office. For these reasons I relied upon and trusted to Loughran's advice.

III. The entire circularization was under the exclusive control of Mr. Loughran, the names and addresses of the recipients being unknown to me. I only yielded a reluctant permission upon Loughran's threat to withdraw from the association before it had fairly commenced, if this plan of advertising was not adopted. My opposition was not owing to the slightest doubt of the propriety of the letter, but to the expense of circularization.

IV. The letter was suggested by Mr. Heitman, then principal examiner of mineral claims and contests, and now Chief of the Mineral Division in the General Land Office, who prepared the original draft and approved the letter as completed and delivered to Mr. Loughran. The letter was not either suggested or requested by Mr. Loughran, and of course not by Mr. Herrick.

V. The writing of the letter upon the General Land Office heading, and the addition of the words "Board of Law Review, by E. C. Finney" were due entirely to the clerks, and not directly or indirectly due to either Loughran or Herrick.

VI. There is nothing in the phraseology of the letter indicating that Mr. Loughran or I possessed the slightest influence over the minds of the signers, or others in the General Land Office. On the contrary, it expressly refers to a "severance" of Mr. Loughran's personal and official relations with them. Such phraseology could not mislead mining attorneys, mining brokers, and mining operators—a body of men noted for their intelligence and shrewdness.

VII. The letter was tendered Mr. Loughran, accompanied by the oral expressions of those who signed it, that he should use it in the West by presenting it to mining attorneys and mining operators, to the end that he might gain their confidence and secure business from them.

VIII. The only use to which the letter has been put is the use for which it was intended and given. The method of distribution was the same for which the testimonial was given and intended, with the slight variation that the mails were in part substituted for the personal handing of the testimonial. The principle of both was the same.

IX. Many of the clerks who signed and delivered the testimonial as aforesaid, for the purpose aforesaid, were old and experienced in the General Land Office, all of them being the senior of Herrick, and the majority of them the senior of Loughran. In the case of three or more of those holding principal positions in the mineral division their seniority over Herrick ranged from 30 to 40 years. He had therefore every right to believe there was nothing in the letter calculated to deceive or mislead, and he so believed.

X. As manifesting the good faith in which the latter was used, it was not circulated covertly, but openly, and sent to 70 per cent of the Special Service Corps with whom Mr. Loughran was personally acquainted. Had there been any intention to mislead or deceive, the letter would not have been mailed to those very officials of the Interior Department whose duty it is to ferret out deception in reference to public lands.

XI. No business, of whatsoever character, has been obtained by Loughran or Herrick through the use of this letter. Every mining case which has been obtained since Mr. Loughran started West was from persons whom he personally interviewed in the West. Therefore the conclusion is irresistible that no one has been misled or deceived by the testimonial or its distribution.

XII. The reason we used this testimonial was not to deceive or mislead. It was to meet and correct an impression existing in certain parts of the West and South that Mr. Loughran was blamable in accordance with certain charges made against him while a special agent of the Interior Department. These charges were investigated by Commissioner Ballinger, found groundless, and dismissed. It was only natural and proper that in commencing the practice of law both Herrick and Loughran should desire the erroneous impression aforesaid entirely removed.

XIII. For years it has been the practice of those severing connection with the Interior Department and embarking upon the practice of law to advertise their said connection as reason why they are especially qualified to conduct cases before the department. Never before has criticism been made, to our knowledge, of any means employed by such persons, though within the last three months one high in the confidence of Secretaries Smith, Francis, Bliss and Hitchcock had circulated a letter, using by permission the names of all four said ex-Secretaries, and submitting the letter to Secretary Hitchcock before it was mailed. Mr. Herrick and Mr. Loughran had full knowledge of this, the former from the lips of Judge Parker himself, and had he possessed the slightest doubt of the propriety of the circularization of the Loughran testimonial such doubt would have been resolved favorably to its use by his knowledge of Secretary Hitchcock's approval aforesaid, by his high personal and professional opinion of Judge Parker, and by the fact that Judge Parker has your confidence and has been made your private secretary. This reference to the Parker letter is made not in a spirit of disapproval thereof, but merely for the purpose of establishing a precedent supportative of the action taken by myself and Mr. Loughran. A copy of it is submitted as an exhibit hereto. In addition there are submitted other letters from other attorneys who have left the department and advertised their connection therewith as a reason for their acquirement of land practice. Two of these were merely stenographers in your department, yet so far as can be learned there has been no official criticism of or charge against them.

XIV. Criticism was made at the hearing because Mr. Herrick had not first submitted the propriety of such advertising to the honorable commissioner. In reply I call attention to the fact that only a few months previously I had submitted to the honorable assistant commissioner another form of advertising, and especially requested that he take up with the honorable commissioner the question of its propriety. This he promised to do, but after repeated inquiries, and after the matter had lain before him for a month or more, I was unable to get any action. I inclose herewith the original envelope which the assistant commissioner handed to me in returning the aforesaid advertising matter without action or affirmative expression of approval or disapproval of it. I use this not in any spirit of criticism of the said honorable assistant commissioner, as I know full well how onerous were his duties immediately after assuming office, but because his failure to act in that case led me to believe that it would have been useless to submit the Loughran testimonial had I had the slightest doubt of the propriety of the letter. This I did not have.

XV. In the advertisement of this letter, and in Mr. Loughran's expenses in the West, a large amount of money was expended. Less than one-sixth of that amount has been received by us as fees in any mineral case or matter. The advertisement was a failure from the standpoint of securing mineral business. That fact alone shows that persons in the West were not misled or deceived. I hereby express my entire willingness to turn into the conscience fund of the Treasury, or to pay into your department, if any law can be found warranting it, every cent of money received by Loughran and myself as fees in mining business. I also tender my dockets, books, correspondence and office files of every sort or nature to an examination by any representative of your office as supporting the above averments.

XVI. As another precedent for our action aforesaid, I refer you to the law book known as the "Mineral Digest," copies of which are in the official library of your office, and copies of which may be found through the West. This work was prepared and edited by "Horace F. Clark, land and mining attorney, Washington, D. C.; C. C. Heltman, assistant chief, Mineral Division, General Land Office; Charles F. Consaul, examiner of mining claims and contests, General Land Office." The work was largely prepared from the office files of the General Land Office, and largely within the confines of the Interior Department Building, though whether within office hours or not, I have no positive information. Clark's name as a mining attorney, employed with the names of his coauthors and their official positions, gave and give a quasi-official approval to the work, with a resulting favorable advertisement of the practice of Horace F. Clark. Whether entirely from this or not, the fact remains that he has to-day and for several years has had, a larger individual percentage of mining cases before the General Land Office and your office than any other attorney. Moreover, Mr. Heltman did on the day of our hearing in this case acknowledge that he still retains a proprietary interest in the book, and has received royalties from sales thereof within a year. Furthermore, Mr. Clark, the coauthor with Mr. Heltman, has within a year stated an intention of publishing a new edition.

XVII. The aforesaid Mr. Heltman has within the past three months been promoted by you to be Chief of the Mineral Division of the General Land Office, and I presume that the contemplated new edition will bear his present official designation.

XVIII. I never learned that any criticisms of or charge against Mr. Heltman for his aforesaid action had been made, except his admission at the hearing that one of the ex-Secretaries had reprimanded him, but Mr. Clark was for his action never disbarred or suspended for one instant before your department, and the said alleged reprimand did not have the effect of withdrawing the book from circularization or ending the advertisement of Mr Clark's business, or influence Mr. Heltman to withdraw his pecuniary interest therein.

XIX. Your action under consideration would be a total departure from action of previous Secretaries with regard to professional advertising. It is, I submit with all respect, unjust to place upon me the burden of this change of ruling, when other attorneys equally or more blamable are exempt from punishment.

XX. No precedent for suspension from practice upon such a ground as the charge against me can be found in the records of any department of the Government, nor has it been possible after the closest scrutiny of the reports of the courts of the various States to find any case even analogous to it. The law force in the General Land Office, when directed by the honorable commissioner to examine the precedents, were unable to develop even a remotely analogous case, and rested their judgment against us upon the decision in the Colorado courts, disbarring an attorney who in his cards stated an ability to secure divorces "quietly and without publicity."

XXI. Although suspension from practice is not disbarment, it is confused with that in the public mind. The result would be the loss of a practice netting me more than $12,000 per annum, which I have built up by constant, hard, and laborious work of years; it would result in my loss of professional business and social standing. It would practically debar me from election to any public office. It would stand as a perpetual stigma against my name and a blot upon my family record. Further than this, it would seriously affect, if not destroy, the patent law practice of Herrick, Herrick & Kent; also the Post Office Department practice of Herrick & Christensen. R. Peale Herrick (my brother), Frank J. Kent, and Andrew Christensen are wholly and absolutely blameless; they are all young men struggling ahead in the world. Under such circumstances the punishment which you propose to inflict would be disproportionate, unjust, and even cruel.

XXII. Although I am conscious of no wrongdoing, I hereby express my willingness to apologize to the honorable commissioner, the honorable assistant commissioner, and every signer of the testimonial for my use of it; to pay into the Treasury as aforesaid every cent of money received thus far from the mining practice secured by Mr. Loughran, and to execute any further repudiation of our action in this matter that to you may deem due and fit. Since that would amount to a loss of all the practice received through the advertising, and would, in addition, involve humiliation on my part, I submit that would be punishment enough. At the same time, I reiterate my firm and honest belief that neither I nor Mr. Loughran has been guilty of the least wrongdoing. Call it lack of judgment if you will, call it bad taste, or injudicious, but I can not perceive wherein it is wrong. Yet if it results in my suspension from practice, even for the slightest period of time, it will result in my being classed in the public's estimation with attorneys whose integrity has been impeached, and the thieves and blacklegs who are disbarred from practice before the courts, and would result in irreparable injury to a large amount of business which I am now conducting before the department, and which in due course should be determined within the next 60 days. This includes not only the representation of railroad, mining, electric power, irrigation, and other corporations, but likewise and more especially numerous individual clients, poor homesteaders on the public domain, and others whom I am called upon to represent.

While this memorandum is prepared primarily for the purpose of securing a change of your judgment in so far as it affects me, and while Mr. Loughran has written Mr Woodruff that he has no further statement to make, yet I respectfully submit that he likewise should not be punished by any suspension. Many of the arguments above advanced as to myself apply to him likewise.

With entire confidence that you will, with this new data before you, reconsider thoroughly the whole subject and change your conclusion therein, I respectfully submit this memorandum.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL HERRICK.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 21, 1907.

MR. JOHN D. RIVERS,
Chamberlain, S. Dak.

MY DEAR SIR: After several years' experience in the Interior Department as a principal examiner of land claims and contests in the General Land Office, an assistant attorney in the office of the Assistant Attorney General and chief of the Lands and Railroads Division in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, I have decided to sever my connection with the department about April 8 to open a law office in Washington and resume the practice of my profession.

I shall give special attention to matters arising under the public land laws, both agricultural and mineral; the several right-of-way acts; the national reclamation act; and to practice before the Supreme Court and the various executive departments.

I refer you by permission to Hon. E. A. Hitchcock, Secretary of the Interior, and to the following ex-Secretaries of the Interior: Hon. Cornelius N. Bliss, New York City; Hon. David R. Francis, St. Louis, Mo.; Hon. Hoke Smith, Atlanta, Ga.

Very respectfully,

JAMES I. PARKER,
221 Florida Avenue NW.

[Paul E. Sleman, attorney and counselor at law, 515 Colorado Building.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 25, 1906.

J. D. RIVERS, Esq.,
Attorney at Law, Chamberlain, S. Dak.

DEAR SIR: The writer has recently severed an official connection with the Secretary's office of the Department of the Interior of several years' duration in order to enter upon active practice in this city.

As you will readily appreciate, my experience of several years in the Secretary's office enabled me to thoroughly familiarize myself with the practice before the Interior Department and especially fitted me to intelligently represent any interests before that department in land, mining, irrigation, and Indian matters.

If in connection with any business you may have before the Interior or other departments of the Government in Washington, you desire the intelligent assistance of Washington counsel, I shall be very glad to hear from you.

Very truly, yours,

PAUL E. SLEMAN.

[Harry F. Lerch, attorney and counselor at law, 1320 F Street NW.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 25, 1906.

JNO. G. RIVERS, Esq.,
Attorney at Law, Chamberlain, S. Dak.

DEAR SIR: In connection with your cases before the General Land Office and the Department of the Interior I beg to say that I have just resigned from a position in the office of the Secretary of the Interior to enter upon the practice of law before the executive departments and the courts of this jurisdiction.

My peculiar experience in the handling of land and mineral cases qualifies me for the prosecution of all appeals in the Interior Department as well as any matters concerning the public lands and Indian rights and contests.

If you desire able Washington counsel in any matters requiring prompt and careful attention in the departments, in the courts, and in patent and copyright matters, I shall be pleased to hear from you.

Very truly, yours,

HARRY F. LERCH.

[Woodford D. Harlan, attorney at law, 1520 Ninth Street NW.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 26, 1907.

SIR: Having severed my connection with the General Land Office, in Washington, D. C., after a service therein for than 20 years as inspector of United States land offices and surveyors general, examiner of contested cases, and as chief of the Special Agents Division, I offer my services to the public in the belief that my long and varied experience can be utilized to the advantage of those having business before the Land Department.

I assure personal and prompt attention to all business entrusted to my care.

Correspondence solicited.

Very respectfully,

W. D. HARLAN.

[Victor H. Wallace, attorney at law, 472 Louisiana Avenue NW., Room 11, Gunton Building.]

WASHINGTON, D. C.

As there is considerable land business in your State, it is possible that you may have matters before the General Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior in this city requiring the aid of a local attorney. If so, I shall be glad to represent you.

I was formerly employed under the General Land Office, and since engaging in the active practice of law have made a specialty of contest and other land cases.

In all cases sent me by attorneys from the States I remit the forwarding attorney one-third of my own fees.

I refer to card in Sharp & Alleman, page 1296. I shall be glad at any time to answer any inquiries you may care to make regarding the status of cases in which you are interested or any other business you may have before the Government departments.

Very truly,

VICTOR H. WALLACE.

DECEMBER 21, 1907.

SAMUEL HERRICK, Esq.,
Ouray Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have considered your memorandum of November 29, giving reasons for not suspending you from practice. I have gone over your case with that of Mr. P. H. Loughran, your partner. Your suggestion that you were led into this action by Mr. Loughran does not in the least appeal to me. You were as fully capable as he to know whether there was impropriety in the action complained of. I find that several times you have been called before the General Land Office to answer questions regarding alleged impropriety on your part in practice before that office. The facts in this case show that your familiarity with the regulations was such that you should not attempt to plead ignorance nor the excuse that you were advised by some one else.

The instance you cite in paragraph 13 as a precedent for your action, namely, the letter issued by James I. Parker, is wholly inapplicable to the facts in your case. There is not only nothing in common between the two cases, but with Mr. Parker, he obtained from the Secretary of the department permission to use a letter of recommendation after a full explanation to him of the purposes for which he intended to use it.

The use intended by you and Mr. Loughran was not disclosed to the persons who signed the letter, and the form in which the letter was published—namely, a photolithograph showing the official heading of the paper of the Land Office—shows to me very clearly that it was your intention to use a letter which was intended solely as a personal recommendation as though it were an official recognition of your special ability. This fact alone would tend to mislead the ordinary claimant by giving him the impression that your firm had more than usual influence or connection with the General Land Office, and I have not the slightest doubt that such was your intention in so using that letter.

I appreciate very fully the serious injury disbarment would mean to you. My original intention was to suspend you from practice for a period of 60 days, but, after conference with Commissioner Ballinger, I have determined not to suspend you provided you take the following action, which in part is what you suggest in paragraph 22 of your memorandum:

That you immediately prepare and hand to the Commissioner of the General Land Office a letter acknowledging your misconduct and of apology for the same, satisfactory to the commissioner, and at the same time surrender to the commissioner the original letter of recommendation, which was photolithographed and copies thereof distributed by you and your partner, Mr. Loughran. You are further informed, in view of the abandonment of the order of suspension contemplated, that any further misconduct on your part in your practice before the General Land Office or any bureau of this department will be considered as sufficient cause for your immediate disbarment.

Respectfully,

JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD,
Secretary.

[Samuel Herrick, counselor at law, Westory Building, Washington.]

JANUARY 9, 1908.

Hon. R. A. BALLINGER,
Commissioner General Land Office, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Having been heretofore, on the 4th day of October, 1907, cited to appear before you to show cause why I should not be suspended or disbarred from practice as an attorney before the Department of the Interior, its offices and bureaus, and, having appeared before you on October 5, 1907, in response to said citation, and, having then and there waived service of specifications of charges, and having been duly heard before you and thereafter recommendations pursuant to said hearing having been submitted to the honorable Secretary of the Interior by you, and the honorable Secretary of the Interior, on the 22d day of November, 1907, having made an order suspending me from practice before the Department of the Interior, its offices and bureaus, for a period of 60 days, and upon application thereafter made by me to the honorable Secretary, and upon further consideration, the honorable Secretary having directed, as shown by his letter of December 21, 1907, prior to said order of suspension being promulgated, that my suspension be abandoned, conditioned upon my preparing and handing you a letter acknowledging my misconduct in the premises and of apology to you for the same, satisfactory to you, and at the same time causing to be surrendered to you the original letter of recommendation which was photolithographed and copies thereof distributed by me and my partner, Mr. Patrick H. Loughran; now, therefore, in pursuance of the foregoing and in full compliance with the conditions and instructions of the honorable Secretary, I have caused to be returned to you said original letter of recommendation and fully acknowledged the impropriety of its use and distribution, as made by myself and Mr. Loughran, with the statement that such photolithographed copies as remained in the possession of myself and Mr. Loughran have been destroyed, and tender my apologies for any impropriety or wrongdoing in the premises and in all things stand ready and willing to abide by the direction of the honorable Secretary, as contained in said letter of December 21, 1907.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL HERRICK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is recognized for 45 minutes.

BANKING AND CURRENCY LEGISLATION.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, in contemplating a purely economic problem, especially one of a complex nature, I have never been able to believe that the solution of it could be helped or hastened by the application of partisan political considerations. For this reason it never entered my mind during the discussions incident to the preparation and passage by Congress of the banking and currency bill to inquire whether or not any provision of the measure would prove popular or distasteful to any particular element of the community; I merely sought to convince myself that the thing was sound and right and would satisfy the reasonable demands of commerce. For this reason I have not been much disposed in the three years which have elapsed since the enactment of the measure by the Sixty-third Congress to treat the achievement in a spirit of partisan exultation. Perhaps I have made as many as 50 expositions of the law before trade bodies, bankers' associations, economic societies, and universities throughout the country without once introducing in any address one word of a political description. Indeed, only once, and that very recently on a strictly political occasion, have I moderately departed from this conception of the right way to present the story of the great reformation three years ago in the banking and currency system of the United States. To my mind the least consequential fact has been the personal or political identity of the proponents of the Federal reserve act. The most important fact has been the act itself. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Latterly, however, we have had no little provocation to a rather different sort of treatment. Persons who had no part in effecting the reform of our banking and currency system—persons who, in fact, did all they could to obstruct and defeat it—and public journals which have no particular concern with the truth of what they say if they may hope to score a partisan advantage by saying it, have manifested a distinctly mendacious tendency both as to the genesis of the legislation and as to its effect. This reproach, I surmise, fits more exactly their deliberate misrepresentation of the effects of the new system than their talk about its origin. I think this, because the facts, statistical and otherwise, relating to the operations of the Federal reserve banks are readily accessible to anyone who will take the time to examine them and the pains to make reasonable deductions from them, whereas the derivation of fundamental ideas is something not so easily ascertained.

NO RESPONSIBLE PARTY ASSAULT.

There has been no responsible party assault on the Federal reserve act. The Republican national convention at Chicago in July said not one word in condemnation of it nor intimated the slightest criticism of any provision of it. This omission, in the circumstances, by a body that assailed every other legislative performance of the opposing party was tantamount to a substantial approval of the act. But recently individual Republican politicians, wiser in their own conceit than the assembled leaders of their party, have ventured to carp and cavil. Their comment has been fugitive and not in any sense precise. It has been turgid and in no degree discreet. In the measure that these critics have manifested petty partisan zeal, to that extent they have exhibited an ignorance of the legislation as amusing as it is dense. [Applause on the Democratic side.] As long as they directed their declamation to the uninitiated citizens of their country crossroads it did not much interest me, however much it may have misinformed their constituents. But now, since these trifling sophists persist in repeating one another's fables about the Federal reserve act and inserting their prevarications in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to be read, possibly, by people who are none the less worthy because they are credulous, this would seem an opportune time to make an end of such political gasconade. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This is particularly the case when we find so good and guileless a gentleman as the Republican candidate for President of the United States accepting and echoing the mummery of his congressional tomtits. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If Mr. Hughes would give more heed to the real leader of his party here, a man of good perception and intellectual force, and pay less attention to these rhetorical dirt daubers, his next transcontinental tour might less likely turn out to be another political and ethical tragedy. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

WARNINGS UNHEEDED.

Generally these individual and journalistic attacks on the Federal Reserve System have taken on the guise of the faint praise which amounts to damnation. When this has not been so the political commentators have conceded the soundness and incalculable usefulness of the system only to appropriate for the Republican Party the credit of having "blazed the way and furnished the pattern" in the report of the Aldrich Monetary Commission. Even so, Mr. Speaker, and there comes crashing down upon the Republican Party the scriptural condemnation against the culprit of neglected opportunity, against the unpardonable perversity of those who might live in the light, but naturally prefer the darkness. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Time and again the warning to the Republican Party appeared in the nature of financial convulsions that shook the very foundations of our commercial and industrial establishments, precipitating ruin in nearly every place and causing distress to nearly every human being throughout the length and breadth of the land. Yet no permanent relief ever came; no line of remedial legislation was ever written.

WISE ADVICE REJECTED.

The wise men of the Republican Party frequently plead for relief, but were overborne by the politicians. Lyman J. Gage, Secretary of the Treasury under McKinley, came to Washington in 1908 to admonish his party leaders here that the Aldrich emergency makeshift was "a dangerous narcotic to lull the Nation into a sleep from which it would awaken in agony." But permanent legislation was thrust aside and the Republican chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee was turned out and discredited because he dared attempt a scheme which threatened the supremacy of concentrated wealth. Likewise, Franklin MacVeagh, Secretary of the Treasury under Taft, repeatedly told his party in Congress that Federal banking laws literally nationalized panics and urged the leaders to postpone the remedy no longer. He told his party in this Capitol that the catastrophe of 1907 was "a gratuitous panic," that the financial system under which we were then living would "not only not prevent a panic, but make it inevitable." Not only so; he charged the Government with "exclusive responsibility" for the commercial, industrial, and social disasters which flow from panics. "This responsibility is fixed," said Mr. MacVeagh, "and ought to be frankly recognized and acknowledged. The people are helpless, and there can be no relief until Congress acts."

THE LURID WAY TO BANKING REFORM.

But, Mr. Speaker, there was no action; and the wretched pretense exigently put forward now to the effect that the Aldrich Monetary Commission "blazed the way for banking and currency reform" is a pure invention obviously designed to extenuate incompetency, to mitigate heedlessness, to excuse political cowardice, and to filch credit for labor which other men of another party performed. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The way to banking and currency reform under a Democratic administration was "blazed" by financial conflagrations under Republican administrations, the lurid flames of which had licked up the substance of American business men and the fierce ravages of which had devoured the profits of American industry until the losses entailed and the misery which ensued had exceeded human approximation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

No serious contention on any subject was ever made with less foundation in fact or that was easier of absolute disproof than the assertion that the Aldrich Monetary Commission blazed the way for Democratic banking and currency reform. Aside from my own intimate knowledge of the history of the Federal reserve act, and apart from the very inherent differences in the principles, purposes, and processes of the banking and currency system which it provides and that which the late Senator Aldrich and his associates devised, the evidence which may be presented in confutation of the assertion in point is conclusive beyond dispute.

FIVE YEARS LOST.

The Aldrich Monetary Commission blazed no way and furnished no pattern for banking and currency reform under the Wilson administration. The Monetary Commission cost the Government nearly $300,000—the exact amount being $287,259.35—and delayed the enactment of comprehensive banking and currency legislation for five years and a half.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GLASS. If the gentleman will get me time, I will yield. I have only 45 minutes, but I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BENNET. I merely want to ask the gentleman if the report of the so-called Aldrich Commission was not a unanimous report signed by Democrats and Republicans alike?

Mr. GLASS. It was signed by one Democrat, I hate to admit, who never read a line of it before he authorized his signature to be attached to it. How many cases of this sort there were, I do not know.

Of the expenditure indicated, $102,357.37 was spent in assembling a library of 26 volumes of 12,000 pages and in procuring monographs from various persons having more or less familiarity with economics. The library may be useful to philosophers and monetary historians, and the monographs may be interesting to those who have time to spend in the cloister, but I venture nothing in saying that not one volume of the costly library nor one essay among the expensive monographs was essential to the work of preparing or enacting legislation for the reformation of the banking and currency system of the United States. Every work in the library thus assembled which could in any practical sense be utilized in the fabrication of a banking and currency bill such as the Monetary Commission proposed or such as the Congress subsequently passed was readily accessible, without a penny's charge, to any member of the commission or to any Member of Congress interested in the subject. And I may say that I have not talked with a member of the Monetary Commission or a member of the Banking and Currency Committee of either branch of Congress which dealt with the question who was willing to say that he had found it necessary to consult any volume of this vast library with which he was not familiar long before the appointment of the Monetary Commission.

I would be willing to wager my congressional salary for a year against a day's vacation that not two members of the Monetary Commission itself nor of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate or House ever thumbed one-fifth of the volumes of this library; and these he might easily have obtained without getting from under the dome of the Capitol. Hence I assert that no way was "blazed" here for the proponents of the Federal reserve act. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

PARTISAN MISREPRESENTATION.

In the other branch of Congress, even oftener than here, within the month many astonishingly inaccurate statements have been made with respect to the Federal reserve act and the Federal Reserve System. It has been asserted repeatedly that "three-fourths of the Federal reserve act was taken from the bill of the Aldrich commission, and that many of its provisions are bodily reproductions of the Aldrich bill." These statements are made in a partisan spirit and for immediate partisan effect, without reference to the truth. They are, as a matter of fact, utterly false and susceptible of easy disproof.

There is not one fundamental idea of the Aldrich bill which is distinctly original with the framers of that measure nor are there many essential ideas of the Federal reserve act which had not been, in some guise, considered and discussed long before either the Aldrich bill or the Federal reserve act was exactly conceived. The zone system of the Fowler Federal reserve bank bill, the Muhlemann central reserve bank plan, even the scheme of the Indianapolis Monetary Commission of 1898, and the device of the American Bankers' Association of a later date, might better be appealed to in the citation of similitudes than the scheme of the Aldrich bill. Very much more to the point than any of these might be adduced the organization and practices of the great clearing houses of the commercial centers of the country; for it was right here that the generic idea of the Federal Reserve System had its birth, and from this base the structure was erected with all its lateral parts. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Both the Aldrich central bank bill and the Federal reserve act merely sought to apply the accepted principles of cooperative banking to the conditions, the usages, and prevailing spirit of the banking community of the United States. And that the Federal reserve act accomplished the purpose in a vastly safer and more satisfactory way than the Aldrich bill is evidenced for one thing by the fact that the Republican national convention of 1912 did not dare approve the Aldrich bill, while the Republican national convention of 1916 did not dare condemn the Federal reserve act. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

ALDRICH BILL DANGEROUS TO COUNTRY.

Moreover, so manifestly dangerous and contrary to the genius of democratic institutions was the Aldrich scheme of monetary reform that not only did the Republican Party refuse to accept it, not only did the Democratic Party openly reject it, but the Progressive Party, which nominated Theodore Roosevelt for President and polled 4,000,000 votes, characterized it as a scheme "to place the currency and credit system of the United States in private hands, not subject to effective public control." Furthermore, not a Republican Member of either House of the Congress dared propose the Aldrich bill, now so vainly applauded here and elsewhere in the Capitol as a substitute for the Federal reserve bill. Not only so, but not one of the three surviving Republican Senators who were members of the Aldrich Monetary Commission, Messrs. PENROSE, Burton, and WEEKS, seemed willing to present for consideration that imperialistic scheme to seize the banking business of the United States and to monopolize the note-issuing function of our national banking system. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Indeed, on December 1, 1913, the then Senator from Ohio [Mr. Burton] proposed a bill of his own, as radically different from the Aldrich bill as the Aldrich bill is from the Federal reserve act. It was a bill to create a central bank to be owned by the people of the United States and operated by the Government at Washington, and not a bank to be owned and operated by a chosen tribe of bankers for their own profit and to make supreme their own power for an apparent period of 50 years but in reality for an eternity. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

IGNORANCE OR MENDACITY.

Mr. Speaker, I challenge gentlemen who recklessly assert that "three-fourths of the Federal reserve act was taken from the Aldrich bill" to confirm their statement by credible evidence, or stand accused in the RECORD of shameful ignorance or partisan misrepresentation, whichever indictment they may better relish or deserve. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I challenge them to show one-fourth or any part of the Aldrich bill not common to nearly every comprehensive cooperative banking scheme proposed in many years that has been transferred bodily or otherwise to the Federal reserve act, impliedly or in text. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why do not they present their parallelisms? Why do they not specifically cite the identical features which would give a semblance of verity to their utterly unsubstantiated assertions? It is because they know they can not do it that they have never even attempted to justify their perversions by a presentation of the facts or by contrasting the various provisions of the two measures. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

NO FUNDAMENTAL RESEMBLANCES.

Aside from the technique familiar to all banking and currency schemes and excluding from the computation the nomenclature that inevitably applies to descriptions of commercial paper and discount operations of banks, there are few features of resemblance in the two plans. As I have already said, they differ in principle, in purpose, and in processes; and if these inherent dissimilarities, radical as they are, were not in themselves sufficiently obvious to prove the case, I could summon a witness whose competency and credibility would not be questioned even by those who have more concern for partisan advantage than they have for historical truth.

The late Senator Nelson W. Aldrich was chairman of the National Monetary Commission. It may be assumed that he knew pretty well what were the underlying principles of the bill presented to Congress by that commission. Likewise it may be assumed that Mr. Aldrich was fairly familiar with the text of the bill itself, which he is supposed to have drafted with the assistance of the commission's experts. It will not be denied in any quarter that the Rhode Island Senator, for years chairman of the Finance Committee of the upper branch of the Congress, had an intimate knowledge of the provisions of the Federal reserve act. Indeed, he had a mind so accustomed to financial analyses and a discernment usually so clear that he was universally regarded as a master among publicists. His very name attached to the Aldrich bank bill caused thousands of American bankers to swallow his proposed remedy without asking or knowing or apparently caring how much poison it contained.

On October 15, 1913, before the Academy of Political Science in New York City, Mr. Aldrich delivered an address on "Banking reform in the United States." It occupies 62 printed pages in the record of proceedings, and was devoted, almost in its entirety, to an examination of the major provisions of the banking and currency bill passed by the House and subsequently enacted into law as the Federal reserve act. If anybody who is too simple to differentiate for himself the inherent contrarities of the Aldrich bill and the Federal reserve act will read this address he will quickly see that Mr. Aldrich did not make the inscrutible blunder of relating the one measure to the other. If anybody who knows better, but has preferred for brazen partisan reasons to ascribe the paternity of the Federal reserve act, or any major part of it, to the Monetary Commission or to Mr. Aldrich, he may have a sufficient sensibility to realize just how asnamed of himself he should be for the imposture he has sought to practice upon the public. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

SENATOR ALDRICH'S BITTERNESS.

Mr. Aldrich, so at variance with his ordinary style of cool, deliberate, and circumspect speech, grows so unreasonably vehement in his criticism of the essential provisions of the Federal reserve act, so harsh in his judgments and unsparing in his characterizations as to suggest the supposition that, on this occasion at least, he had emulated the example of that British prime minister who some years ago was reported to have unhesitatingly confessed to delivering speeches at certain functions which had been prepared for him because he had not the time to spare from more vital concerns to prepare the addresses himself. In reading this address by Mr. Aldrich over and over again I have as often wondered if its intemperate zeal in criticism, its positive violence in denunciation of the chief features of the Federal Reserve System might not be imputed to some disappointed academician among those who were paid large fees to contribute ideas to legislative problems which were rejected as either dangerous or chimerical. Apart from the impetuosity and the fierceness of the address by Mr. Aldrich, foreign to his habit of debate, the production betrayed a tedium of literary and historical research and a preceptive, scholastic flavor that revealed the Rhode Island Senator in a different rôle from that in which I had observed him for many years.

ALDRICH'S SWEEPING ATTACK ON THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

At all events, it will readily be observed that Mr. Aldrich in that New York address assailed every essential feature of the Federal reserve act. He attacked (1) the regional organization of the system as contrasted with his central bank plan, finding fault with every detail of the scheme of operating the divisional banks. With the incisiveness of a trained satirist he (2) ridiculed and, with the indignation of an irritated statesman, he literally screamed at the note-issue provision of the bill, bedecking it with vituperative epithets such as "fiatism" and "greenbackism" and "Bryanism." He (3) bitterly criticized the establishment of the Federal Reserve Board as an irresponsible central bank with extraordinary powers improvidently granted. He (4) berated these various powers separately and collectively, predicting that their exercise would lead to a financial oligarchy. He (5) denounced the bond-refunding feature, predicting tremendous losses to the banks and suggesting the probability of an utter destruction of the entire national banking system. He (6) condemned the rediscount requirements as inflationary to the last degree. He (7) railed at the open market section of the act as viciously accentuating the power of the reserve banks to inflate the currency by issuing inadequately secured notes. He (8) savagely assailed every reserve feature of the bill, particularly the fundamental idea of withdrawing the reserve funds of the country from the great money centers. He (9) deplored the apparent purpose of the bill to make the reserve banks active institutions in competition with the great banks of the large cities, with the consequent severance of long-established business relations. He (10) charged that no provision was made to promote foreign trade. He (11) attacked the redemption features of the bill as utterly insufficient and decrepit. He (12) deplored the proposition to establish a system of bank clearances. He (13) predicted that the shifting of reserves would create intense confusion and bring about momentarily a destructive contraction of commercial credits. He (14) deprecated the reduction of reserve requirements as wholly useless and undesirable, prophesying that it would lead to indefinite and destructive inflation. He (15) insisted that the statutory interest rate throughout the country should be uniform everywhere, and severely condemned the power given to the reserve board to differentiate conditions or circumstances. He (16) commented adversely on the failure to limit the amount of discounts which member banks might make. He (17) censured desperately the plan of Government deposits. He (18) charged that unexpected favors were accorded bankers in great centers. He (19) said the bill was "socialistic" in its features of Government control. He (20) pronounced the bill unconstitutional in its grants of power. Finally, ascribing paternity of the bill to two Virginians, he (21) appealed to the utterances of John Marshall and to Prof. George Tucker, friend and biographer of Jefferson, to rebuke these improvident sons of that Commonwealth who, "while they have not ignored the lessons of experience, are apparently afraid to make their legislation conform to its teachings on account of the declarations of a party platform."

AN IMPUDENT CLAIM.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Aldrich Monetary Commission, the author of the Aldrich banking and currency bill for the establishment of a central bank, owned and controlled by bankers, heedlessly and passionately ranged through every section of the Federal reserve bill, condemning it unsparingly and denouncing every fundamental feature of it intemperately. Scarcely one provision of the measure escaped his bitter excoriation. And yet this is the man, because he was a Republican, and because a presidential election is imminent, who we are impudently told now furnished 75 per cent of the Federal reserve act—and we are told this in face of the fact that Mr. Aldrich himself, as may easily be seen, did not leave a single essential provision of the act as it stands untouched by his furious condemnation.

It will be observed that I have not undertaken to controvert the criticisms of the late Senator from Rhode Island; the event is confutation sufficient. The evil predictions ventured, it would seem in a mood of incredible exasperation, have not come true and will not come true; and it is a commentary upon the futility of impatient prophecy to cite now the fact that the Federal reserve system, under the terms of the act and the administration of the central board, has been so free from inflationary tendencies and from any excess of arbitrary authority that a close collaborator with Mr. Aldrich in the preparation of his central bank bill has recently, as a member of the Federal Reserve Board, importunately urged the Banking and Currency Committee of the Congress to make broader and more imperative the powers of the board and to give the reserve banks greater facilities for expansion in both the domestic and foreign fields of operation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This the Congress has recently done, and I think wisely.

MORE FALSE STATEMENTS.

Mr. Speaker, I have an unutterable detestation of the habit which some politicians exhibit of perpetually blaring in a political way about all of our legislative transactions, and I have likewise a pity for the man who has not any higher aspiration or better occupation than to be beating a political tom-tom in season and out. I am provoked to say this for the reason that occasionally in this House and frequently in the other branch of Congress recently there has been evinced a distinctly partisan purpose to discredit the Federal Reserve System for no other reason than that it was adopted by a Democratic Congress under a Democratic administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It has been falsely stated that these reserve banks have not done enough business to pay house rent; that but two of the banks had ever paid a dividend; that their "cost to the Government has been $1,634,000," and other things of a kindred sort, as untrue as they are absurd. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Republican Senator who charged that the system had cost the Government more than one and a half million dollars is the same distinguished gentleman who said that the act was 75 per cent the work of the Republican Party. His mind appears to be awry, for he does not seem to realize that his various statements taken together constitute a shameful indictment of his own party. The fact is the most charitable thing that may be said about this sort of braying is that gentlemen who indulge in it know nothing about the Federal Reserve System; they have not even read the act. The system does not "cost the Government" a penny. Every dollar of expense is assessed against the member banks of the system; the salary of every official and attaché, from governor of the Federal Reserve Board to the janitor of a Federal reserve bank, is paid by the banks. Congress appropriated $100,000 at the beginning for the preliminary expense of organization; but, as I recall, $35,000 of that amount was not expended.

Every one of the statements that I have quoted, as well as many others, is—I hope not deliberately—untrue. As will be seen from a statement which I shall append to my remarks, 5 of the 12 regional banks have declared dividends at varying rates, and the last official bulletin, for the month of June, 1916, shows that all 12 of the regional reserve banks for the preceding six months had an excess of earnings over expenses amounting to $804,510. Eleven of the banks contributed to this surplus, only one showing a slight deficiency. For the month of June itself all 12 banks showed a considerable excess of earnings over expenses and a balance applicable to dividends in each case, ranging from 1.6 per cent in one bank to the maximum of 7.1 per cent, while the average rate for all 12 banks was 4 per cent. A study of the operations of the Federal Reserve System, if it would not prove interesting, might prove astonishing to some Republican statesmen who do not find it necessary or convenient or desirable to ascertain facts when they are talking for partisan purposes.

TRUE FUNCTION OF RESERVE SYSTEM.

Suppose it were true that all the banks are not earning dividends. Have gentlemen such a radical misconception of the real purpose of the Federal reserve system as to imagine that its primary object was to earn dividends? That was not it at all. It was established to conserve the banking facilities of the United States; to constitute a great reserve force; to keep in poise the banking and currency interest of the Nation. The only Republican member of the Federal Reserve Board, Mr. Paul M. Warburg, a banker of international fame, speaking to this point in Minneapolis not long ago, said:

> Earning capacity must never be considered the test of the efficiency of Federal reserve banks. Personally I should have felt heartily ashamed had all our banks, considering the circumstances under which they began operations, earned their dividends in the past year. Such an earning, with all it implied, would have been a proof that they had completely misunderstood their proper functions and obligations.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Would gentlemen who criticize the Federal Reserve System on this score have the reserve banks make a campaign for dividends when member banks, in consequence of the reduction of reserves by the Federal reserve act, are swollen with funds and credit? Would they have them do this merely to be able to say they had earned dividends? I will tell you why the reserve banks are not earning large dividends. It is because there are $2,076,000,000 of reserves in national banks, which is $801,000,000 more than the legal requirements. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

New England national banks have $48,000,000 above the amount required.

Eastern States, $269,000,000 more than required.

Southern States, $107,000,000 above requirements.

Middle States, $200,000,000 more than required.

Western States, $94,000,000 above the amount required.

Pacific States, $82,000,000 over requirements.

Alaska, Hawaii, and so forth, excess $1,000,000.

A STARTLING CONTRAST.

The Federal Reserve System is performing a vastly greater service than merely earning dividends. It is buttressing the public confidence, stimulating enterprise, and driving the Nation forward upon a career of business prosperity so marvelous as to almost stagger human imagination. [Applause on the Democratic side.] A startling difference in this system and the old system under which the country for 50 years operated is found in the fact that in 1907, after 43 years of the old system, New York could not in time of stress let a country bank have $50,000 of currency to meet the ordinary requirements of commercee or the pay rolls of industry, whereas in 1915, after but 1 year of the new system, New York let two European nations in the very cataclysm of a stupendous war have $500,000,000, and has recently let the same nations have an additional $250,000,000, and I speak with knowledge and not upon conjecture when I say that these banks were enabled to do this because of the existence of the Federal Reserve System. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

For the 12 months ending June 30, 1914, there were 19 bank failures in this country, with liabilities aggregating $30,952,000.

The 1st of August, 1914, the European war broke out, and a few weeks later, on November 16, 1914, the Federal Reserve System was inaugurated, and for the 12 months ending June 30, 1915, notwithstanding the disorganization caused by the war, there were only 16 bank failures with liabilities aggregating $15,972,000.

For the 12 months ending June 30, 1916, there were 15 bank failures, with aggregate liabilities of $3,838,000.

These figures show that for the first 12 months under the operation of the Federal Reserve System, the liabilities of failed banks have amounted to less than one-tenth of the liabilities of failed banks for the year immediately preceding the inauguration of the Federal Reserve System, and those banks which failed during the past 12 months were generally small concerns whose failure was traceable directly to criminal acts of the management—defalcations, embezzlements, and so forth—which, of course, it is practically impossible entirely to eliminate under any banking system. The figures conclusively dispose of another false statement circulated by enemies of the Federal Reserve System.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAKER). The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. EAGLE. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended 15 minutes.

Mr. GLASS. I think I can finish in less time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Virginia be extended 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL RESERVE ACT PREVENTED PANIC.

Mr. GLASS. It is alleged that the Federal reserve act had nothing to do with preventing a panic when the European war suddenly burst upon the community. Both actually and psychologically it had much, if not everything, to do with preventing a panic. The very knowledge that the act was on the statute books and that confirmation of the central board by the Senate was only required to put it in operation had a powerful effect in steadying the public nerve and stimulating banking confidence. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Ah, but it is insisted that the Republican Vreeland-Aldrich Act did this. That claim is subject to vital qualification. The Vreeland-Aldrich Act, as radically modified and extended by a Democratic Congress helped to prevent a panic by supplying emergency currency which the Federal reserve system would have supplied with greater facility had not the Republicans in the United States Senate so long delayed the organization of the system by opposition to the President's nominees for membership on the central board. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And just here the pregnant fact is that a Democratic Congress amended and extended the Vreeland-Aldrich Act as a part of the Federal reserve act and that the Republican Party in both branches of Congress voted against the act which made the modification and extension.

In another place on Thursday of last week when confronted with this significant circumstance, a distinguished Republican statesman took a short cut out of his dilemma by exclaiming, "The Aldrich-Vreeland Act was extended before the Federal reserve act was passed." I prefer to assume that the gentleman was simply ignorant of the facts and really did not know that his statement was utterly baseless. The Vreeland-Aldrich Act had never been modified or extended except by the passage of the Federal reserve act, against which every Republican Senator but three voted. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

TAX QUESTION VITAL.

But it is said by the gentlemen who have provoked this partisan discussion that the modification of the Vreeland-Aldrich Act by a Democratic Congress in reducing the tax levied on notes had no effect on the issuance of emergency currency in August, 1914. Admit it; and still the vital fact of extension remains, against which the Republican Party in Congress voted when it opposed passage of the Federal reserve act. Had there been no extension of the Vreeland-Aldrich Act there would have been no emergency act, in a modified or any other form. As a matter of fact, however, it is not only idle, but it is childish to say that the radical reduction of tax on note issues had no effect. When the Vreeland-Aldrich bill was originally proposed bankers throughout the country protested against the high tax as did distinguished Republican Members of Congress, including the Republican chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee and the very able and distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], who voted against the bill. The gentleman from Connecticut bitterly protested against the rate of taxation as absolutely prohibitive, and in the course of debate made the unqualified assertion that the law could not be made operative. He ridiculed the idea of moving the staple crops of the country at a tax rate on the currency required ranging from 5 to 10 per cent and said it would never be done. It never was done. The Republican chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, who also voted against the Vreeland-Aldrich bill, denounced the tax feature of the measure in the severest terms. He declared that any bank that would be willing to take out emergency currency at this tax rate would not need emergency currency, but would need a receiver, and that any honest comptroller of the currency would proceed forthwith to appoint a receiver.

A MATHEMATICAL DEMONSTRATION.

But to give a mathematical demonstration of whether or not modification of the tax rate had any effect on the issuance of emergency currency, I direct attention to the circumstance that at the low rate of 3 per cent provided in the Democratic amendment to the Vreeland-Aldrich Act there were outstanding on November 1, 1914, $365,000,000. On November 15, 1914, the day before the Federal Reserve System went into operation, $43,000,000 had been retired, and on February 15 following, $320,000,000 had been retired, leaving outstanding only about $25,000,000. Of the $2,977,066 collected by the Government from this source, only the trivial sum of $11,559 represented the tax rate of 6 per cent. In other words, the moment the tax rate went beyond 3 per cent, as well as the moment the Federal Reserve System went into operation, the great volume of the emergency currency was canceled.

VITAL AMENDMENTS TO VREELAND-ALDRICH ACT.

But, Mr. Speaker, the reduction of the tax rate on emergency currency made by amendment to the Vreeland-Aldrich bill was not the only modification made by the Democratic Congress, if it was even the most important. It is my own opinion that not a dollar of emergency currency would have been taken out under the Vreeland-Aldrich Act as originally passed; but if I am mistaken in that conjecture I call attention to the fact that there were other serious obstacles to taking out currency under the Vreeland-Aldrich Act. There was an unscientific limitation upon the total volume of notes; there was an unreasonable limitation upon the amount which individual banks might secure; there were unnecessary limitations upon the character of security, which were removed by amendments made, which amendments were justified by a further modification of the act which permitted the Secretary of the Treasury to increase at his discretion the amount of gold reserve behind emergency issue.

Gentlemen say that these modifications of the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, made by a Democratic Congress, did not effect its utility. I point them to the fact that 229 applying national banks which took out in the aggregate $126,997,480 of the emergency currency could not have taken out one dollar of those notes under the terms of the original Vreeland-Aldrich Act, requiring applying banks to have not less than 40 per cent of bond-secured circulation outstanding. I cite you to the fact that under the pro rata distribution provision of the original Vreeland-Aldrich Act New York banks, which took emergency currency in the amount of $156,539,960, could not, had the act not been amended by a Democratic Congress, have secured more than $93,500,000 of these notes. I append a letter from the Comptroller of the Currency, written by my request, giving the facts and figures in some detail:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 23, 1916.

HON. CARTER GLASS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have made a careful investigation to determine how many of the national banks in the United States applied for and were given "emergency" currency and which had on August 1, 1914, United States bond-secured circulation outstanding amounting to less than 40 per cent of their capital, and which would therefore have been unable to obtain any of this "emergency" currency had it not been for the amendment which was passed by a Democratic Congress during the early days of August, amending the Aldrich-Vreeland Act so as to permit the issuance of "emergency" currency to banks, whether they had outstanding circulation equal to 40 per cent of their capital or not.

The record shows that had it not been for this amendment the Treasury Department would have been unable to issue any "emergency" currency to 229 applying national banks, but that by virtue of this amendment the Treasury Department did approve applications for these particular banks for "emergency" currency up to the amount of $126,997,480.

A further analysis shows that of these banks which would have been ineligible for any "emergency" currency but for this amendment to the law, 11 were located in the New England States, the currency issued to them amounting to $15,706,500; 24 of these banks were in the Eastern States, and received $82,604,180 ($70,278,180 of which was issued to 11 banks in New York City and $5,578,000 to 6 banks in Pennsylvania); 151 of these banks in the Southern States, by the amendment to the law were enabled to get $5,406,300 "emergency" currency which they would not otherwise have gotten; 18 of the banks were in the Middle Western States, and received $21,204,500; 19 were in the Western States, and received $1,109,000; and 6 of the banks were in the Pacific States, receiving $967,000.

If the Federal reserve act had not been amended and the limitation of $500,000,000, which was to be apportioned according to capital and surplus of the banks, had not been removed, it appears that the national banks in New York would only have been able to secure about $93,500,000 of "emergency" currency (even if eligible), whereas the applications for currency actually approved for that State aggregated $156,539,960. There was also approved for issuance to the State of Massachusetts $28,674,500, which is several millions more than that State would have been able to receive under the unamended law.

Of the $2,977,066 collected as a tax on additional currency, $11,559 represented interest at 6 per cent.

Sincerely, yours,
JNO. SKELTON WILLIAMS.

DEMOCRATIC ACTION SAVED THE COUNTRY.

I have no patience with any man who, for partisan reasons, seeks to make it appear that these modifications of the original Vreeland-Aldrich Act were not necessary to make it an operative and available instrument in emergency. I know, and other gentlemen here know, that these amendments were essential; and it is due to fairness and to frankness to say that the distinguished Republican floor leader of this House and many of his influential colleagues on that side of the Chamber, but very especially the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], quickly recognized the necessity and met the occasion with patriotism of speech and action that was simply admirable. [Applause.]

It has been said that the closing of the New York Stock Exchange helped to prevent a panic when the war broke out, and that is measurably true, as did also the formation of the hundred million gold fund; but in a sense the closing of the stock exchange accentuated the difficulty by instantly transforming call loans into time loans, thus intensifying the immediate need of additional currency and credits by the banks. Why, Mr. Speaker, several days after the stock exchange had closed there came to this Capitol Building a delegation of great bankers, headed by Charles C. Glover, of the Riggs Bank, in Washington; Milton Ailes, the Washington representative of the National City Bank of New York; and, as I recall, J. Festus Wade, one of the most prominent bankers of the West, who called the Democratic floor leader [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee to the majority conference room, and there told us in plain terms that little, if any, emergency currency could or would be taken out under the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, even as modified by the Federal reserve act, unless other radical alterations were made, and that unless these modifications should be made the country would in 48 hours be in the grip of a panic. The changes which these bankers suggested as necessary to avert a disastrous panic had already been urged by the Secretary of the Treasury from New York, where he had gone to take charge of a grave situation; and next day Mr. McAdoo hastened back to Washington for a personal consultation with the conferees at the Capitol in an effort to expedite and make certain legislation so essential at the moment. In the face of these facts it is foolishly false to say that the modifications of the Vreeland-Aldrich Act by a Democratic administration were not necessary to make it available. Particularly is this true when it may be stated that the National City Bank of New York, which took out $29,900,000 of this emergency currency, and the Chase National Bank of the same city, which took out $11,000,000 of this emergency currency, making nearly $41,000,000 for these two banks alone, could not have taken out a dollar under the original restrictions of the Vreeland-Aldrich Act [applause on the Democratic side], for the National City Bank had out but 16 per cent of the required circulation and the Chase National less than 6 per cent.

A MERE FABLE.

These things I have thought proper and pertinent to say, not with any desire to engage in a partisan controversy, but merely in rebuttal of petty partisan misrepresentations. [Applause on the Democratic side.] One more word and I shall have finished. There occurred the other day in another place a sort of "Alphonse and Gaston" performance with respect to the Federal reserve legislation in which a gentleman who seems sincerely to imagine that he had a tremendous part in perfecting the act engaged in an exchange of felicitations with another gentleman who appears to think that the Senate of the United States radically altered the fundamental provisions of the House currency bill. I thought I had smashed this fable when, in presenting the conference report on the banking and currency bill on December 22, 1913, I gave in detail just exactly what important changes the Senate had made in the bill and just how few of these changes the House conferees had permitted to stand. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In order that the record may be clear on this point, I shall append to my remarks made to-day an address delivered by me before the American Bankers' Association October 14, 1914, which goes somewhat into the facts at issue, and, I think, demonstrates that the Federal reserve act, in all its essential provisions, was the conception and work of the House of Representatives and not of the Senate. [Applause.]

Earnings, current expenses, net earnings, capital, dividend and expense requirements; also rates of net earnings of the Federal reserve banks for the month of July, 1916.

Federal reserve banks.	Earnings.	Current expenses.	Excess of earnings over current expenses.	Capital July 31, 1916.	Dividend requirements, one-twelfth of 6 per cent on capital.	Dividend and expense requirements.	Rate of net earnings on capital.
							Per cent.
Boston	$39,475	$16,456	$23,019	$4,925,000	$21,625	$41,081	5.6
New York	86,903	36,312	50,591	11,371,000	57,855	94,167	5.2
Philadelphia	38,131	11,032	27,099	5,216,000	26,080	37,112	6.2
Cleveland	39,826	12,405	27,421	5,966,000	29,830	42,235	5.5
Richmond	28,750	11,478	17,272	3,359,000	16,795	28,273	6.2
Atlanta and New Orleans	17,913	9,390	8,523	2,495,000	12,475	21,865	4.1
Chicago	59,150	19,681	39,466	6,673,000	33,365	53,046	7.1
St. Louis	24,960	16,324	8,636	2,792,000	13,960	30,284	4.7
Minneapolis	20,350	9,688	10,662	2,583,000	12,900	22,588	5.0
Kansas City	32,418	14,624	17,794	2,999,000	14,995	29,619	7.1
Dallas	28,878	7,504	21,374	2,693,000	13,445	20,949	9.5
San Francisco	29,226	11,126	18,100	3,921,000	19,605	30,731	5.5
Total, July, 1916	445,980	176,023	269,957	55,186,000	275,930	451,953	5.9
Total, January-July, 1916	2,270,416	1,195,949	1,074,467	54,923,000	[1] 1,922,305	3,118,254	3.4

[1] Seven-twelfths of 6 per cent on $54,923,000, average of 32 weekly quotations of capital for the calendar year 1916.

Dividends declared by Federal reserve banks.

Federal reserve banks.	Date declared.	Period covered, November, 1914, to—	Rate.	Amount.
			Per cent.
Richmond	December, 1915.	Dec. 31, 1915	6	$151,939.69
Do	April, 1916	....do	1	30,387.65
Atlanta	June, 1916	....do	6	129,198.01
Chicago	....do	Mar. 31, 1915	6	78,155.83
Dallas	January, 1916	June 30, 1915	6	65,522.74
Kansas City	July, 1916	....do	6	86,709.95

ADDRESS BY HON. CARTER GLASS BEFORE THE AMERICAN BANKERS' ASSOCIATION AT RICHMOND, VA.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the American Bankers' Association, I am not quite sure that I would not have paid the American Bankers' Association a greater compliment, or if I would not have rendered them a greater service, by declining rather than by accepting the invitation to appear here this afternoon to address you upon the subject of the Federal reserve act. It is no credit to a public speaker, and less of a compliment to his audience, for him to come on a serious and important occasion without due and careful preparation. But, gentlemen, the fact is that for the past 10 months I have been exercising my wits in the direction of keeping things from being done to such an extent that I am rather rusty and confused as to what already has been accomplished. [Laughter.] And it is scarcely necessary that I should say to you, who are familiar with legislative processes, that at times it is of vastly more importance to keep things from being done than it is to do things. [Applause.]

Then, again, I am somewhat embarrassed at the idea of coming as a layman in the presence of experts to expound the provisions of an act that relates almost exclusively to your own business. And I scarcely think I shall venture in any great detail upon that task this afternoon.

"SIDE LIGHTS."

It has occurred to me that I might occupy the time assigned to me with a more or less interesting narrative of the "side lights" upon the Federal reserve act; and what I shall say will be somewhat a repetition of what I have already pretty generally said throughout the country, and I am afraid will not be very enlightening to a large part of this audience.

You will very readily understand that for the last 50 years, since the enactment of the national-bank act, you have been compelled to conduct the banking business of the country in a strait-jacket. There has been no elasticity, there has been little scope for initiative; in short, we have had in this country a banking system that by the best bankers has been pronounced "barbarous" in its operation. It has made us for years the scoff of European critics, both the practical banker and the text-book writer, because of its inefficiency; and, as I have so frequently said, here I repeat this afternoon, that the progress and prosperity of the American people and the achievements of the American banker have been made in spite of our banking system rather than because of it. [Applause.]

PAST FAILURES.

There have been many efforts at modification, amendment, and reformation, all of which until recently failed. As pointed out by Gov. Hamlin, we had the effort made at Indianapolis 18 years ago by the Indianapolis Monetary Commission. That body drafted a bill, which was introduced in the House of Representatives, and found its inevitable place in the musty archives of the Banking and Currency Committee room. Then we had the Walker bill, introduced by a distinguished chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee from Massachusetts; then we had the Fowler bill for asset currency, upon which some degree of progress was made; but the action of Congress was interrupted by the introduction of what is known as the Vreeland-Aldrich bill, or, rather, the Vreeland bill and the Aldrich bill—the one denounced by Senator Aldrich as utterly useless and the other denounced by Congressman Vreeland as altogether vicious. [Laughter.] The two were united and hyphenated into the Vreeland-Aldrich bill, which was pronounced by observant Members of Congress having some knowledge of the subject to be totally inefficient in its original form. It was foreseen that with its tax of 10 per cent upon the issues under it no bank on earth that was not already prepared to fly the signal of distress at the masthead could ever avail of its provisions. But when the Vreeland-Aldrich bill was passed one good thing was done in connection with that legislation; the Congress appointed a Monetary Commission, composed of distinguished gentlemen, and this commission went abroad and throughout this country taking testimony. At a cost of nearly $200,000, approximately—I think $196,000—it assembled one of the greatest libraries upon finance that was ever gathered on earth.

ORIGIN OF THE NEW LAW.

Following the report of this Monetary Commission came a more vehement agitation for currency legislation. To some of us having the question under consideration the idea occurred that if the great clearing-house organizations of the large money centers, and, indeed, of all communities of the country, could manage by prompt and intelligent cooperation to rescue the country from the throes of panic, why might not institutions of a kindred nature, given clearing facilities, together with larger banking functions, prevent panics? Upon that idea the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives set to work; and, without going into great detail, the Federal reserve act now upon the statute books is the result of that effort.

FUNDAMENTAL DEFECTS.

We found, upon investigation, that there were two fundamental defects in the existing banking and currency system. One was the inelasticity of the currency, with which all bankers are familiar, and the other was the fictitious nature of our national reserve system. We conceived the notion that if we could devise a system which would correct those two fundamental errors we would go a far way toward a solution of the problem. This we think, and confidently hope, the new Federal reserve act will accomplish.

Under the old system the currency was absolutely rigid and inelastic. We had operated for years on the assumption, the currency being based upon the Nation's indebtedness, that we never needed any more currency than could be measured by the national indebtedness, and, on the other hand, never needed any less; when, as a matter of fact, we frequently needed more, and, perhaps, just as often needed less. The volume was rigid, practically measured by the aggregate of the 2 per cent United States bonded indebtedness. In short, if the aggregate capital of the national banks of Richmond under the old system was $30,000,000, that measured completely the ability of the national banks of the city of Richmond to respond, in the matter of currency, to the commercial and industrial needs of the community, albeit such needs might be twenty times $30,000,000. That being true, whenever stress and stringency came upon the country there could be no adequate response to the commercial needs of any active business community. Instead of cheerfully and confidently pursuing business prosperity, times came when business men discovered that prosperity actually caused wreck and ruin throughout the Republic. When the country banks, responsive to local demands, would begin drawing back their reserve funds from the reserve and central city banks, and those banks in turn were compelled to call in their loans, rates of interest mounted higher and higher, and pretty soon we would find ourselves in a financial cataclysm—banks closed, business and industry paralyzed, want and misery and deprivation spread broadcast over the land.

In the Federal reserve act we have undertaken to correct that inelasticity, to give you a currency not based upon the Nation's indebtedness, but a currency based upon the commercial and industrial requirements of the country, responsive automatically to those requirements, issuing forth when business is active and withdrawn when business is slack. Based upon short-time commercial paper—the plighted faith and ability of American merchants, manufacturers, and business men to respond to their individual and corporate obligations. And there is nothing more secure on earth, not even your Government bond, than that sort of security. [Applause.]

RADICAL CHANGE IN RESERVES.

In addition to an inelastic currency, you had a fictitious reserve system. I like to talk to people who do not understand these things, because [laughter] then I will be telling them something they don't know. Presumptively, we had a reserve of 15 per cent in the country banks and 25 per cent reserve in central reserve city banks, but in reality we did not have any such reserve. The law permitted the country banker to deposit a greater part of his reserve with the reserve city bank, and in turn permitted the reserve city banker to pyramid the reserve further by deposit in the central reserve city bank. That system resulted in withdrawing the reserve funds from all the country and centralizing them in the great money centers at a nominal rate of interest. Banks of the money centers, in order to recompense themselves, used those reserves at call-money rates in the maelstrom of Wall Street speculation; and thus the reserve funds of the country were employed largely for stock-gambling purposes rather than to promote the general business interests and prosperity of the country. I am not saying this in a critical sense; I am stating it as a matter of fact. In the great banks of New York City alone last March there were deposited $893,000,000 of the reserves of banks outside of that great money center, whereas New York was loaning the banks of the country only $187,000,000 on that date. There is an impression abroad that the balance of the country is dependent upon New York, but the facts I have cited show that New York is dependent upon the balance of this country. [Applause.]

It was that system—the concentration of the reserves of the country almost at a single center, to be used in speculative enterprises in the slack season, and unresponsive to demand at an urgent time—that created almost every panic that we ever had in this country.

CAUTION OBSERVED.

Well, we think we have devised a system in this Federal reserve act whereby over a period of years, without any shock to normal business or banking operations, we shall draw back these reserve funds from the great money centers and gradually impound them in those sections of the country where they originated and where they belong, and where they may at all times be held to respond to the business necessities and industrial requirements of the various sections of this country. We have spread the operation over a period of three years in order that there may be no violent disturbance of the usual processes of business.

In short, we have established a system of regional reserve banks, 12 of which are in course of organization now. The banks, as you know, are to be presided over by a board of nine directors, three of them selected by member banks especially to represent the banking interests, three selected by the member banks to represent the varied business interests of the community, and three appointed by the Federal Reserve Board at Washington to represent the people of the United States.

These regional reserve banks are to be owned and operated by the member banks of the system. The national banks are all required to subscribe a certain percentage of their capital and surplus to the capital stock of the regional reserve banks, and State banks and trust companies are permitted to subscribe the same amount to the capital stock.

The stock-holding banks of the system may receive a 6 per cent cumulative dividend from the earnings of the reserve bank. All earnings in excess of that amount shall first be applied to a 40 per cent surplus fund, in order to strengthen the regional reserve banks, and when the 6 per cent cumulative dividend—free of all taxation, National, State, or municipal—shall have been paid and the surplus fund accumulated all earnings in further excess shall go to the Government of the United States.

We provide a Federal Reserve Board to supervise the entire Federal Reserve System, composed of seven members, two of them—to wit, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency—ex officio members and five to be appointed by the President of the United States for a term of 10 years.

The regional reserve bank, you will observe upon reading the law, has confided to it all of the strict banking functions of the system. The Federal Reserve Board has confided to it complete power of examination, supervision, and regulation, and, only upon the rarest occasions, under severe restrictions, the single banking function of ordering rediscounts. So that the Federal Reserve Board does not interfere in the slightest degree with that spirit of independent banking which is characteristic of this country. It does not interfere with the strict banking operations of the individual bank. It has broad powers of examination, supervision, and regulation; it is strictly an altruistic commission for the benefit of every business interest and of all the people of this country.

As I have indicated, and as you who are familiar with the subject know State banks may become members and national banks must become members. We have appointed a Federal advisory board, to be selected by the regional reserve banks themselves, with authority to meet in Washington and to advise with the Federal Reserve Board upon all matters considered by that board.

POWERS OF REGIONAL BANKS.

We have invested these Federal reserve banks with an almost unlimited power of rediscount. The individual bank, after discounting its commercial paper, may, upon indorsing that paper, pass it up to the regional reserve bank and get its paper rediscounted at the prevailing rate of rediscount initiated by the regional reserve bank, subject to the approval of the Federal Reserve Board. You will note that the individual bank has an almost unrestricted opportunity, regardless of its capital, to obtain these rediscounts. In other words, a bank capitalized at $100,000 may be accommodated to as great an extent as a bank capitalized at $500,000 or $1,000,000 if it has eligible short-time commercial paper at hand.

We also give the regional reserve bank a limited open-market operation—a power somewhat analogous to the operation of the Bank of England in going into the open market to loosen up money conditions in order to enforce its rate of discount.

The act permits the Secretary of the Treasury to make these regional reserve banks the fiscal agents of the United States Government and to deposit with them all the Government's current revenues.

We provide for the refunding over a period of 30 years of a greater portion of the Government 2 per cent bonds having the circulation privilege into Government 3 per cent bonds without the circulating privilege, and we provide for the issuance during that period of a certain amount of 3 per cent Government gold notes in place of existing Government bonds. This is gradually to retire the bond-secured currency and put us upon a commercial currency basis.

We think we have greatly improved the bank examination system of the country. We have a provision that gives national banks the right to loan a certain percentage of their funds, particularly their time deposits, upon real estate—something that the national banks under the national-bank act and the interpretations at Washington have never been able to do.

Finally, in order to promote our foreign trade and to subdue the disadvantages under which America for years and years has been operating, we have authorized banking institutions with as much as a million dollars' capital to establish branches in foreign countries.

OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

If I may notice for a little while some of the objections to this bill, and at the same time indicate how they were met, I think this audience will have a better understanding of the Federal reserve act. In the first place, it was objected by the banks that the regional reserve banks should be exclusivly in control of the banking community. It was argued that all the directors of the regional reserve banks should be selected by the banks themselves without restriction, the statement being that the regional reserve banks were owned by the stock-holding banks, and that, therefore, only the banks should select the directors to supervise the operation of the regional reserve banks.

It was pointed out, in response, that this was a great national system, proposed to be established not alone for the advantage of the banks, but equally for the advantage of the business community and for all the people of the United States. It was pointed out further that the United States would perhaps be the largest single depositor in the regional reserve banks. Therefore it was contended that the people of the United States, through their Government, being the largest depositors with the regional reserve bank, should be represented upon the boards of directors by the appointment of three class C directors, and it was so held by the Congress.

It was contended that the banks should select a certain proportion of the Federal Reserve Board, and by many it is so contended now. Gentlemen, that seemed a plausible and a fair proposition. The fact is, it fooled me good for a while. I did not hesitate from the beginning to the end of the contest to stand for the banks when I thought the banks ought to be upheld [applause] any more than to stand for the American people when I thought their rights were involved. [Applause.]

I thought the banks should have minority representation of their own selection upon the Federal Reserve Board, and so contended. When the President of the United States said to me that he did not approve the proposition I did not sleep one wink that night; and next morning, before leaving my room at the Raleigh Hotel, I sat down, "unawed by titled consequence," and wrote a letter to the President, saying to him that I thought his decision was fundamentally wrong and politically inexpedient. I hope he has torn the letter up. [Laughter.] Next day there came to Washington a committee of great bankers—George M. Reynolds, of Chicago; John Perrin, of the Pacific coast; Sol Wexler, from Louisiana; Festus J. Wade, of St. Louis, and others—to convince the President of the United States that he was wrong and that the bankers were right in their contention. I headed the procession to the White House.

The President gave us audience, cheerfully and cordially. I presented these gentlemen. The President knew my views, so it was not necessary for me to reiterate them, but these great bankers presented their views with all the persuasiveness of which they were capable—and you know what that means. [Laughter.] Already convinced in my own judgment, I was delighted at the tactful and logical way in which they presented the argument; but presently the President of the United States turned and said, "Gentlemen, I challenge you to point to one Government board in this or any other civilized country upon which private interests have representation." There was just such an intense silence in the President's room as there is in this hall right now. [Laughter.]

Not one of those gentlemen answered, and I could not answer. I was converted. [Applause.] I am convinced that the President was right.

On the floor of Congress this same contention was made, and I responded that it would be as reasonable to declare that railroad presidents and general managers of the railroads of this country should have representation upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is to regulate and manage them, as to say that the bankers, as such, should select representation upon a Government board which is to regulate the banking business. Ah, but the response was, "Do you contend that the Interstate Commerce Commission has the same power over the railroads that the Federal Reserve Board has over the banks?" Yes; infinitely more power over the railroads than the Federal Reserve Board has over the banks. They make a rate upon petition; aye, they can initiate rates for the railroads and enforce them, however much the railroads may object.

Ah, but said one of the critics, "Can they take the property of one railroad and use it for another?" Yes; and they do it every day. They take the rolling stock that one railroad has bought with the money of its stockholders and apply it to the use of some other railroad. They make a joint traffic rate that may not be satisfactorily compensatory to the railroads affected, but, nevertheless, they have to submit. The powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission over the railroads are incomparably broader and more stringent than the powers of the Federal Reserve Board over the banks.

POWERS OF FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

What are some of these powers of the Federal Reserve Board? I say to you here—and I challenge interruption or contradiction—that there is scarcely one power given by law to the Federal Reserve Board that has not been exercised, more or less, by a single public official of this Government for 30 years. There is the power of the board to suspend all reserve requirements for a period of 30 days and renew the suspension for a period of 15 days. You bankers know that power has been exercised by the Comptroller of the Currency under the national-bank act for 50 years. There is not a banker in this audience who may not permit his reserve to go down to-morrow—I do not know that there is one who has not done it [laughter]—and the only power on earth that can make him restore his reserve to the legal requirement is the Comptroller of the Currency, and he can only do it upon 30 days' notice. So that there were objections to a power to be exercised under this new law by the Comptroller of the Currency with six associates that had been exercised for 50 years by the Comptroller of the Currency alone under the old law.

Then there was vehement objection to that part of the act which authorizes the Federal Reserve Board to permit or compel one regional reserve bank to rediscount the discounted paper of another regional reserve bank. They said that was "confiscatory." No; it was not confiscatory. There was not an element of confiscation about it. The board was not permitted to require one bank to take the property of another without compensation; not at all. It was authorized to compel one bank with a redundancy of funds to come to the assistance of a bank without funds, the transaction being based upon prime commercial security and at a rate of interest above the normal prevailing rate. That is not confiscation. It is a power analogous to a power that has been possessed and exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury for 50 years under the national-bank act. The Secretary of the Treasury to-morrow can deplete every Government depository in New York and transfer the funds to New Orleans, or can take the Government funds out of the national banks of New Orleans and deposit them with the national banks of San Francisco or of Boston. It is a tremendous power, a power that your president here to-day said is repugnant to republican institutions. If so, I wonder that was not found out long ago. [Applause.] It has been possessed and exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury alone for 50 years.

In 1907, when the Secretary of the Treasury, at his own discretion, took $43,000,000 that had been collected from the American people by taxation and deposited it with the banks of New York to save the situation there, you did not hear a chirp or a word about "power repugnant to republican institutions." [Applause.] The Secretary of the Treasury did right then. But I agree with the president of the American Bankers' Association that some time we may have a Secretary of the Treasury who would do wrong, and we ought to jealously guard the functions of that great position. Hence, as I drafted the bill, the Secretary of the Treasury was specifically required to make these regional reserve banks the fiscal agents of the Government and to deposit the people's money with them. I believe now it ought to be the law.

THE CRY OF "FIATISM."

There was objection to the note issue provided by this bill. One of the distinguished members of the American Bankers' Association said this Federal reserve note was "fiat money." Gentlemen, there is not an element of "fiatism" in these notes—not a suggestion of it. What is fiat money? Fiat money is money that relies upon the Government alone for its value. Is that a correct definition of a Federal reserve note under this act? The gentleman who so characterized it can not appeal to a lexicographer in the civilized world to justify his definition of these notes.

They have a gold reserve of 40 per cent behind them to begin with. In addition to that, they have a secondary reserve of 100 per cent short-time commercial paper. In addition to that, they are made a first and paramount lien upon the assets of all the regional reserve banks, including the double liability of the member banks. In addition to that, they have the unqualified indorsement of a Nation of 95,000,000 free people. Fiat? When that gentleman was denouncing these notes as "fiat" the greatest international banker in America, who has since been made a member of the Federal Reserve Board, was in Washington protesting to me that they had too much security behind them. Mr. Warburg, then and since, has insisted that the secondary commercial reserve should be reduced to 66⅔ per cent.

NO INFLATION.

They said this system provided for "amazing inflation." Indeed, one critic in Chicago was proclaiming that the Federal reserve act afforded a dangerous amount of inflation on the very same calendar day that another distinguished banker before the Senate committee in Washington was proclaiming that it provided an amazing amount of commercial contraction. It could not provide both at the same time, gentlemen, and, as a matter of fact, it does not provide either at any time. It provides for a reasonable amount of expansion, and the law would not be worth the paper it was written on if it did not provide that. That is what it was intended to provide—to be automatically responsive to the business activities of the country, but not to create nor tolerate inflation.

But if you gentlemen will pardon a little frankness, this criticism was leveled at the Federal reserve act by gentlemen who swallowed, without a grimace, the Aldrich bill, which provided for $6,000,000,000 of expansion. This was demonstrated by Mr. Hulbert in a public address, and yet you gentlemen gulped it down. [Laughter.] Before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House it was testified that the American Bankers' Association unanimously indorsed the Aldrich bill before the paper upon which it was printed had dried, so recently had it come from the press; and it was further asserted that not 5 per cent of the delegates present had read the bill when they indorsed it. There was a bill which provided that the notes of the central bank should be used by individual banks as reserve, thus involving inflation to the amount of $6,000,000,000; and yet gentlemen who were willing to indorse that sort of a measure criticize us in Congress for this bill. We have not undertaken in this law to do away with the sanity of the individual banker. We have made every possible safeguard against inflation. A gold reserve of 40 per cent, a secondary reserve of 100 per cent, the serious and solemn obligation of the individual banker to his stockholders in discounting paper, the serious and solemn obligation of the directors and managers of the regional reserve bank in scrutinizing the discounted paper before it is rediscounted, and then in the last analysis, the banking experience and observation and solemn duty of the Federal Reserve Board to pass upon it in the third degree—these are some of the safeguards provided against inflation, together with a 10 per cent penalty upon any regional reserve bank that shall pay out the notes of any other regional reserve bank.

Every device suggested to us by banker or layman that appealed to the judgment of Congress is here embodied in this bill. The House was criticized not only by certain bankers but by certain learned United States Senators, who insisted that the bill provided inflation. And pray, what did the Senate do to correct the inflation? It accentuated every possibility of it. It provided that Federal reserve notes should be used as reserve in individual banks. It proposed a system of unguarded domestic acceptances which Sir Edmund Walker testified before our committee would wreck any country on the civilized globe. It proposed that the denominations of the notes should be as low as ones and twos. It amazingly released bank reserves below the point of safety. Thus that august, that grave body of elder statesmen [laughter] undertook to guard against inflation.

SENATE DID NOT IMPROVE BILL.

Mr. Chairman, there is a report current which ought to be checked before it gets to a popular superstition. It is said that the United States Senate greatly improved the House currency bill. [Laughter.] A casual inspection of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will show that Senators have really convinced themselves that this is true. With a sort of misdirected pride, they refer to "the 400 changes made by the Senate in the House bill," but conveniently omit to refer to the fact that nearly every one of these changes which did not relate merely to phraseology was rejected by the House conferees and the bill restored in every essential feature to its original form.

The plain truth is that certain distinguished statesmen, together with certain metropolitan newspapers, precipitated a premature attack upon the House currency bill. Some of these statesmen vowed they would never support it; but later, when they found it desirable to shift position on the question, they invented this myth about the Senate having so greatly improved the measure as to enable them to give it their distinguished countenance. They charge that the House committee gave no hearings on the bill, and that only the Senate committee "opened its doors to let the people have a chance." As a matter of fact, the House bill was based on exhaustive hearings before a subcommittee, and the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, when it began to frame the bill, had in its files the testimony of nearly every business group in America, submitted by its most intelligent representatives. It had the testimony of American bankers, big and little, in the persons of men like Hepburn, Forgan, Warburg, Reynolds, Wexler, Hulbert, Wade, Frame, and others; currency experts like Morawetz, Hadley, Sprague, Laughlin, Meeker, Fisher, and Fowler; creditmen like Endy, Tregoe, Joyce, and Orr; farmers like Barrett, Creasey, Brooks, and others; merchants, manufacturers, laboring men, actuaries, and other classes. In short, the House committee had at its immediate service testimony so varied and voluminous that to digest it all, or even to read half of it, would be an unendurable physical and metaphysical task. It was upon this testimony that the House bill was based.

Contrast this with the so-called hearings of the Senate committee, which merely amounted to hammering over old brass. The list of Senate witnesses contains 68 bankers, 8 currency experts, 3 lawyers, 1 coal operator, 1 New York real estate dealer, 2 merchants, several trade representatives, and 3 of the most pestilential currency "freaks" in the United States. Not a single representative of the great agricultural interests of the country was heard, not a representative of the labor interests was heard; but nearly two months' time was wasted in hearing 68 bankers repeat exactly the same objection to the House currency bill that was made to its proponents before the bill was passed by the House.

WORK OF THE CONFEREES.

In what single respect did the Senate improve the House bill? Can any gentleman here point out? As a matter of record, permit me to summarize for the American Bankers' Association the work of the congressional conference committee, which will convincingly confirm the accuracy of my contention that not a fundamental alteration by the Senate in the House currency bill was permitted to stand:

1. The Senate eliminated the Secretary of Agriculture and Comptroller of the Currency from the organization committee, substituting two members of the Federal Reserve Board, to be designated by the President. Besides being totally impracticable and inconsistent with other provisions of the bill, this change would have indefinitely delayed the inauguration of the system, and the House restored the Secretary of Agriculture and Comptroller of the Currency to the organization committee.

2. The Senate eliminated the Comptroller of the Currency from membership on the Federal Reserve Board. This public official, charged by law with the supervision and control of the national banking system, was restored to the board by the House conferees.

3. The Senate authorized a system of domestic acceptances, without documents attached, permitting 25,000 banks, many without inspection requirements, to incur contingent liabilities without a dollar of reserve behind them—a system which Sir Edmund Walker, of Canada, as well as other eminent specialists, said would wreck the financial fabric of any civilized country on the globe. The House conferees struck out this Senate provision.

4. The Senate inserted a so-called "insurance of deposits" provision, appropriating a part of the Government's earnings of the system for the purpose of guaranteeing depositors in national banks. The House conferees threw out this provision.

5. The House conferees inserted a provision requiring that the net earnings going to the Government should be applied to the gold-redemption fund or to the reduction of the bonded indebtedness of the United States, and not to "guaranteeing deposits," as provided by the Senate amendment.

6. The Senate inserted a provision authorizing the use of Federal reserve notes as reserves in individual banks, thus providing an enormous amount of inflation estimated by competent statists and practical bankers at $6,000,000,000. The House conferees rejected this alteration in the bill.

7. The House conferees inserted a provision requiring that branch banks shall be operated by a board of seven directors, having the same qualifications as directors of the Federal reserve banks, four to be appointed by the parent bank and three by the Federal Reserve Board.

8. The House conferees altered the Senate reserve features so as to extend the transition period from two to three years, as was provided in the House bill, and also declined to concur in the radical reduction of reserves which the Senate provided.

9. The House conferees so altered the Senate reserve provisions as to require that at least one-third of the reserves of country banks should be held in the vaults of the local banks, as provided originally by the House, whereas the Senate provision permitted all the reserves to be held in the vaults of the reserve banks.

10. The House conferees practically restored the collection of checks at actual cost by a nation-wide clearance system, thus altering the Senate change in the House bill and insuring a tremendous saving to the commercial interests of the United States.

11. A new section on bank examinations was written, omitting some of the objectionable provisions put in by the Senate which would have authorized investigations of an inquisitorial nature by irresponsible committees of either branch of Congress.

12. The House conferees so far restored the House bond provision as to authorize the retirement over a period of 20 years of about $450,000,000 of the bond-secured national-bank notes, whereas the Senate amendment did not provide for the retirement of more than $125,000,000.

13. The House conferees threw out the Senate provision compelling Federal reserve banks to issue circulating notes against Government bonds purchased from member banks as designed to forever perpetuate the existing bond-secured currency, the very thing no sane scheme of currency reform could sanction. The whole Senate bond-refunding provision was rewritten in conference.

14. The House conferees threw out the Senate provision prohibiting directors of the Federal reserve banks, class B, from being stockholders of any bank, and practically restored the House provision requiring directors of this class to be selected from a list supplied by the member banks. Had the Senate prevailed, the Federal reserve banks would have been managed by persons having no proprietary interest in their success.

15. The House conferees rejected the Senate provision making Congressmen ineligible to be officers or directors of national banks, which would have disqualified nearly 50 per cent of Congress from a perfectly proper relationship.

16. The House conferees practically restored the House restrictions in the matter of requiring one Federal reserve bank to rediscount for another Federal reserve bank.

17. The House conferees limited the denomination of the notes to be issued to $5 minimum, striking out the $1 and $2 provision of the Senate, which, it contended, would cause inflation.

18. The Senate provision fixing the number of banks at not less than 8 or more than 12 stands, as against the House provision making the number not less than 12.

19. There was a compromise on the minimum capital, the Senate bill requiring $3,000,000 and the House bill $5,000,000. The capital was finally fixed to $4,000,000.

20. The Senate provision striking the Secretary of Agriculture off the Federal Reserve Board stands, being regarded by the House conferees as inconsequential.

21. The Senate method of balloting for directors was retained, being a minor change.

22. The Senate increase of gold reserve behind the note issues to 40 per cent, with a graduated tax for falling below that amount, stands, as this change was left to the Senate, with the expectation that it would be made.

23. The method of raising the capital of the Federal reserve banks on capital and surplus of member banks instead of on capital alone was retained in the Senate amendment, as it merely reached the same result in a different way, though not so readily as by that provided by the House.

24. The Senate increase of salaries of members of the Federal Reserve Board from $10,000 to $12,000 is retained, as is the alteration in the term of service from 6 to 10 years.

25. There were several hundred alterations of the text of the Senate amendment.

THE HOUSE PREVAILED.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, it will be noted that, while the Senate made numerous alterations in the currency bill as it passed the House, not one of these alterations, if it related to a fundamental feature of the House bill, was permitted by the House conferees to stand. There were several hundred alterations of the phraseology of the House bill by the Senate, as there were several hundred alterations of Senate phraseology by the conferees. In this respect the bill in some places was bettered and in other places injured.

The Senate did one good thing. [Laughter.] It increased the gold reserve behind the notes from 35 to 40 per cent and provided a graduated tax for delinquencies. We wanted to do that in the House committee and in the House, but it was suggested that the legislation would be expedited if we would "let the Senate think it had some hand in this thing." [Laughter.] However, as if a little ashamed of having done one sound thing, the Senate immediately proceeded to reduce the reserve requirements of the banks to such an extent as to render the dangers of inflation serious and imminent; emasculated the House provision for exchanges at par; insured national-bank deposits with funds that the House bill applied to the Government gold reserve, and did quite a number of kindred things, for which the House conferees would not stand. Why, the Senate actually provided that no stockholder in a bank should be eligible as a director of class B of a regional reserve bank; thus they would have gone to the almshouse to get directors for the regional reserve bank. [Laughter and applause.] The House, of course, struck that out.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITS.

In the matter of Government deposits the House bill required that the regional reserve banks should be constituted fiscal agents of the United States Government, and required the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit all of the current funds of the Government in these banks, omitting, of course, the Treasury trust funds. The Senate so altered this provision of the House bill as to make it optional with the Secretary of the Treasury to so deposit the Government funds, and to place it within the discretion of that official to constitute the regional reserve banks fiscal agents of the United States Government. I have been unable to get any clear perception of the reason for this alteration of the House bill further than that I little suspect that it was done for tactical purposes, perhaps to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to combat the schemes of intractable bankers, should there be such. The object of the framers of the House bill in making the provision mandatory instead of discretionary was to furnish the regional reserve banks with the idle funds of the Government as a basis for active business transactions, and at the same time to correct the unscientific and senseless process of withdrawing these funds from business channels and impounding them in the Treasury and subtreasuries. It is scarcely thinkable that we shall ever have a Secretary of the Treasury who would not so exercise the discretion conferred upon him by the act as to carry out the real purpose which the House had in view when it made this provision mandatory; hence the House conferees reluctantly yielded the point; and this one alteration comes nearer being a change in the fundamentals of the House bill than any made by the Senate and permitted by the House conferees to stand.

THE EXCHANGE QUESTION.

One of the most important provisions of the currency bill is that which puts an end to the flagrant abuse involved in excessive charges by banks throughout the country for collections and exchanges. The House bill provided that exchanges should be made at par and that charges for collections should not exceed the actual cost to the banks. This item of the bill was bitterly controverted in the Democratic caucus and also in the House. Naturally, thousands of banks deriving large profits from the practice of charging constructive interest upon checks in transit and arbitrary charges for collections and for exchanges exhibited great distaste to this provision of the bill. They vigorously protested to Members against the inclusion of this prohibition, and thus the effort to remove this tax burden upon the business of the country was contested with the utmost pertinacity. However, those of us in the House who sought to tear down these tollgates upon the highways of commerce prevailed. [Applause.] The fight was renewed in the Senate, and that body materially modified the House provision. The House conferees declined to yield on this point. They insisted upon such a modification of the Senate amendment as will exact exchanges at par and restrict charges for collections to the actual cost of such transactions to the banks. In brief, under the act banks can not make exchange and collection charges a source of profit; they can not any longer charge constructive interest; they can not exact a tax for a theoretical transfer of funds from point to point when no transfer is actually made, but only an entry on the books. They can no longer harass the commerce of the country nor penalize the business men of the Nation by an unjust tax. While the House conferees did not succeed in entirely restoring the provision as it left the House, they vastly improved the amendment made by the Senate. The provision as it stands will result in an immense saving to the tradespeople of the United States. It will eliminate the amazing wastefulness incident to many independent collection organizations by substituting one compact collection system. It will abolish the exchange charges altogether and appreciably reduce charges against collections. I speak thus confidently only in anticipation of wise action by the Federal Reserve Board. If the board will have the wisdom and courage to establish a comprehensive and economical plan of bank clearings, it will be difficult to compute the advantages that this section of the currency bill will secure. While some banks will have their profits diminished, it will be profits to which they are not fairly entitled, and for the loss of which they will be more than compensated by the better and speedier facilities afforded for the transaction of business. [Applause.]

THE RECORD CLEAR.

Mr. Chairman, it is thus clearly demonstrable from the record that there is not one particle of foundation for this ignorant talk about "the radical improvement made by the Senate in the House currency bill." Such talk is referable either to the ignorance of those who indulge in it or to the crafty desire of certain politicians to save their reputation for consistency. Even as notable a publicist as Mr. George Harvey, of the North American Review, marred the pages of that magazine recently with the absurd statement that the Federal reserve act as passed by Congress could not be recognized as the original House bill, thus giving currency and respectability to this wretched myth. There is not, as I have said, an essential provision of the currency bill as it passed the House that is not a part of the Federal reserve act under which the banking system of the country is now being operated.

BANKERS NOT IGNORED.

There is one other criticism to which I will briefly refer in order to correct a popular misconception among bankers. It has been said that the bankers were "largely ignored in the consideration of the currency bill"; whereas the truth is I felt a little afraid to let it be known how frequently and how seriously the bankers of the country were consulted. The details of the bill were worked out with painstaking care upon expert advice and submitted from time to time to practical bankers of the very highest order of ability for criticism and suggestion. The bill had more thorough preparation and more prolonged consideration than all the currency measures proposed since the adoption of the national-bank act 50 years ago. Its minor as well as its major features were submitted to the inspection of expert bankers for their advice before the bill was introduced in the House. This was done to such an extent that one of the almost insuperable objections to the measure in the course of debate was the suggestion that it was "a banker's bill" rather than a general measure of relief.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S LEADERSHIP.

I have gotten a great deal of reputation of one sort or another out of my connection with this currency legislation, and have greatly appreciated some of the kind things said about me, as well as some of the adverse criticisms I have been compelled to endure. Sometimes I have been puzzled to know whether I should value more the abuse received than the praise I got. Frequently I have heard myself actually described as a "patriot and a statesman"; and this afternoon Gov. Hamlin, of the Federal Reserve Board, was gracious enough to put a capstone to these eulogistic references by describing me as "a genius." I have gone around the country appropriating all of this praise with good grace. [Laughter.] It has never given me any embarrassment except at a public reception tendered me at my own home, when, looking over that audience of boys with whom I had fought chickens and robbed apple orchards and things like that, it made me feel a little foolish to hear myself described as a distinguished citizen. [Laughter.] However, when I get where I am not known I rather enjoy it.

But, Mr. Chairman, in all seriousness, while I take no little satisfaction in having had part in the preparation and passage of the Federal reserve act, it is fair to state that the greatest amount of credit for this notable legislative achievement is due to the President of the United States. [Applause.] This legislative miracle was wrought by the supreme patience and unsurpassed patriotism of Woodrow Wilson, who during the trying ordeal exhibited courage that was never excelled, and a passionate desire to serve the people of his country that was a positive inspiration. [Applause.]

And let me say to the members of the American Bankers' Association here assembled that if you gentlemen could have any adequate conception of the number and character of dangerous things which have been kept out of this act, you would have a readier and a greater appreciation of what is in it. [Applause.] Why, only within the last few days at Washington I have been compelled to resist the serious proposal that the Government of the United States should go into a scheme of valorization for the advantage of a single agricultural commodity—that the Government of the United States, to-day framing a measure to tax the American people $100,000,000 to supply a deficiency in the public revenues occasioned by the European war, shall further tax the American people to the extent of $500,000,000 to guarantee the price of a particular product. [Applause.] And the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, as a southern man, is upbraided and reproached by his colleagues from that section because he is not willing to wreck the fabric of American credit for an imaginary service to a single interest. [Applause.]

Every patriotic American citizen has the intensest sympathy for the cotton growers of the South. There is not anything in saneness or sense that might be done for their relief which any man would hesitate to do, whether he be from Massachusetts or Mississippi, from Virginia or California; but it is preposterous to talk about doing things so foolish and so unprecedented as are involved in this scheme of valorization. Not only is it foolish to suggest them, it is cruel and unpatriotic, as their proponents know they will not be done. [Applause.]

POLITICAL DELINQUENTS.

Finally, gentlemen, permit me to remark that there are some people in this world who are not of it. There are persons who are disposed to deride politics and who make a point of affecting contempt for public men. These, without discrimination, they characterize as "politicians," and ascribe to them an utter lack of patriotism and an incapacity to deal with business questions. Against critics of this type I desire to bring an indictment of responsibility for most of the maladministration of government and for most of the bad legislation that gets upon the statute books of the country. [Applause.] These critics are not confined to bankers, but you undoubtedly have a large percentage of the type among you. [Applause and laughter.] Men of this description toast their heels before their andirons in the evening with a complacent indifference to public affairs; and then on the morrow they complain that the "ward politicians," to whom they have given free rein, run politics as only ward politicians can. [Applause.] I feel like saying to the average American citizen of that type, whose wail is heard abroad in the land when anything is done that does not suit him in Congress: "You are responsible!" If these cynical critics would but attend to public affairs, if they would but take pride and patriotic interest in the politics of their country, if they would half way do their duty, there would be fewer demagogues in public life and less bad legislation on the public statute books. [Applause.] A demagogue is worse than an assassin, and I would, above most things, hate to be responsible for one of the species. If there is anything for which I feel that I can reverently thank God, it is that in my whole public career I have tried to do what my judgment has dictated should be done and have never paused in the doing long enough to inquire whether it was popular or unpopular. [Applause.]

CONCLUSION.

Now, I thank you again for your very courteous and gracious invitation, and even more for your rather apparent interest in what I have said I wish I could have withdrawn my thoughts from matters that were immediate and imperative at Washington, that I might better have prepared a succinct and cogent exposition of all the provisions of this Federal reserve act, but that was impossible, and I hope you will appreciate that it was because I was trying to serve my country there that I could not to-day do better here. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN] makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WAR PROSPERITY.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I believe in pitiless publicity in politics. I believe that political campaigns should be campaigns of education and of facts. Any part which I may take in the discussion of political and economic questions during the present presidential campaign it will be my earnest endeavor to present the plain, cold facts in regard to the principles of the Democratic and Republican Parties and the results obtained from the operation of these principles, so that my auditors and my readers may from these facts draw their own conclusions.

During the past few months a great deal has been said on the floor of the House by our Democratic friends concerning the prosperity which at present exists in the Nation. However, very little mention has been made by members on the Democratic side of the House of the business conditions that existed in the country during the spring and summer and just prior to the beginning of the European war in 1914. The depressed and deplorable condition of the business and industries of the country which followed the putting into effect of the Underwood tariff law and which was in evidence during the spring and summer of 1914 up to the time of the beginning of the European war in August of that year has not been forgotten and can not be forgotten by the millions of men who were out of employment during those days.

Prior to the present administration the Republican Party had been practically in uninterrupted control of the Government from March 4, 1897, to March 4, 1913. Since shortly after the Government was returned to the control of the Republican Party in 1897 and the country had recovered from the effect of Democratic tariff legislation under the Cleveland administration it has enjoyed a steady, vigorous, and sound development up to the time of the beginning of the Wilson administration in 1913, with the single exception of a short period of a few months in 1907 and 1908, when business was arrested by a temporary money panic brought on largely through a crusade inaugurated by President Roosevelt against bad business monopolies in the country.

While the Democratic Party had a majority in the House of Representatives in the Sixty-second Congress, which was called by President Taft in extraordinary session on April 4, 1911, the party did not come into full control of the Government until March 4, 1913. Since that time Woodrow Wilson has been President and a majority of Democratic Members have been in control of both the House and Senate. When the Republican Party turned control of the Government over to the Democratic Party in 1913 every line of business in the country was prosperous and flourishing and all men who would work found ready employment. Mines, factories, and shops everywhere were busy. The hum of industry was heard on every hand. The trade balance was as it had been for many years under Republican economic policies largely in our favor. Peace, happiness, and prosperity abounded throughout the whole country.

I am greatly surprised that some of our Democratic friends in their unbridled partisan criticism of the Republican Party make bold to charge that when the control of the country was taken over by the Democratic Party in 1913 the "business and industrial life of the country was in a weak and deplorable condition." This is a serious indictment, an indictment which, if true, after the Republican Party had been in full control of the Government for a decade and a half would warrant the repudiation of the Republican Party by the American people. How groundless and how untrue the indictment is can be best demonstrated by making a comparison of the condition of the leading business activities and industries of the Nation in the year 1900 and in the year 1913. I have selected this period, believing that it was fair to assume that conditions were normal under Republican control and under Republican Party economic principles in 1900, the country then having had three years to recover from the disastrous results of the economic follies of the Cleveland administration.

From 1900 to 1913 our population increased from 76,000,000 to 97,000,000, an increase of 27.7 per cent. In the 12 years' period of 1900 to 1912 our wealth increased from $88,517,307,000 to $187,739,071,090. The per capita wealth of the continental United States in 1900 was $1,164.79, and in 1912, $1,965. Thus it will be seen in the 12-year period from 1900 to 1912, as given by the Statistical Abstract of the United States, our wealth increased nearly 70 per cent, while during the 13 years from 1900 to 1913 our population increased but 27.7 per cent. This striking evidence can not be well said to indicate that "the business and industrial life of the country was in a weak and deplorable condition" when the control of the Government was taken over by the Democratic Party in 1913.

The amount of money in circulation in the United States in 1900 was $2,550,000,000. This was increased to $3,363,000,000 in 1913 under Republican control of the Government, an increase of more than 63 per cent. In 1900 our national debt, less cash in the United States Treasury, amounted to $1,107,711,257.89, or a per capita indebtedness of $14.58. In 1913 this amount had been reduced to $1,027,574,697.28, or to a per capita indebtedness of $10.60. While our population increased 27.7 per cent, it appears our public debt, less cash in the United States Treasury, decreased more than 28 per cent. The bank clearings of the United States, which in these days of modern business methods are one of the best criterions of the business condition of the country amounted in 1900 to $84,582,000,000 and in 1913 they had increased to $173,000,000,000, an increase of more than 100 per cent.

The number of national banks increased from 3,732 in 1900 to 7,473 in 1913, another increase of more than 100 per cent. During the same time the paid-up capital of these banks increased from $621,536,000 to $1,056,919,000, an increase of 60 per cent. At the same time the surplus and undivided profits of these banks had increased from $331,000,000 to $988,000,000, an increase of 170 per cent. Not alone was the great prosperity of the country during this period under Republican policy confined to the banking and commercial business interests of the country. During this period the farming industry, as well as all other industries, shows a marvelous progress and development. In 1900 the value of all farm property, including land, buildings, implements and machinery, and live stock, was $20,439,901,164. In 1910, the last year for which the census reports are available on this subject, shows that the value of all farm property had increased to $40,991,449,090, being an increase of more than 100 per cent. During this time the value of farm buildings alone increased nearly 100 per cent. The production of wheat was increased 46 per cent, and the production of cotton more than 39 per cent. The production of beet sugar increased from 163,458,075 pounds in 1900 to 1,385,112,000 pounds in 1913, an increase of 750 per cent. The production of coal increased 110 per cent, and the production of copper, the use of which enters into a large number of the industries of the country, increased 100 per cent. To-day is largely the age of iron and steel. The volume of these products used is looked upon as a true and safe measure of the sound business activities of the country. For this reason I call your attention particularly to the fact that the production of pig iron increased from 13,789,242 long tons in 1900 to 30,966,152 long tons in 1913, an increase of more than 100 per cent, while at the same time the production of steel increased from 10,188,229 long tons in 1900 to 31,300,874 long tons in 1913, an increase of 200 per cent.

In this same 13-year period the railroads evidenced a vigorous and steady growth. In 1900, 142,000,000 short tons of freight were carried 1 mile by the railroads of the country. This was increased to 301,000,000 short tons in 1913, an increase of more than 110 per cent in the freight traffic in the country. The passenger traffic showed a like increase of 80 per cent, 577,000,000 passengers being carried in 1900 and 1,034,000,000 in 1913. The Postal Service also presents further evidence of the general development and prosperity of the country during this period under Republican management. In 1900 the gross revenue of the Postal Department was $102,354,000. This was increased to $266,619,000 in 1913, an increase of 160 per cent.

In this 13-year period of marked material prosperity in the country the higher consideration of the future citizens of the country, who in the next generation are destined to rule the Nation, was not overlooked. In 1900 we expended for our public schools $214,954,000. This expenditure for common-school purposes was increased to $521,546,000 in 1913, an increase of 143 per cent. This increased expenditure for the common schools of the Nation during the period when our population increased but 27.7 per cent speaks volumes for the wise and statesmanlike leadership of those then guiding the Nation's destiny.

One of the modern methods of saving now generally employed by the laboring classes of our country is investment in life insurance policies. The number of life insurance policies taken out each year indicates in a considerable measure the prosperity or lack of prosperity among the laboring classes. The number of life insurance policies in ordinary and industrial companies in 1900 was 14,395,347. This number increased in 1913 to 37,448,941, an increase of more than 150 per cent. At the same time the amount paid to policyholders in 1900, being $168,687,601, had increased in 1913 to the splendid sum of $469,588,123, an increase of 180 per cent.

Not alone in our domestic banking, farming, mining, manufacturing, and commercial business do we find uncontrovertible evidence of sound prosperity under Republican control of the Government during the period between the Cleveland and Wilson administrations, but also do we find this evidence in our foreign trade. In 1900 our exports and foreign market amounted to $1,394,000,000. This was increased in 1913 to $2,465,000,000. This increase was not brought about through the occurrence of any great war, but by the exercise of American business enterprise fostered and protected by wise and sound economic legislation.

While the Republican Party was in control of the Government during those years, and was aiding and encouraging a wonderful activity and progress in all lines of business, it added no heavy burdens of governmental expenses on the people of the country. The total ordinary revenue of the Union amounted to $7.43 per capita in 1900 and to $7.44 per capita in 1913. In 1900, as well as in 1913, our revenue under Republican control of the Government was largely in excess of our expenditures, whereas in 1915, under Democratic control of the Government, the expenditures exceeded the revenue by nearly $63,000,000.

While it is a small matter, still it may be noted in passing, as it bears upon the oft-repeated charge of extravagance in governmental administration made by the Democratic Party against the Republican Party, the latest Statistical Abstract of the United States shows that the cost of collecting the customs revenue during the year 1915 was 4.42 per cent of the amount collected. This was a larger percentage of cost for the collection of our customs revenue than that incurred during any year under Republican administration from 1900 to 1913.

When the cold facts and statistics of business and trade in the country are known and considered, the false charge that "the business and industrial life of the country was in a weak and deplorable condition" in 1913, when the control of the Government was turned over to the Democratic Party, crumbles and falls and, writhing, dies even among it own worshipers.

But let us consider what really occurred when the Democratic Party took charge of the Government in 1913. The Sixty-third Congress was called in extraordinary session by President Wilson for the special purpose of changing the Republican protective tariff law to conform, as it was proclaimed, to the declarations of the Democratic platform of 1912, which on that subject said:

We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic Party that the Federal Government, under the Constitution, has no right or power to impose or collect tariff duty except for the purpose of revenue.

The Underwood tariff law was approved by President Wilson on October 3, 1913. This law, according to Representative UNDERWOOD himself, was a very mild and homeopathic Democratic tariff law and only a forerunner of the sweeping tariff reductions which we were informed by him would soon thereafter follow under further Democratic control of the Government.

For the month of October, 1914, our exports exceeded our imports by $138,912,152. Following the enactment of the Underwood tariff law, our exports began to steadily decrease and our imports to increase until in March, 1914, the excess of our imports over our exports had fallen to $4,943,930. In April, 1914, for the first time in 15 years, our imports exceeded our exports. In this month of April, 1914, our imports exceeded our exports by $11,209,544. In May, June, and July of that year our imports exceeded our exports in steadily increasing amounts. In August, 1914, our imports exceeded our exports by $19,030,382. During the 10 months prior to the beginning of the European war in which the Underwood tariff law was in operation our imports increased $101,977,000 and our exports decreased $158,888,000, thus causing a reduction in our balance of trade of more than $260,000,000. Every dollar of this sum represented a dollar sent to a foreign country and lost to American industry.

The knowledge of this falling off in our trade balance, coupled with the knowledge that during this 10-month period our imports increased many millions of dollars and at the same time our customs revenue, due to the lower rate of the Underwood tariff law, decreased, is the key to the knowledge of the cause of the deplorable condition in which the business of the country was thrown during the months in 1914 preceding the European war.

For the 10 months in which the Underwood tariff law was in operation before the beginning of the European war, which began in August, 1914, the bank clearings of the country were $3,300,000,000 less than during the corresponding period in 1912 and 1913 under Republican economic policies. Commercial failures increased from $98,816,000 in 1912 to $113,863,000 in 1913 and to $175,298,000 in 1914. Statistics also show a decrease of many millions of dollars in the amount expended for building operations during this period.

The following table shows the imports and exports for each month of the 10-month period from October 1, 1912, to July 31, 1913, while the Payne tariff law was in operation:

	Imports.	Exports.	Excess of exports.
1912.
October	$177,987,986	$254,633,504	$76,645,518
November	153,094,898	278,244,191	125,149,293
December	164,095,444	260,315,807	96,220,363
1913.
January	163,063,438	227,032,930	63,969,492
February	149,913,918	193,996,942	44,083,024
March	155,445,498	187,426,711	31,981,213
April	146,194,461	199,813,438	53,618,977
May	123,723,713	184,607,422	60,883,709
June	131,245,877	163,401,916	32,159,039
July	139,061,770	160,980,778	21,929,008
	1,503,827,003	2,110,466,639	606,639,635

The following table shows the imports and exports for each month for the 10 months, October, 1913, to July 31, 1914, the time during which the Underwood tariff law was in operation before the beginning of the European war:

	Imports.	Exports.	Excess of—
			Imports.	Exports.
1913.
October	$132,949,302	$271,861,464		$138,912,162
November	148,236,536	245,539,042		97,302,506
December	184,025,571	233,195,628		49,170,057
1914.
January	154,742,923	204,066,603		49,323,680
February	148,044,776	173,920,145		25,875,369
March	182,555,304	187,499,234		4,943,930
April	173,762,114	162,552,570	$11,209,544
May	164,281,515	161,732,619	2,548,896
June	157,529,450	157,072,044	457,406
July	159,677,291	154,138,947	5,538,344
	1,605,804,782	1,951,578,296	19,754,190	365,527,704

In the knowledge of these facts in mind it is not surprising that during this period thousands of men were out of employment, that hundreds of factories closed their doors, and that there was a dearth of new business enterprises and a halting of general industrial activity, and a widespread apprehension and belief that the economic policies of the Democratic Party would again destroy rather than foster and encourage American business and industry.

Then, in the height of this business depression, in August, 1914, suddenly burst on the world the gigantic European war, and with it the tremendous demand for war munitions, war supplies, and miscellaneous merchandise and foodstuffs needed in the struggle between the allied and central European powers. A new life was quickly injected into the trade and business of the country. At once our exports began to increase over our imports so that in September, 1914, our exports exceeded our imports by $16,341,732. During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, our export of merchandise exceeded our imports by the enormous sum of $1,094,419,600, our total export amounting in that year to $2,758,589,340, as compared with exports amounting to $2,364,579,148 in 1914. In 1916 our exports continued to increase and aggregated the enormous sum of $4,333,648,865 for the year ending June 30, 1916. During the fiscal year 1916 our exports exceeded our imports by $2,135,775,355, being practically 400 per cent greater than the average excess of our exports over our imports during the fiscal year 1913.

The balance of trade is at present in favor of the United States in an amount exceeding $200,000,000 a month, and is constantly increasing as the European war continues. The exports of the country for the fiscal year 1916 increased almost $2,000,000,000 above what our exports were during the fiscal year 1914. At the same time our imports increased from $1,803,925,657 in 1914 to $2,197,883,510 in 1916. The duty collected from customs, it will be noted, during this time fell off from $283,719,081 in 1914 to $211,866,222 in 1916. Our exports and imports and customs duties collected for the years 1913, 1914, and 1916 are shown in the following table:

	1913	1914	1916
Exports	$2,465,884,149	$2,364,579,148	$4,333,658,865
Imports	1,813,008,234	1,803,925,657	2,197,883,510
Excess of exports over imports	652,875,915	470,653,491	2,135,775,355
Per cent of free imports	54.47	59.53	67.91
Duties collected from customs	312,509,916	283,719,081	211,866,222

An examination of the character of the exports where the largest increases have occurred will disclose that the increase is composed altogether of war munitions and supplies and other merchandise needed by the people of the warring nations in carrying on their superlatively destructive warfare.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman mean to say that our exports of war munitions amount to $2,000,000,000 a year?

Mr. NORTON. I will say to the gentleman in reply that I intend to assert that the value of our exports of war munitions and supplies for war purposes, including merchandise necessary to the warring nations such as horses, mules, foodstuffs, and various manufactured articles, now aggregates fully $2,000,000,000 a year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. War munitions are about 6 per cent of our exports, or about $240,000,000.

Mr. NORTON. I have heard statements similar to that made before, that our export of war munitions, including guns and ammunition, amounted only to about 6 per cent of our total exports. Such a statement is entirely unsupported by the facts, and must have originated in the mind of some one who has given little or no study to this subject. The value of actual war munitions exported during the past year is incomparably greater than 6 per cent of the total export for the year. I shall place in the RECORD a table showing what the sum of our exports were during the normal year of 1914, while the Democratic Party was in control of the Government, and also what the amount of the exports of these articles was during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916. This table will show conclusively what war munitions and war supplies have been exported and will demonstrate that the statement that only 6 per cent of all our exports was made up of war munitions is highly ridiculous.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. I shall be pleased to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is it not the fact that the character of the so-called munitions has been almost completely changed since the time of the last great war, and that articles now entering into and controlling war munitions formerly were only regarded as merchandise or common supplies?

Mr. NORTON. That is very true.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is it not true that this is a machine-made war and that gasoline became an essential of war and of war munitions?

Mr. NORTON. Gasoline and aeroplanes and submarines and things unheard of in prior wars must properly be included at this time as actual munitions of war. As I said, I shall place in the RECORD an authentic table setting forth some of these articles and the amount of increase in exports of the same, and shall leave the question to you to determine whether or not the statement I make is a fair conclusion justified by the facts.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman include the $41,000,000 in value of alcohol, which might be called munitions of war?

Mr. NORTON. Alcohol has become one of the war necessities in the present great war across the Atlantic, and there accordingly has been a great increase in the export of this commodity from this country since the beginning of that war.

Table showing exports which have been greatly increased through war demands.

Articles.	For fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.	For fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.	Excess in 1916 of exports over normal Democratic year of 1914.
Aeroplanes, and parts of	$226,149	$7,002,005	16,775,856
Aluminum, and manufactures of	1,101,920	5,644,319	4,542,399
Alcohol	67,728	8,784,742	8,717,014
Animals:
Horses	3,388,819	73,531,146	70,142,327
Mules	690,974	22,946,312	22,255,338
Cattle	647,288	2,383,765	1,736,477
Automobiles and parts of	33,198,806	120,000,866	86,802,060
Barbed wire	4,039,590	23,909,209	19,869,619
Breadstuffs	165,302,388	435,696,629	270,394,241
Brass, and articles made from	7,472,476	164,876,044	157,403,568
Cars and railways	11,177,776	26,661,015	15,483,239
Chemicals, drugs, and medicines	27,079,092	124,362,167	97,283,075
Copper, and manufactures of	146,222,556	173,946,226	27,723,670
Cotton manufactures	51,467,233	112,053,127	60,585,894
Engines and parts of	17,056,124	36,931,253	19,875,129
Explosives	6,272,197	467,081,928	460,809,731
India rubber, manufactures of, including automobile tires	12,441,220	35,180,096	22,738,875
Iron and steel, manufacture not included in any of foregoing items	230,384,963	560,368,991	329,984,028
Leather goods and tanned skins, including boots, shoes, and harness	57,466,261	146,613,815	89,147,554
Meat products	143,261,846	266,795,608	123,533,762
Refined sugar	1,839,983	79,390,147	77,550,164
Wool, manufactures	4,790,087	53,983,655	49,193,568
Zinc, manufactures	406,208	45,867,156	45,460,948
Total	926,001,684	2,994,010,221	2,068,008,537

The table which I here present shows 23 articles which enter into the needs of the warring nations and the war demand for which during the year 1916 has increased the exports of these article more than $2,000,000,000 over what the exports of these articles were during the year 1914. This table is compiled from the official reports of the foreign commerce and navigation of the United States made by the Department of Commerce. The single item of explosives appearing in the table shows that the export of explosives increased in 1916 more than $460,000,000 over the value of the export of explosives in 1914, and explodes completely the statement of our Democratic friends that only about 6 per cent of our total exports in the year 1916 was composed of war munitions.

The conclusion from the facts and figures of our present export trade is inevitable that the temporary prosperity we are now experiencing is a war prosperity pure and simple. It is a prosperity constructed on no sound or lasting economic principle. It is a prosperity which will collapse—not after the war, but be washed away by the first advancing wave of peace in Europe. It is a prosperity which will collapse—not after the war, but at the very first negotiations for peace. When the dove of peace returns to the now embattled nations across the sea the cream of our present export business will become sour milk. Then American wage earners will drop out of the pay line in tens of thousands if, while we lose the war markets of the world to the extent of thousands of millions of dollars each year, there are no permanent business industries to which they may turn for their bread and butter, because the vessels of all the world will be bringing their cargoes into our markets. Your poor old Democratic Party is water-logged with opposition to our Republican Party principles for the upbuilding and the protection of American home industry and is hopelessly unable to provide means to meet the situation which is certain to follow the close of the European war. Your party does at last seem to realize the situation which confronts the Nation and is making a pretense before the coming presidential election of adopting some fundamental Republican economic policies.

While you have heretofore opposed and scorned the suggestions of the Republican Party for a tariff commission, within a few hours you will repudiate the position you have taken for years on this question and will provide for such a commission in the revenue bill you are to pass to-day. But, as Senator UNDERWOOD, the former leader of your party in this House, argues, what good can come from a tariff commission under a party holding, as the Democratic Party does, to the economic belief that a tariff for the protection and upbuilding of American industries is unconstitutional and indefensible? Naturally, no good will come of it under any Democratic administration. As I said on the floor of the House two years ago, the American people at the first opportunity will record their disapproval of the present Democratic administration in no uncertain manner. They have within the past three years witnessed the business life and the industry of the country prostrated by the impracticable economic policy of the Democratic Party. They have witnessed the hopelessness and inefficiency of the Democratic Party to meet the world problems with which we are now confronted. They will no longer risk their welfare and happiness with a party whose principles are destructive of American progress and prosperity. They will no longer be deceived by false party promises and by free-trade prophecies. When the next opportunity presents itself at the November election they will return to the control of the Government that grand old Republican Party which has so long stood for America first before all the world; that party which has successfully met every great problem that has confronted the Nation during the past 60 years; that party under whose sound economic principles the Nation has enjoyed a prosperity and progress unprecedented in all the history of the world. [Applause on the Republican side.]

FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate concurrent resolution 26 and place it on its passage at this time.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, to save time, for the present I shall object. Possibly if the gentleman makes his request later I will not.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman withhold his objection until it is reported?

Mr. BENNET. I will.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 26.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 150,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 500, Sixty-fourth Congress, entitled "The Federal Farm Loan Act," of which 50,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 100,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNET. Reserving the right to object, has not this been printed by the House?

Mr. BARNHART. I understand not. The bill just came from the Senate. I have made inquiries at the desk, but they do not know of any such resolution, and none has been referred to the committee. If it was done, it was done in conjunction with the bill, and I have inquired of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss], and he said he knew nothing of such a resolution.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from New York that the Banking and Currency Committee of the House has been overwhelmed by Members applying for copies of the farm-loan act, and I suggested to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, that he present this resolution to the Senate, which he did, and it was unanimously passed.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. What provision is made as to how the bills are to be distributed—through the folding room or the document room?

Mr. BARNHART. It will be a House document and go to the folding room. They all go there unless it is specified that they shall go to the document room.

Mr. BENNET. What is the approximate cost?

Mr. BARNHART. It is not reported but it will be insignificant. It is a small pamphlet. The committee has had no means to have a meeting and it comes here as a matter of unanimous consent. I trust that the gentleman from New York at this late hour will not object. In ordinary matters of this kind I like to have them considered in that way, but there have been so many requests from Members, and because of my inability to have this attended to in my long absence, I hope that the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that a day or two ago there was a resolution offered in the House—I do not recollect whether it passed or not—but there was some discussion about it. The minority leader insisted if I recollect right that the Agricultural Department was preparing full instructions and had a sufficient appropriation to answer all demands.

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the gentleman that by direction of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House I introduced a resolution to have 50,000 copies printed and the House agreed to the resolution. It was first submitted to the minority leader, but we found that we could have but 35,000 copies and they were soon exhausted.

Mr. BARNHART. That was for $500.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; and then we asked for 50,000 more. But in talking with the Senator from Florida who is the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, he and I concluded that in view of the enormous demand for the document we better have 150,000 printed and divide them between the Senate and the House.

Mr. CANNON. They will be distributed through the folding room?

Mr. GLASS. One hundred thousand of them will.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, let us have the resolution again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Clerk will again report the resolution.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the resolution.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this request comes from the chairman of the Committee on Printing, a fact that I had overlooked, who is a pretty good guardian of the Treasury, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question. I have seen many copies of the act, but I think I saw one copy of it that had side notes upon it.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; and that is the one that is covered in this resolution.

Mr. BARNHART. That is the one.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. RAGSDALE, for two days, on account of the illness of his wife.

WILLIAM HAROLD KEHOE.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6279) for the relief of William Harold Kehoe.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of the exports of the Nation for the last three years.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WIDOWS' PENSIONS.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11707) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War," approved April 19, 1908, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and that the Senate amendments be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman briefly explain the amendments made by the Senate?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that the first amendment is to make more clear who is entitled to a pension under this bill. The second amendment also relates to the same. It provides that the widows of soldiers of the Civil War——

Mr. NORTON. And of the Spanish-American War?

Mr. ASHBROOK. No.

Mr. NORTON. It applies to the Civil War?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, amendment No. 2 also applies to the Mexican War and the War of 1812.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; but does not include the Spanish-American War widows.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. The date, I understand, in the bill is fixed at 1905?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say that the bill as it passed the House fixed the day of marriage at June 27, 1905. The Senate Pension Committee moved the date up to the passage of the bill; but the Senate this morning in passing the bill rejected the amendment of the Senate Pension Committee and passed the bill the same as it left the House, to wit, June 27, 1905.

Mr. RAKER. The last amendment, does the gentleman think that is all right?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I would say to the gentleman——

Mr. RAKER. It is not in the House bill. The Senate gave considerable discussion to it to-day. I think the Pensions Committee of the House is really opposed to the provision charging the widows $10 for presenting their pensions. Now, as a matter of fact, the pension officials send out a notification and there is nothing on earth to do except for her to go before some notary public or friend and prepare and send it here, and then the Congressmen and Senators could attend to these matters. And why should these people be compelled to give up $10?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say that I originally thought practically the same way about it, that I would not allow any pension agent or attorney a single cent for his services, but this bill provides that for widows who are now on the roll the pension agents can not charge; only those widows who have never established a claim and who do not now receive a pension can be charged. In those cases there is likely to be considerable trouble, and it was thought perhaps wise that some provision should be made for the payment, because many widows are poor and ignorant and do not know very much about what they are required to do to establish their claim, which frequently requires much work to supply the required proof or evidence.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Any widow who now receives a pension and is entitled to an increase can not be charged for the pension.

Mr. ASHBROOK. In cases of that kind the pension agents are forbidden to make a charge.

Mr. RAKER. What in regard to making a charge in regard to remarriage? If the second husband is since dead, will they be charged under that?

Mr. ASHBROOK. If they were once upon the pension roll, there would be no charge. If they never have been on the pension roll, there will be.

Mr. RAKER. If they are on the roll now or have been on, there will be no charge against them?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is right.

Mr. RAKER. It is simply the new cases?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is right.

Mr. RAKER. And the gentleman would rather for it to go through this way than to have any question at this time?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I would by all means.

Mr. RAKER. I feel the same way.

Mr. CLINE. Could there be a charge for those cases where the widow on the pension rolls by virtue of this act gets an increase?

Mr. ASHBROOK. None whatever.

Mr. BENNET. I think the seventh amendment strikes out the proviso at the bottom of page 3, and apparently that takes out of this bill certain classes of widows. Am I correct, or is there some explanation of that?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman from New York that this amendment was prepared by the Pension Office and was offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and, as I understand this amendment, Mr. Speaker, it provides that a widow who has children, as mentioned in this paragraph, who are domiciled in her own home is entitled to this increase in the pension provided by this act, but if the children are not domiciled in her own home she is not entitled to it.

Mr. BENNET. I will say to the gentleman it does not seem to read that way. It strikes out this language:

That the benefits of this act shall include those widows whose husbands, if living, have a pensionable status under the joint resolutions of February 15, 1895, July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906.

And it does not appear in any other amendment.

Mr. ASHBROOK. But if the gentleman will read, it says:

Provided, however, That where a pension has been granted to a soldier's or sailor's helpless or idiotic child or children, or child or children under the age of 16 years, his widow shall not be entitled to pension under this section, unless the pension to such child or children has terminated, or unless such child or children be a member or members of her family and cared for by her, and upon allowance of pension to the widow, payment of pension to such child or children shall cease.

Mr. BENNET. Yes; but there is absolutely no connection between the two. It strikes out a provision for certain widows, and then provides for certain other widows, but the children of certain described classes shall not get pensions while those widows are receiving pensions. I can not see any provision in the bill that does it.

Mr. ASHBROOK. As I stated to my friend, this provision was prepared at the Pension Office, and a copy was sent to Senator SMOOT and a copy to the ranking Democratic Member, with the suggestion that an amendment ought to be offered and adopted, and it was offered by the Senator from Utah and adopted without opposition in the Senate. I have had no opportunity to give the amendment any consideration except that I heard it slightly discussed in the Senate this morning.

Mr. BENNET. The most potent argument for the Senate amendment is the lateness of the session.

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is true, and I hope the gentleman will not raise any objection to this amendment. If we hope to pass this bill at this session, it is important that we concur in the amendment. In view of the fact that this is a recommendation of the Pension Office, I think we ought to be willing to accept it.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Certainly.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. As the gentleman knows, I am very much in favor of the bill, but, like other gentlemen, I do not like the attorney's fee feature in it. But I do not want to delay the passage of the bill. I would like to ask the gentleman, Is there any provision against an attorney soliciting trade or must the attorney be a local attorney? Is there anything against these Washington atorneys looking up lists and writing to these people that a bill is pending and have us do all the work and they get the credit for it?

Mr. RAKER. As to that, I want to say that many people have already written to me about this bill, which they mention as having been pending here for the last three months, and they seem to know about it.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The widow must nominate her agent or attorney in her application. Of course whomever she chooses to nominate as her attorney when her claim is allowed will get the $10 fee. If she prefers a Washington attorney to a local attorney, of course that is her own affair.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a good deal of controversy over the Senate amendments to this bill. Does not the gentleman think it might be well to delay it to let us look over the amendments until to-night? I understand there is going to be another session.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do not understand that there is to be any controversy over these amendments. Some questions have been asked about them, but I do not think that any Member will object to the amendments. I would like to have the amendments concurred in at this time, so that the bill will be signed by the Speaker and the Vice President to-night and by the President before he leaves the city to-morrow, and I trust my good friend will interpose no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to object. I merely suggest that it might be well to have an opportunity to look over it and vote on it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

On motion of Mr. ASHBROOK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California makes the same request. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH] makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SPEECH OF EX-CONGRESSMAN GRAHAM, OF ILLINOIS.

Mr. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech recently delivered by ex-Congressman Graham of Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STONE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech recently delivered by ex-Congressman Graham. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 8.30 o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until half past eight to-night. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the purpose of the evening session to take up the revenue bill and the general deficiency bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is expected that the confernce report will be ready on the revenue bill, and the conference report is ready on the deficiency bill and will be presented at that time.

Mr. BENNET. That is the purpose of having this evening session?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. It will take about 14 hours to engross the revenue bill, and a meeting should be held to-night so as to permit the engrossment of the bill in time for an adjournment to-morrow.

Mr. BENNET. Of course it is to facilitate final adjournment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, aside from the revenue and deficiency bills, there is very important legislation now being considered over in the Senate, such as the corrupt-practices act. I think the Senate should be given further time to consider that measure. I object to the recess, and unless we can adjourn over until to-morrow I think I shall have to make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. There will be an adjournment to-night until to-morrow.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I do not think it is necessary to have a meeting to-night.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The regular order will be the calling of the calendar and the committees. If some bill is called up to which there is objection, why——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I think a motion to adjourn would be a proper motion, and unless that motion is made I think I shall have to make the point of no quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That motion ought not to be made, because it will require time to engross the revenue bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the point for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of no quorum.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I will only agree to withhold it for about 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that the House stand in recess?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object again, Mr. Speaker—not that I think I will object—but I have been endeavoring here a time or two, Mr. Speaker, to secure the consideration of a simple little resolution providing for mileage for the employees of the House and Senate. Some Members—and I do not suppose that there is any record of their returning to the Treasury the mileage they themselves have gotten—seem to stay on the job to object to that legislation, which will do simple justice to the employees of the House and Senate. And it seems to me that if we are in favor of doing some sort of justice, before this recess is taken, I will ask unanimous consent that this resolution be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. Unless the gentleman from New York withdraws his request, the first thing is to attend to that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall have to object to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Then I object to the recess. I withhold the point of no quorum for 30 minutes.

Mr. STEELE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. STEELE of Iowa. To make the statement that I have been on this job for several months——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEELE of Iowa. I have sat around here, gentlemen, for all these months, and I believe it is about time that we should return to our homes. I am getting tired of hearing this political gas that is now escaping in the Halls of Congress, and I do not want to be held up here with a shotgun by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], stating that if he does not have a certain resolution passed in this House he will make the point of no quorum. I have been his friend. I have watched him carefully, but I want to say to you, Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois, if that is your desire, I want you to go ahead and make the point of no quorum, and get it over with, and we will get through with this business.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has no time to yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that he have time to answer a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa have two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. At this time there is being considered in the Senate some of the most important legislation, in my opinion, that has been before this Congress at this session. Of course, no one desires to have the displeasure of his associates, and no one wants to be misunderstood as making any movement of this sort for any personal reason. I do say it is absolutely unjust on the part of this House to withhold from the employees mileage to and from their homes, when they have to make that trip. And those who would object to that, in my opinion, if they are fair and square, would return their own mileage to the Treasury. Now, I consider that if by delaying the adjournment of this House two or three days it would result in the passage of the corrupt-practices act, even at the risk of the displeasure of a few of my friends, it would be worth doing, in order to secure the passage of that important legislation. Now, I do not want to be misunderstood by my good friend from Iowa or to incur his displeasure, but when I think I am right it is pretty difficult for somebody to get up and say——

Mr. STEELE of Iowa. I want to make this statement, that I do object to the gentleman from Illinois making the statement that unless this resolution is passed he will call for a quorum here. If he is going to do that, or if there are any other Members who are going to do that, let them do it now, and let us get done with it. [Applause.] I am tired of waiting around.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. If that seems to be the sense of the House——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman wants to call up his resolution, let him call it up.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman stated that he wanted to call up his resolution.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. It seems to be in accord with the desire of Members here that I should make the point. I did agree to withhold it for half an hour, and I will keep my agreement, whatever I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not need to withhold it.

MILEAGE TO OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to have the following resolution considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the payment of mileage to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they hereby are, directed to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including clerks to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners, the Capitol police, and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of September, 1916, mileage at the rate of 5 cents per mile, each way, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in coming from and returning to their homes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman reserve the objection?

Mr. CULLOP. No; I will not withhold it one minute.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 8.30 p. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 8.30 p. m. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at 9 o'clock this evening the Senate resolution, which embodies the same proposition as that offered by the gentleman from Illinois, be considered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 1636. An act for the relief of Karen S. Sorenson and James Lyle;

H. R. 1963. An act for the relief of John E. Keys;

H. R. 16532. An act authorizing an adjustment of the boundaries of the Whitman National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14824. An act to prevent fraud at public auctions in the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 15316. An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14391. An act authorizing the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Madison, Wis., and for other purposes.

JACKSON ORR.

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, on the 6th of May, when there were felicitating speeches made to the gentleman from Illinois, former Speaker CANNON, by the distinguished and eloquent Members of this House, there was a response made by Mr. CANNON, which only he, of course, could make. In the course of his remarks he enumerated those Members of the Forty-third Congress who are still alive. It happens that he omitted a distinguished Member of that Congress, now a resident of Denver, Colo., the Hon. Jackson Orr. He was born four years before the gentleman from Illinois, and nearly four years before the gentleman from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD. He was in the Forty-second Congress. He was a veteran Congressman when these two gentlemen came here.

Twenty-five years ago Judge Orr went out to our city, and by his character and habits and manly attributes he conquered the hearts of that people. To-day his body is erect; his mind is clear; his heart is full of generosity, forgiveness, and mercy; and his soul, while willing to stay here, is ready for its flight, and he sends his greetings to the Sixty-fourth Congress. [Applause.]

RECESS.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that the House stand in recess until 8.30 p. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 8.30 p. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes) the House took a recess until 8.30 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, at 8 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill H. R. 17645, the general deficiency appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report upon the general deficiency appropriation bill, the rule about printing to the contrary notwithstanding. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CHARLES EDWARD RUSSELL.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the House of Representatives whether the occurrence detailed in the following newspaper article happened as stated.

Mr. FITZGERALD (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, we can not ask the Secretary of State to answer as to the accuracy of every newspaper statement.

Mr. BENNET. I realize that; but this is a question whether Mr. Russell, a fellow citizen——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Secretary of State would not have the time, in the first place, and I suggest that the gentleman telephone.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, no. This is——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] objects.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution, including the newspaper article, be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the resolution and the newspaper article. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution and newspaper article are as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the House of Representatives whether the occurrence detailed in the following newspaper article happened as stated;

PARIS, September 6.

Robert Woods Bliss, first secretary of the American Embassy and chargé d'affaires in the absence of Ambassador Sharp, has attempted to establish a censorship over Americans far exceeding in rigor anything the French have ever done, even for military purposes. Mr. Bliss's ruling is that no American who criticises President Wilson shall receive assistance in his affairs from the American Embassy in Paris.

CRITIC OF THE PRESIDENT.

Charles Edward Russell, two years ago the Socialist candidate for Senator from New York now representing in Paris a well-known and important newspaper organization, is Mr. Bliss's most recent victim. He suffers for having written to the Paris edition of the Herald that it pleased him to see that many Americans had protested against Mr. Wilson's "most strange and grotesque felicitations to the Austrian Emperor."

After writing this letter, Mr. Russell wished to go to the Belgian front, and, according to the rule laid down by the Belgian Government, asked the embassy in Paris for a letter establishing his identity as a journalist, taking to Mr. Bliss his credentials from the organization employing him. Another journalist went with Mr. Russell on the same errand and both were told to come back the next day and get their letters. Next day the other man, who had not written to the Herald, received his letter, but Mr. Russell was refused his on the ground that he had criticized the President.

CENSORSHIP BY EMBASSY.

Mr. Russell asked if there was anything in the Constitution or the statutes forbidding criticism of the President. Mr. Bliss replied, "No;" but said that nothing in the Constitution or the statutes required him to give the letter asked for, and that no one who criticized the President could get anything from the embassy.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, the article which the House has just ordered printed in the RECORD details an alleged occurrence in Paris, and I hope it is merely an alleged occurrence. The statement is that Charles Edward Russell, a resident of the State of New York, a Socialist, it is true, but an American citizen, and as such entitled to every consideration that every other American citizen is entitled to, was, because he had criticized President Wilson, refused permission by the American Embassy at Paris to visit the French Army front, permission being necessary in the first instance from the American Embassy. The reason I introduced the resolution at this time and attempted to have it considered is that the Department of State is this afternoon reported to have said that they would not do anything about this matter until it was brought officially to their attention. It seemed to me that a matter of this kind, printed in a reputable newspaper in this city, with names given and everything of that sort, deserved attention before we adjourned. I am sorry that my colleague objected. Mr. Russell, a resident of our State, has been once, possibly twice, the candidate of his party for governor, and is a man of standing, an author of repute, and a highly respected and reputable citizen. I would like very much to find out whether he has been discriminated against in Paris. He does not belong to my party, and no man in this House has opposed socialistic doctrines in this Congress more than I; but as an American citizen he is entitled to certain rights, and I am sorry that, under the objection of my colleague, the opportunity to find out whether he has been discriminated against is denied. [Applause on the Republican side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 6625) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 136) for the relief of Eva M. Bowman.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12889. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell the unsold and unappropriated portions of lands within the town site of Newell, S. Dak., and for other purposes;

H. R. 6034. An act to make available a portion of the appropriation for the immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for such counters, booths, screens, railings, seats, bunks, kitchen and laundry equipment, etc., as necessary in connection with said station;

H. R. 2208. An act for the relief of James L. Yokum;

H. R. 14533. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee simple to the district school board No. 112, of White Earth Village, Becker County, Minn., for a certain tract of land upon payment therefor to the United States in trust for the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota;

H. R. 10989. An act making appropriation for the preservation, improvement, and perpetual care of Huron Cemetery, a burial place of the Wyandotte Indians, in the city of Kansas City, Kans.;

H. R. 13046. An act to consolidate certain forest lands in the Oregon National Forest, in the State of Oregon;

H. R. 11707. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War," approved April 19, 1908; and

H. R. 15807. An act to provide for holding sessions of the United States district court in the district of Maine and for dividing said district into divisions, and providing for offices of the clerk and marshal of said district to be maintained in each of said divisions, and for the appointment of a field deputy marshal in the division in which the marshal does not reside.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 173. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of September salaries to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the day of adjournment of the present session.

CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report upon the bill (S. 6625) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky presents a conference report and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1201).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill S. 6625, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

W. J. FIELDS,
FRANK L. GREENE,
Managers on the part of the House.
GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
G. M. HITCHCOCK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, when the immigration bill passed the House I was absent on sick leave. I was for the bill but against the literacy test. A newspaper circulating largely in my State has charged that I was paired against the bill and I want to read into the RECORD of the House the telegram which I sent to the pair clerk at the time, and ask leave that it may be printed as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The telegram is as follows:

HOT SPRINGS, ARK., March 29, 1916.

PAIR CLERK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Pair me against literacy test in immigration bill and for bill on final passage.

W. E. WILLIAMS.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection to the request made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and the Clerk will read the report.

Mr. MANN. What is it?

The SPEAKER. On the general deficiency bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the request for unanimous consent has to be put again.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York requested unanimous consent a good while ago to consider this conference report.

Mr. MANN. But objection was made then.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands, but the objection has been withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. Well, it has to be submitted again.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask what the report is.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask for information, if it is possible to do so, why the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] withdrew his objection?

The SPEAKER. Well, that is not a matter to be inquired into except privately. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to ask the gentleman from New York a question?

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman what is the conference report?

Mr. FITZGERALD. On the general deficiency bill.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but what has been agreed upon?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, there are 52 different amendments. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was a conferee. As the bill passed the House, it carried $14,332,069.11. As it passed the Senate, it carried $15,741,870.54, an increase of $1,409,801.43. The House receded from items aggregating $891,778.55, and the Senate receded on items aggregating $518,022.08. Of these items $180,000 was appropriated to carry out legislation in the District bill for the police and firemen's fund, and $150,000 for the peace celebration at Vicksburg, Miss.

Mr. MANN. That goes in?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That goes in.

Mr. MANN. That is what I wanted to know about.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And there was another large item. That constitutes nearly $350,000 of the $890,000. In addition there was $150,000 for the reconstruction of the courthouse of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is customary for the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the ranking minority member of that committee to make a statement about this stage of the proceedings in reference to the appropriations for the session. Does the gentleman from New York intend to make that statement?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope to be able to make it to-morrow; I can not make it to-night. While I have the figures, I am trying to write a statement that will not only be readable but highly persuasive, if not convincing, upon the Republican and other opponents of the Democratic administration. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MANN. Well, I think it might be well to get unanimous consent that these statements may be inserted in the RECORD, at least the one from this side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, we will be in session to-morrow. It is possible that I shall be ready with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I want to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Very well.

Mr. COX. What was done with the amendment put on in the Senate in relation to the steel-bloom rebate, amounting to about $142,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is known as the La Follette amendment?

Mr. COX. Yes; put on in the Senate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A certain rebate of customs duties?

Mr. COX. Yes; that is right, amounting to one hundred and forty-odd thousand dollars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Senate receded from that.

Mr. COX. Good.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is one place in the text of the bill where, by a clerical error, the word "purchase" has been printed "purpose." I wished to call attention to that. The managers on the part of the two Houses modified the text by making the proper correction. It was contrary to the technical rule, but it was merely a clerical correction. The managers took the liberty to do it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is any provision made in this bill for taking over roads in the National Military Park at Gettysburg?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was no such provision in the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understood there was a Senate amendment carrying such provision.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was no such Senate amendment. Such an amendment, however, was proposed in the House, as I recall, either to the sundry civil bill or to this bill, but the argument advanced in support of it was not sufficiently convincing to induce the House to vote in favor of the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the reason for it was that there was no appropriation available for it at the time. If it is not in this bill, that answers my question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no such item in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement was read.

The conference report and accompanying statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1199).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17645) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 11, 13, 17, 19, 20, 29, 30, 31, 37, and 38.

That the House recede from its disagreements to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 6, 9, 12, 14, 15, 18, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, and 51, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For refund of internal revenue taxes to the J. L. da Roza Estate, Incorporated, of Elk Grove, Cal., in accordance with private act numbered 83, approved August 7, 1916, $1,158."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit lines 4 and 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the sum "$200,000"; and in line 9 strike out the sum "$200,000," and insert in lieu thereof the sum "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, and on page 9 of the bill in line 8 strike out the word "purpose" and insert in lieu thereof the word "purchase"; and after line 18 insert as a new paragraph the following:

"The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate the methods of transacting the public business in the Bureau of Internal Revenue and prepare recommendations for the improvement thereof and submit the same to the Secretary of the Treasury as early as practicable for his approval and to Congress at its next session."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit all of lines 9 to 14 inclusive of said amendment and in lieu thereof insert as a separate paragraph the following:

"One-half of the two foregoing sums shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of the Treasury of the United States"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"National Memorial Celebration and Peace Jubilee, Vicksburg, Miss.: For expenses, within the limits of this appropriation, in connection with the celebration to be held at Vicksburg, Miss., in the year 1917, by the survivors of the armies of the Tennessee and of the Mississippi who participated in the Battle of Vicksburg in July 1863, in commemoration of a half century of peace and good-fellowship which happily exists throughout the Republic, to be expended under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of War as follows: For necessary sewerage, sanitation, and hospital service of persons attending said celebration; for necessary camp and garrison equipment, rations, and supplies for veterans of the Civil War attending said celebration, $150,000, no part of which shall be available until after January 1, 1917: Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to fully complete all arrangements herein authorized before October 14, 1917, and that all camp equipment, including tents, supplies, and rations, shall be fully ready for use by that date; Provided further, That the National Association of Vicksburg Veterans, formed in Chicago, Ill., August 9, 1913, shall have charge of the order of exercises during the celebration; the physical control of the camp and grounds and the movement of troops and marching bodies shall be in the hands of the Secretary of War, under such officers as he may detail for that purpose; Provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized to reimburse and pay, out of the amount herein appropriated, the traveling expenses of not exceeding seven members of the council of administration or of the executive committee of the National Association of Vicksburg Veterans for journeys authorized by him to be taken in attendance upon any one meeting in the interest of said celebration."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "boards," insert the following: "fiscal year 1917"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of the amendment, after the word "for," insert the words "the first Tuesday after"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
T. U. SISSON,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
N. P. BRYAN,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two House on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17645) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and prior years, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

No. 1: Authorizes the disbursing officer of the Federal Trade Commission to pay George Rublee his salary as a commissioner from his entry on duty March 16, 1915, to May 15, 1916, the date when his nomination was rejected by the Senate.

No. 2: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, that the Bureau of Efficiency shall continue to occupy its present quarters in the Winder Building.

No. 3: Appropriates $1,158, as proposed by the Senate, to refund to the J. L. da Roza estate of Elk Grove, Cal., internal-revenue taxes paid on grape brandy destroyed by fire while stored in custody of an internal-revenue officer.

No. 4: Strikes out the appropriations of $65,792.53 and $50,359.35, proposed by the Senate, to pay to Walston H. Brown and the estate of Henry A. V. Post, respectively, as a refund of import duties paid in excess of duties imposed by law on steel blooms.

No. 5: Strikes out the appropriation of $20,000, inserted by the Senate, for the removal of the present roof covering of the dome of the Chicago, Ill., post office and the substitution of a new copper covered roof.

No. 6: Inserts the appropriation of $250, proposed by the Senate, for an additional amount for the purchase of a site for the post office at Rogersville, Tenn.

No. 7: Inserts the appropriation of $20,000, proposed by the Senate, for repairs to the laundry of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and strikes out the appropriation of $5,000 for repairs to laundry machinery.

No. 8: Appropriates $100,000, instead of $200,000 as proposed by the Senate, for salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue, deputy collectors, surveyors, clerks, messengers, and janitors in internal-revenue offices.

Nos. 9 and 10: Strikes out the word "copper" from the paragraph appropriating for the collection of the taxes levied in the emergency revenue act and the language inserted by the Senate requiring the employees thereunder to be taken from the civil service and restores the language requiring the Bureau of Efficiency to investigate the methods of transacting the public business in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, modified so as to require a report to be made to the Secretary of the Treasury and to Congress.

No. 11: Strikes out the appropriations inserted by the Senate for the Coast Guard.

No. 12: Inserts the paragraph proposed by the Senate authorizing a credit in the accounts of Robert T. Crane, late United States consul at Rosario, Argentina.

Nos. 13 and 14: Restores the language requiring the judgments and costs of $34,637.36 in favor of the Georgetown Gas Light Co. and the Washington Gas Light Co. to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and appropriates $180,000, as proposed by the Senate, from the policemen's and firemen's relief fund for the fiscal year 1917.

No. 15: Provides that the appropriation of $15,000 for rent for the War Department shall be available for use in the District of Columbia.

No. 16: Inserts the appropriations of $4,000 and $1,300, respectively, for the operation of the fountains on the Union Station Plaza and the lighting of the Plaza, and requires the sums to be paid one-half from the United States Treasury and one-half from the revenues of the District.

No. 17: Strikes out the increase of $15,000 proposed by the Senate in the appropriation for a sodium nitrate storage plant.

No. 18: Makes the appropriation of $5,000 for rental of an office for the aviation section of the Signal Corps available for use in the District of Columbia.

No. 19: Strikes out the appropriation of $12,000, proposed by the Senate, for expenses of the board to investigate the Government manufacture of arms.

No. 20: Fixes the limit of cost of two colliers for the Panama Canal at $1,500,000 each, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,975,000 each, as proposed by the Senate.

No. 21: Appropriates $150,000 for the national celebration and peace jubilee to be held at Vicksburg, Miss.

Nos. 22 and 23: Provides for a clerk at $1,600, as proposed by the Senate, instead of one at $1,400, as proposed by the House, in the office of the Chief of Naval Operations.

No. 24: Makes the appropriation of $2,860 for rent for the Bureau of Yards and Docks available for use in the District of Columbia.

Nos. 25 and 26: Inserts the appropriation of $150,000 for reconstruction of the courthouse in the District of Columbia and the appropriation of $15,500 for rental of temporary quarters for the courts pending that work.

Nos. 27 and 28: Appropriates $500 to pay Charles E. Munroe for services rendered in connection with the explosion in the reception room of the Senate wing of the Capitol and $3,000 for overhauling elevator machinery in the Senate wing of the Capitol and the installation of new control boards.

No. 29: Strikes out the authority, proposed by the Senate, for the use of $6,500 of the appropriation for "surveying public lands" for the employment of surveyors in the General Land Office during the winter season.

Nos. 30 and 31: Strikes out the appropriations of $16,250 and $5,000, respectively, for the National Park Service and the improvement of the Lassen Volcanic National Park, Cal.

No. 32: Appropriates $15,000, as proposed by the Senate, for an interstate wagon road or highway through the Mukuntuweap National Monument, Utah.

Nos. 33, 34, and 35: Appropriates $14,500 to pay the widow of Joseph R. Lamar, late a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and $1,366.67 and $1,250, respectively, for commissioners in the Mount Rainier and Crater Lake National Parks for the fiscal year 1917.

No. 36: Appropriates $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, to pay Tom K. Richie, of Tucson, Ariz., the sum covered into the Treasury on a forfeited cash recognizance in a case pending in the the United States district court, the court having remitted the same on appearance of the defendant for trial.

Nos. 37 and 38: Appropriatiates $125,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $140,000, as proposed by the Senate, for repairing and rebuilding aids to navigation on the Gulf coast, and strikes out the appropriation of $7,000 for completion of the Saratoga, Wyo., fish station.

No. 39: Inserts the word "September" in the date of approval of the employees' compensation act.

Nos. 40, 41, and 42, relating to the Senate: Appropriates $7,500, as proposed by the Senate, to pay the heirs of the late Senator Burleigh; $4,200 to reimburse the official reporters for expenses of clerk hire and other clerical services; and $1,200 to pay Dennis Kerr for extra and expert services rendered to the Committee on Pensions.

No. 43: Appropriates $9,000, as proposed by the Senate, for printing and binding for the Library of Congress.

Nos. 44, 45, 46, 47 and 48: Appropriates for the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims transmitted to Congress after the bill had passed the House.

No. 49: Appropriates for the payment of claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury transmitted to Congress after the bill had passed the House.

Nos. 50 and 51: Corrects a section number of the bill and provides, as proposed by the Senate, for the appointment of John McElroy as a member of the commission in charge of the construction of the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater in the place of Ivory G. Kimball, deceased.

No. 52: Inserts the section, proposed by the Senate, providing for the postponement of the elections in Porto Rico in the event the bill entitled "An act to provide for a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," does not become a law at this session.

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
T. U. SISSON,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me two minutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in order that gentlemen may understand my position this afternoon, I want to state that I had intended to delay the adjournment of Congress for the reason that I believed it was possible to secure the passage of the corrupt-practices act. I now have information that convinces me that the act could not be passed in the Senate in the next two or three days, and any effort to secure its passage would be without avail.

That is the reason why I changed my mind. I make that statement in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND]. That is the reason why I withdraw my objection, and I do not intend now to make any further objection for the obstruction of business.

Mr. GARLAND. I feared that perhaps——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has the floor.

Mr. GARLAND. Who has the floor?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania the balance of my time, if I have any time left.

Mr. GARLAND. The reason I asked the question was that I wanted it perfectly understood, just the same as the gentleman on the other side of the aisle. I feared the influences that seemed to be exerted here this afternoon before the recess had changed the gentleman's mind with reference to the action he might be going to take. I did not know whether that was true or not. I wanted a thorough understanding of the subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So long as the gentleman from Pennsylvania is satisfied, it is all right.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. CANNON. All the way from 30 seconds to 5 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman all the way from 30 seconds to 5 minutes, as much as the gentleman may desire to consume. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have signed this conference report, but I would not have done so, if greater time were allowed, on account of certain minor sins of omission in the conference report—the omission of minor amendments of the Senate which, in my judgment, ought to have been included in the report, and to which the House should have acceded by receding from its disagreement. There is one in particular which, while it does not affect me, is important from the standpoint of the public service, and that is an appropriation of $10,000, or, possibly, $20,000, for putting a copper roof on the Federal building in Chicago. I did not know that there was not a copper roof upon it, but it appears from the estimate that was made that the building is being damaged and the contents are being damaged for want of a new roof. I presume, if we can trust this administration in making estimates and telling the truth, that appropriation might have been made.

Chicago is a very considerable city [laughter]; I think the revenues of the post office in the city of Chicago are second only to those of the post office in the city of New York, and the combined postal revenues of those two cities are larger, possibly, than those of from 15 to 25 States of the Union. But I suppose they can sit when there is no water around and retire when it rains. [Laughter.] The House conferees were not willing to agree to the Senate amendment.

There was another appropriation for which, technically, there was no formal estimate, although there had been an estimate in the last session of Congress—an appropriation to complete a fish hatchery in the State of Wyoming at a cost of $50,000. The first authorization was $25,000. The second authorization was $25,000 more. Only one-half of the last $25,000 authorized was appropriated, as I recall, and I think my recollection is substantially correct. While there was no formal estimate, technically speaking, there was a communication from the Fish Commissioner to the effect that this expenditure of $12,500 and the expenditure of $25,000 previously was of no account unless the remainder was furnished; that until that remaining appropriation was forthcoming the fish hatchery could not be used.

But the House conferees, or a majority of them, refused in these cases, and in two or three other minor matters that I will not refer to, to agree to recede at the close of the session, and I signed the report. I thought it was due to the House to state that much, as the first appropriation was to be made for a roof for the Federal building in Chicago and the second to finish the fish hatchery in Wyoming, which will not be occupied until the full amount authorized by law is appropriated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the two items to which the gentleman from Illinois refers were not agreed to by the managers on the part of the House for very definite and substantial reasons.

The post-office building in Chicago has a glass dome set in copper frames. It is glass because it is intended to permit natural light to come in to the building. There has been some difficulty in making the glass dome water-tight. The Supervising Architect's Office desires to remove the glass dome and substitute a copper dome in its place. While the members of the Committee on Appropriations do not profess to be expert architects or builders, they do believe that there are competent men in the United States who, if engaged, can make that glass dome in the Chicago post office tight—water-tight—so that it may be permitted to perform the functions intended originally, to permit the interior of the building to be lighted.

This matter was not something new upon this bill. It was carefully considered by the committee in the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, and upon all the facts presented to the committee, the committee reached the conclusion that if there were not in the Supervising Architect's Office men competent to determine how this work should be done, it was about time that men should be employed there who would be competent to preserve this building, which was designed and constructed under the supervision of this public officer.

Mr. MANN. Oh, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Unfortunately the Chicago post office was neither designed nor constructed under the supervision of the Supervising Architect's Office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They had some control of it.

Mr. MANN. They did not have as much control as would have been fortunate if they had had it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They might or might not. At all events, it is very apparent that a competent person can make this dome tight—water-tight—and permit whatever little daylight there may be in Chicago during the daytime to filter into the building and not to exclude it by the construction of a solid copper dome in a place of this magnitude.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York ought not to make such a remark about Chicago merely because Chicago is forging ahead of New York City. He ought not to show his jealousy in that way. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, Mr. Speaker, it is not jealousy. If New York were jealous of Chicago she would be in favor of tightening up this glass dome in such a way that no light would filter into this building. The building was designed so as to obtain as much natural light as possible. The great glass dome is there, and the committee, after very careful consideration of the matter in connection with the sundry civil bill, were convinced that it should be and is possible to make that dome tight—water-tight; and without more complete information than has been furnished us, we do not propose to permit this dome to be removed, particularly at the price now prevailing for copper.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BENNET. I will ask my colleague why every time he uses the word "tight" in connection with this roof of this building in the city of Chicago, he is so careful to use the word "water-tight" in connection with it?

Mr. MANN. Because it is in Chicago and not in New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because every time I used the word I happened to look at my colleague from New York, and knowing his strong prohibition sentiments I did not wish him to misunderstand the connection in which the term was used. [Applause.]

Now, as to the item for the fish hatchery in Wyoming. This fish hatchery was authorized, not after consideration by any committee of either House of Congress but in the way that fish hatcheries are frequently created, by an amendment offered in the Senate, to provide a fish hatchery to cost $25,000. There was never any estimate as to what it would cost. There was never any limit of cost fixed on it.

Mr. CANNON. My friend is mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know what statements were made in the conference, but they were wholly at variance with the facts.

Mr. CANNON. The limit of cost, as I understand——

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was never any limit of cost fixed on it.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from New York allow me a suggestion?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to complete the statement about it. I am familiar with it.

Mr. MONDELL. If there was not limit of cost fixed——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was crowded into the bill over my protest.

Mr. MONDELL. If there was not limit of cost fixed, why did the gentleman object to an appropriation of $7,000 to complete it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will go on and state the reason. The $25,000 was appropriated, and it was cheaper for the House to accept that fish hatchery at $25,000 when that particular appropriation bill was up, than it would have been to yield on some other items that were in the bill; and in adjusting the differences between the two Houses it was cheaper to give $25,000 for the fish hatchery in Wyoming. After the money was appropriated and obtained it was found that they could not build a fish hatchery for $25,000. Anybody who ever dreamed of getting enough water by natural means for a fish hatchery in Wyoming had never been in or near the State. So two years ago a request was made for $25,000 additional, and a number of items were mentioned as necessary, and with the assistance of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who was a member of the subcommittee that considered the items in the bill—after very careful consideration—the committee recommended that $18,000 be appropriated. The $18,000 was appropriated. Well, here had been a request for $25,000 and $7,000 of it had not been granted. That was a criminal offense in the estimation of some people, so that when the sundry civil bill reached the Senate this year this $7,000 that had not been given last year, together with two or three other items, were inserted in the bill without any request of the department, and in conference they were eliminated. When this deficiency bill was considered in the Senate this same $7,000 was put back in the bill. The statement was made that the limit of cost had been fixed at $25,000, that the House had declined to appropriate it, and that nothing could be done until this $7,000 was had; and some sharp head of a department, seeing that the amendment had been offered in the Senate, wrote a very commendatory letter to the Senator hoping that it would be adopted, because it could be expended; but the managers upon the part of the House believed that, in view of all the surrounding circumstances and existing conditions, and in view of the necessity for money in great public matters, so long as the department had not felt it sufficiently important even to submit an estimate for this $7,000, there was not much excuse for hunting back in a previous Congress for an estimate in order to justify it.

Against the protest of my colleague, Mr. CANNON, the other managers representing the House were unable to acquiesce in the arguments made in favor of the item, and I think properly so. I simply made this statement about the two items so that nobody would misunderstand the attitude of the House in declining to provide this money at this time, and in the hope a fish hatchery that may be of some benefit and will accomplish some good may be constructed at some place within the State of Wyoming within the appropriation of $43,000 already made.

Mr. MONDELL. Before the gentleman makes the motion to adopt the conference report, will he yield to me five minutes to clarify the matter of these fish hatcheries, for there were two of them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, my only reason in taking the time of the House in connection with the fish-hatchery matter is to clear up in the mind of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—whose mind is ordinarily clear as a bell, but is a little confused in this matter—to clear up his mind in regard to this matter of two fish hatcheries.

There were two fish hatcheries provided for at one and the same time, one in the State of Wyoming and one in the State of Kentucky. The gentleman from New York seems to have got the impression some way that the increased appropriations above the original $25,000 was due to a shortage of water.

That is not true so far as the Wyoming hatchery is concerned but is true so far as the Kentucky hatchery is concerned. Water is apparently so scarce in Kentucky that it became necessary to add to the original appropriation for the purpose of securing water there. The Wyoming hatchery is supplied with water from one of the most magnificent springs in all the world; it has its source of water supply in a fine, clear, bubbling spring, with enough water for a dozen fish hatcheries. The Kentucky fish hatchery, it was discovered after it had been provided for, was almost entirely without the important element of water.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, it is on the banks of the Ohio River, and levees had to be built to keep it from being drowned out.

Mr. MONDELL. You can not use the Ohio River water unfiltered for hatching young fish, and therefore it became necessary in the Kentucky hatchery to make provision for sinking wells and purifying the water in order to make it available.

The additional $7,000 in the case of the Wyoming hatchery is to provide for buildings which will make it the best located and, take it all around, the finest trout hatchery in the world.

Mr. RUCKER. What does it cost to buy the water?

Mr. MONDELL. The water is as free as the mountain air.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman from New York yield me five minutes on these two amendments?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman from California five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed and somewhat surprised and a little bit chagrined and astonished at the conferees' action on amendments 30 and 31.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They were both before the House and the House rejected them.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; but there were very few Members in the House at the time the deficiency bill was up, and if there had been a quorum present there would have been no question but that they would have been placed in the bill by an overwhelming vote. The House rejected them by a vote of 11 to 9.

I proceeded to the Senate and found a willing ear, and the Senate placed the two amendments in the bill. The House and the Senate by a large vote established a National Park Service. The report to the House and the attitude of the Secretary of the Interior shows that it will be to the advantage of the service if these appropriations be made and the officers provided for in the bill made at the present time, particularly amendment 31, the National Volcanic Park in California, for protection and improvement for the fiscal year of 1917, the small sum of $5,000. Congress created the park. It is out of the forest reserve at the present time. The Secretary of the Interior made his estimate, which was approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and sent to the Speaker of the House, but it came late and, of course, could not be put in the sundry civil bill. The only place to get it was in the deficiency bill, to the end that the park might be provided for and cared for during 1917. This is one of the scenic wonders of the world and of California. The National Government has established this national park, the estimates have been provided, and I am sorry that the House committee in their great desire to economize did not see their way sufficiently clear to place the item of $5,000 in the bill.

The local communities are improving the surrounding country. Roads are being built, not only by the counties surrounding this national park but by the State itself. The State is taking great interest in building up the State highways so that the traveling public may obtain the benefits of this park.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it has become the practice in Congress to try to keep out of all bills, except appropriation bills, actual appropriations, with the understanding, where a bill has become a law providing for certain offices, that there will be carried in the proper appropriation bill an appropriation of the necessary money. I think it is a good practice, but it is a practice which can not prevail unless the appropriating committees are willing to do their share and carry the items in the appropriation bill, because the House when it is considering a bill has the right to put in an appropriation necessary to carry the law into effect; and the House would do that were it not for the understanding that the necessary appropriation will be carried in the proper appropriation bill. Recently we passed a law providing for a National Park Service and providing for a Director of the National Park Service and for a few other officials in that office. We did not provide an appropriation in that law specifically, though I am not sure whether one was first carried in the bill or not. I think that under the understanding and practice of the House we had a right to expect that the appropriation necessary for this service would be carried in the deficiency appropriation bill. An estimate had not been presented in time for the Committee on Appropriations to include it in the bill that was reported to the House, but the Senate added an item to the deficiency bill in accordance with an estimate which was made in accordance with the law that we recently passed. I am very sorry that, under the circumstances, the House conferees refused to agree to that appropriation and insisted that it should go out, and I am afraid that the next time one of these matters comes up in the House and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], or myself, endeavors to eliminate the appropriation we will be met with the statement that we can not rely upon the Committee on Appropriations to make the appropriation, and that the only safe thing to do is to carry it in the original organic bill itself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the criticism of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is not justified in this instance. It is true that a National Park Service has been created which provides for five statutory offices at designated salaries and also provides that other service may be engaged not exceeding in amount the sum of about $8,000. The bill passed just about the time the deficiency appropriation bill was reported to the House, around the 27th or 28th of August. The estimate did not reach the House in time to be considered. The estimate requested that all of the money that was authorized for the service be appropriated. The service has not been organized—nothing has been done. The managers upon the part of the House declined to agree to the provisions for this reason. The sundry civil appropriation act for the current year authorizes the employment of five persons in connection with the park service, whose compensation is payable out of the revenues of, and the appropriations for, the various parks. The managers on the part of the House and the conference committee took the position that between now and December, when Congress will be again in session, there will be practically no important work in connection with the national parks of the country. They are all practically closed to the tourists by the 15th of September, so that the important question——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes—oh, that is, outside of the Yosemite, but that is only one of many parks. Practically all of the national parks are closed to the public by the 15th of September, and all of the work necessary in connection with the appropriation for the organization of this park service can be done by the five persons whose employment is now authorized and who are actually employed in connection with this work. If this were an instance where a service had been created and no provision whatever had been made for it, it would be in a different position, but five persons are now employed under the authority carried in the appropriation bill, and they are ample to do everything necessary with the National Park Service between now and the time Congress will have an opportunity to obtain some information as to the character of the other service to be employed and the compensations proposed to be paid to the persons to be employed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. As I gathered from what the gentleman said, there is no disposition on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to prevent this service going into effect at the proper time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all. The gentleman from Illinois recalls that when the deficiency bill was before the House estimates had come in about the time the bill had been reported. Now, the sundry civil bill, in an attempt upon the part of the Committee on Appropriations before the passage of the National Park Service bill, to establish some organization that would make the administration of the parks more effective and more beneficial, had authorized this organization with compensation payable out of various appropriations and revenues that are presumably proper, and the belief was that between now and the time that Congress will be again in session the matter will come up and no serious inconvenience will result.

Mr. MANN. Of course I have not the slightest idea who will be appointed as director of the National Park Service, whether it is somebody now in the service or outside of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I imagine Mr. Marshall, who is now in a position which corresponds to it, who has been for 20 years, I think, in the Geological Survey, and who has been in charge of this work, is the man whom the Secretary of the Interior at least has in mind to put at the head of the Park Service.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman thought that during the next session of Congress there may be provided in one of the deficiency bills some item which will authorize the making of appropriations for this service in time for next year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. All appropriations probably will become law by the 4th of March next, and this service will be provided for, in my opinion—I simply express my opinion—and for the remaining months of this fiscal year, so that it will be organized to do whatever should be done prior to the opening of the parks, the parks opening about the 1st of June.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17645) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 6625. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls.

REVENUE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina presents a report on the revenue bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this conference report.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this conference report, the rule with reference to the printing of conference reports to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the gentleman's intention, if the conference report is considered, to give some explanation of it?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will. The statement will not be ready until about 12 o'clock to-night, but will be printed, with the consent of the House, in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1200).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 9, 14, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 72, 77, 82, 103, 110, 134, 159, 160, 161, 168, 169, 170, 172, 175, 178, 191, 212, 218, 220, 227, 230, 234, 254, 268, and 269.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31½, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 46, 47, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 55½, 56½, 62, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 73, 75, 76, 78, 79, 81, 83, 85, 86, 87, 88, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 104, 105, 107, 108, 108½, 109, 117, 121, 122, 123, 124, 126, 127, 128, 130, 131, 138, 143, 145, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 162, 167, 171, 173, 174, 176, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 188, 189, 190, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 207, 223, 224, 225, 233, 236, 238, 239, 241, 243, 244, 247, 252, 255, 258, 259, 260, and 261, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(c) For the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived from the sale or other disposition of property, real, personal, or mixed, acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of March 1, 1913, shall be the basis for determining the amount of such gain derived."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In addition to the matter inserted by said amendment insert on page 8 of the bill, line 6, after the word "school" the word "district"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Eighth. (a) In the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made, such reasonable allowance to be made in the case of both (a) and (b) under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That when the allowances authorized in (a) and (b) shall equal the capital originally invested, or in case of purchase made prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value as of that date, no further allowance shall be made."

And on page 9 of the bill, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "Provided, That no" and insert a period and the word "No."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In addition to the matter inserted by said amendment insert on page 10 of the bill, line 19, after the word "school," the word "district"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Fifth. In transactions entered into for profit but not connected with his business or trade, the losses actually sustained therein during the year to an amount not exceeding the profits arising therefrom, in the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(a) in the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and productions to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made, such reasonable allowance to be made in the case of both (a) and (b) under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That when the allowance authorized in (a) and (b) shall equal the capital originally invested, or in case of purchase made prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value as of that date, no further allowance shall be made."

And on page 11 of the bill, lines 21 and 22, strike out ": Provided, That no" and insert in lieu thereof a period and the word "No."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 7. (a) That for the purpose of the normal tax only, there shall be allowed as an exemption in the nature of a deduction from the amount of the net income of each of said persons, ascertained as provided herein, the sum of $3,000, plus $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a head of a family, or a married man with a wife living with him, or plus the sum of $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a married woman with a husband living with her; but in no event shall this additional exemption of $1,000 be deducted by both a husband and wife: Provided, That only one deduction of $4,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of both husband and wife when living together: Provided further, That guardians or trustees shall be allowed to make this personal exemption as to income derived from the property of which such guardian or trustee has charge in favor of each ward or cestui que trust: Provided further, That in no event shall a ward or cestui que trust be allowed a greater personal exemption than $3,000, or, if married, $4,000, as provided in this paragraph, from the amount of net income received from all sources. There shall also be allowed an exemption from the amount of the net income of estates of deceased persons during the period of administration or settlement, and of trust or other estates the income of which is not distributed annually or regularly under the provisions of paragraph (b), section 2, the sum of $3,000, including such deductions as are allowed under section 5."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "he has sufficient knowledge of the affairs of such person, trust, or estate to enable him to make such return and that the same is, to the best of his knowledge and belief"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That the term 'dividends' as used in this title shall be held to mean any distribution made or ordered to be made by a corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, out of its earnings or profits accrued since March 1, 1913, and payable to its shareholders, whether in cash or in stock of the corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, which stock dividend shall be considered income, to the amount of its cash value"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the last line of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "by sale of such property"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "and cooperative banks without capital stock organized and operated for mutual purposes and without profit" and a semicolon; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(a) in the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made, such reasonable allowance to be made in the case of both (a) and (b) under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That when the allowance authorized in (a) and (b) shall equal the capital originally invested, or in case of purchase made prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value as of that date, no further allowance shall be made; and (c) in the case of insurance companies, the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds and the sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts:"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 80: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In addition to the matter inserted by said amendment on page 33 of the bill, line 13, after the word "school" insert the word "district"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 84: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(a) of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made, such reasonable allowance to be made in the case of both (a) and (b) under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That when the allowance authorized in (a) and (b) shall equal the capital originally invested, or in case of purchase made prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value as of that date, no further allowance shall be made; and (c) in the case of insurance companies, the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds and the sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts:"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 89: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In addition to the matter inserted by said amendment on page 36 of the bill, line 25, after the word "school," insert the word "district"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 102: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That upon the examination of any return of income made pursuant to this title, the act of August 5, 1909, entitled 'An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,' and the act of October 3, 1913, entitled 'An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' if it shall appear that amounts of tax have been paid in excess of those properly due, the taxpayer shall be permitted to present a claim for refund thereof notwithstanding the provisions of section 3228 of the Revised Statutes" and a semicolon; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(d) That section 3225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3225. When a second assessment is made in case of any list, statement, or return, which in the opinion of the collector or deputy collector was false or fraudulent, or contained any understatement or undervaluation, no tax collected under such assessment shall be recovered by any suit unless it is proved that the said list, statement, or return was not false nor fraudulent and did not contain any understatement or undervaluation; but this section shall not apply to statements or returns made or to be made in good faith under the laws of the United States regarding annual depreciation of oil or gas wells and mines.'"

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 112: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "21"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 113: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "22"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "23"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 115: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted in said amendment insert "24"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 116: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 116, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "25"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 118: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 118, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "200"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 119: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "201"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 120: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "203"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 125: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 125, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "202"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 129: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 129, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "203"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 132: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "205"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 133: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 133, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "204"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 135: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 135, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "205"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 136: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 136, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "203"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 137: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "203"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 139: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 139, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Return shall be made in all cases of estates subject to the tax or where the gross estate at the death of the decedent exceeds $50,000, and in the case of the estate of every nonresident any part of whose gross estate is situated in the United States. If the executor is unable to make a complete return as to any part of the gross estate of the decedent, he shall include in his return a description of such part and the name of every person holding a legal or beneficial interest therein, and upon notice from the collector such person shall in like manner make a return as to such part of the gross estate. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall make all assessments of the tax under the authority of existing administrative special and general provisions of law relating to the assessment and collection of taxes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 140: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 140, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "206"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 141: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 141, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "205"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 142: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 142, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "207"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 144: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 144, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "208"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 146: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "209"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 154: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 154, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "210"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 155: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 155, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "205"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 156: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 156, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "211"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 157: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 157, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "212"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 158: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 158, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "300"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 163: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 163, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 301. (1) That every person manufacturing (a) gunpowder and other explosives, excepting blasting powder and dynamite used for industrial purposes; (b) cartridges, loaded and unloaded, caps or primers, exclusive of those used for industrial purposes; (c) projectiles, shells, or torpedoes of any kind, including shrapnel, loaded or unloaded, or fuses, or complete rounds of ammunition; (d) firearms of any kind and appendages, including small arms, cannon, machine guns, rifles, and bayonets; (e) electric motor boats, submarine or submersible vessels or boats; or (f) any part of any of the articles mentioned in (b), (c), (d), or (e), shall pay for each taxable year, in addition to the income tax imposed by Title I, an excise tax of 12½ per cent upon the entire net profits actually received or accrued for said year from the sale or disposition of such articles manufactured within the United States: Provided, however, That no person shall pay such tax upon net profits received during the year 1916 derived from the sale and delivery of the articles enumerated in this section under contracts executed and fully performed by such person prior to January 1, 1916.

"(2) This section shall cease to be of effect at the end of one year after the termination of the present European war, which shall be evidenced by the proclamation of the President of the United States declaring such war to have ended.

"SEC. 302. That in computing net profits under the provisions of this title, for the purpose of the tax there shall be allowed as deductions from the gross amount received or accrued for the taxable year from the sale or disposition of such articles manufactured within the United States, the following items:

"(a) The cost of raw materials entering into the manufacture;

"(b) Running expenses, including rentals, cost of repairs and maintenance, heat, power, insurance, management, salaries, and wages;

"(c) Interest paid within the taxable year on debts or loans contracted to meet the needs of the business, and the proceeds of which have been actually used to meet such needs;

"(d) Taxes of all kinds paid during the taxable year with respect to the business or property relating to the manufacture;

"(e) Losses actually sustained within the taxable year in connection with the business of manufacturing such articles, including losses from fire, flood, storm, or other casualty, and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise; and

"(f) A reasonable allowance according to the conditions peculiar to each concern, for amortization of the values of buildings and machinery, account being taken of the exceptional depreciation of special plants.

"SEC. 303. If any person manufactures any article specified in section 301 and, during any taxable year or part thereof, whether under any agreement, arrangement, or understanding, or otherwise, sells or disposes of any such article at less than the fair market price obtainable therefor, either (a) in such manner as directly or indirectly to benefit such person or any person directly or indirectly interested in the business of such person, or (b) with intent to cause such benefit, the gross amount received or accrued for such year or part thereof from the sale or disposition of such article shall be taken to be the amount which would have been received or accrued from the sale or disposition of such article if sold at the fair market price.

"SEC. 304. On or before the 1st day of March, 1917, and the 1st day of March in each year thereafter a true and accurate return under oath shall be made by each person manufacturing articles specified in section 301, to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which such person has his principal office or place of business, in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, setting forth specifically the gross amount of income received or accrued from the sale or disposition of the articles specified in section 301, and from the total thereof deducting the aggregate items of allowance authorized in section 302, and such other particulars as to the gross receipts and items of allowance, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may require.

"SEC. 305. All such returns shall be transmitted forthwith by the collector to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall, as soon as practicable, assess the tax found due and notify the person making such return of the amount of tax for which such person is liable, and such person shall pay the tax to the collector on or before 30 days from the date of such notice.

"SEC. 306. If the Secretary of the Treasury or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have reason to be dissatisfied with the return as made, or if no return is made, the commissioner is authorized to make an investigation and to determine the amount of net profits and may assess the proper tax accordingly. He shall notify the person making, or who should have made, such return and shall proceed to collect the tax in the same manner as provided in this title, unless the person so notified shall file a written request for a hearing with the commissioner within 30 days after the date of such notice; and on such hearing the burden of establishing to the satisfaction of the commissioner that the gross amount received or accrued or the amount of net profits, as determined by the commissioner, is incorrect, shall devolve upon such person.

"SEC. 307. The tax may be assessed on any person for the time being owning or carrying on the business, or on any person acting as agent for that person in carrying on the business, or where a business has ceased, on the person who owned or carried on the business, or acted as agent in carrying on the business immediately before the time at which the business ceased.

"SEC. 308. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized, personally or by his agent, to examine the books, accounts, and records of any person subject to this tax.

"SEC. 309. No person employed by the United States shall communicate, or allow to be communicated to any person not legally entitled thereto, any information obtained under the provisions of this title, or allow any such person to inspect or have access to any return furnished under the provisions of this title.

"SEC. 310. Whoever violates any of the provisions of this title or the regulations made thereunder, or who knowingly makes false statements in any return, or refuses to give such information as may be called for, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall, in addition to paying any tax to which he is liable, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 311. All administrative, special, and general provisions of law relating to the assessment and collection of taxes not specifically repealed are hereby made to apply to this title, so far as applicable and not inconsistent with its provisions.

"SEC. 312. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make all necessary regulations for carrying out the provisions of this title, and may require any person subject to such provisions to furnish him with further information whenever in his judgment the same is necessary to collect the tax provided for herein."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 164: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 164, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 165: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 165, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 401. That natural wine within the meaning of this act shall be deemed to be the product made from the normal alcoholic fermentation of the juice of sound, ripe grapes, without addition or abstraction, except such as may occur in the usual cellar treatment of clarifying and aging: Provided, however, That the product made from the juice of sound, ripe grapes by complete fermentation of the must under proper cellar treatment and corrected by the addition (under the supervision of a gauger or storekeeper-gauger in the capacity of gauger) of a solution of water and pure cane, beet, or dextrose sugar (containing, respectively, not less than 95 per cent of actual sugar, calculated on a dry basis) to the must or to the wine, to correct natural deficiencies, when such addition shall not increase the volume of the resultant product more than 35 per cent, and the resultant product does not contain less than five parts per thousand of acid before fermentation and not more than 13 per cent of alcohol after complete fermentation, shall be deemed to be wine within the meaning of this act, and may be labeled, transported, and sold as 'wine,' qualified by the name of the locality where produced, and may be further qualified by the name of its own particular type or variety: And provided further, That wine as defined in this section may be sweetened with cane sugar or beet sugar or pure condensed grape must and fortified under the provisions of this act, and wines so sweetened or fortified shall be considered sweet wine within the meaning of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 166: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 166, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "402"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 177: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 177, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the words "or section 401 of this act" and a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 187: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 187, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "1½ cents"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 201: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 201, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the section number proposed by the Senate amendment strike out "55" and insert "403"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 202: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 202, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the section number contained in the Senate amendment strike out "56" and insert "404"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 203: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 203, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert at the beginning of the amendment the following: "Sec. 405"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 204: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 204, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the section number proposed by the Senate amendment strike out the numeral "57" and insert "406"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 205: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 205, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "407"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 206: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 206, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Every corporation, joint-stock company or association, now or hereafter organized in the United States for profit and having a capital stock represented by shares, and every insurance company, now or hereafter organized under the laws of the United States, or any State or Territory of the United States, shall pay annually a special excise tax with respect to the carrying on or doing business by such corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, equivalent to 50 cents for each $1,000 of the fair value of its capital stock and in estimating the value of capital stock the surplus and undivided profits shall be included: Provided, That in the case of insurance companies such deposits and reserve funds as they are required by law or contract to maintain or hold for the protection of or payment to or apportionment among policyholders shall not be included. The amount of such annual tax shall in all cases be computed on the basis of the fair average value of the capital stock for the preceding year: Provided, That for the purpose of this tax an exemption of $99,000 shall be allowed from the capital stock as defined in this paragraph of each corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company. And provided further, That a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, actually paying the tax imposed by section 301 of Title III of this act shall be entitled to a credit as against the tax imposed by this paragraph equal to the amount of the tax so actually paid: And provided further, That this tax shall not be imposed upon any corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company not engaged in business during the preceding taxable year, or which is exempt under the provisions of section 11, Title I, of this act.

"Every corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company, now or hereafter organized for profit under the laws of any foreign country and engaged in business in the United States, shall pay annually a special excise tax with respect to the carrying on or doing business in the United States by such corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company, equivalent to 50 cents for each $1,000 of the capital actually invested in the transaction of its business in the United States: Provided, That in the case of insurance companies such deposits or reserve funds as they are required by law or contract to maintain or hold in the United States for the protection of or payment to or apportionment among policyholders shall not be included. The amount of such annual tax shall in all cases be computed on the basis of the average amount of capital so invested during the preceding year: Provided, That for the purpose of this tax an exemption from the amount of capital so invested shall be allowed equal to such proportion of $99,000 as the amount so invested bears to the total amount invested in the transaction of business in the United States or elsewhere: Provided further, That this exemption shall be allowed only if such corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company makes return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under regulations prescribed by him, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, of the amount of capital invested in the transaction of business outside the United States: And provided further, That a corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company, actually paying the tax imposed by section 301 of Title III of this act, shall be entitled to a credit as against the tax imposed by this paragraph equal to the amount of the tax so actually paid: And provided further, That this tax shall not be imposed upon any corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company not engaged in business during the preceding taxable year, or which is exempt under the provisions of section 11, Title I, of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 208: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 208, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Sixth. Proprietors of theaters, museums, and concert halls, where a charge for admission is made, having a seating capacity of not more than 250, shall pay $25; having a seating capacity of more than 250 and not exceeding 500, shall pay $50; having a seating capacity exceeding 500 and not exceeding 800, shall pay $75; having a seating capacity of more than 800, shall pay $100. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls or armories rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theater: Provided, That in cities, towns, or villages of 5,000 inhabitants or less the amount of such payment shall be one-half of that above stated: Provided further, That whenever any such edifice is under lease at the passage of this act, the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to said lease."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 209: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 209, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the said amendment insert the following: "except in private homes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 210: That the house recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 210, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "408"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 211: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 211, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert a comma and the following: ", including small cigars weighing not more than 3 pounds per 1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 213: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 213, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "409"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 214: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 214, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "410"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 215: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 215, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "411"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 216: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 216, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "412"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 217: That the house recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 217, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 413. That all internal-revenue agents and inspectors be granted leave of absence with pay, which shall not be cumulative, not to exceed thirty days in any calendar year, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 219: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 219, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 221: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 221, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Group I. Acenaphthene, anthracene having a purity of less than 25 per cent benzol, carbazol having a purity of less than 25 per cent, cresol, cumol, fluorene, metacresol having a purity of less than 90 per cent, methylanthracene, methylnaphthalene, naphthalene having a solidifying point less than 79 degrees centigrade, orthocresol having a purity of less than 90 per cent, paracresol having a purity of less than 90 per cent, pyridin, quinolin, toluol, xylol, crude coal tar, pitch of coal tar, dead or creosote oil, anthracene oil, all other distillates which on being subjected to distillation yield in the portion distilling below 200 degrees centigrade a quantity of tar acids less than 5 per cent of the original distillate, and all other products that are found naturally in coal tar, whether produced or obtained from coal tar or other source, and not otherwise specially provided for in this title, shall be exempt from duty."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 222: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 222, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the said amendment insert:

"Group II. Amidonaphthol, amidophenol, amidosalicylic acid, anilin oil, anilin salts, anthracene having a purity of 25 per cent or more, anthraquinone, benzoic acid, benzaldehyde, benzylchloride, benzidin, binitrobenzol, binitrochlorobenzol, binitronaphthalene, binitrotoluol, carbazol having a purity of 25 per cent or more, chlorophthalic acid, cumidin, dimethylanilin, dianisidin, dioxynaphthalene, diphenylamin, metacresol having a purity of 90 per cent or more, methylanthraquinone, metanilic acid, naphthalene having a solidifying point of 79° C. or above, naphthylamin, naphthol, naphthylenediamin, nitrobenzol, nitrotoluol, nitronaphthalene, nitranilin, nitrophenylenediamin, nitrotoluylenediamin, orthocresol having a purity of 90 per cent or more, paracresol having a purity of 90 per cent or more, phenol, phthalic acid, phthalic anhydride, phenylenediamin, phenylnaphthylamin, resorcin, salicylic acid, sulphanilic acid, toluidin, tolidin, tolylenediamin, xylidin, or any sulphoacid or sulphoacid salt of any of the foregoing, all similar products obtained, derived, or manufactured in whole or in part from the products provided for in Group I, and all distillates which on being subjected to distillation yield in the portion distilling below 200° C. a quantity of tar acids equal to more than 5 per cent of the original distillate, all the foregoing not colors, dyes, or stains, photographic chemicals, medicinals, flavors, or explosives, and not otherwise provided for in this title, and provided for in the paragraphs of the act of October 3, 1913, which are hereinafter specifically repealed by section 502, 15 per cent ad valorem."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 226: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 226, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "501"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 228: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 228, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 229: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 229, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "(except natural and synthetic alizarin, and dyes obtained from alizarin, anthracene, and carbazol; natural and synthetic indigo and all indigoids, whether or not obtained from indigo; and medicinals and flavors)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 231: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 231, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 232: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 232, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "502"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 235: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 235, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"TITLE VI.—PRINTING PAPER.

"SEC. 600. That paragraph 322, Schedule M, and paragraph 567 of the free list of the act entitled 'An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' approved October 3, 1913, be amended so that the same shall read as follows:

"'322. Printing paper (other than paper commercially known as handmade or machine handmade paper, japan paper, and imitation japan paper by whatever name known), unsized, sized, or glued, suitable for the printing of books and newspapers, but not for covers or bindings, not specially provided for in this section, valued above 5 cents per pound, 12 per cent ad valorem: Provided, however, That if any country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government shall impose any export duty, export license fee, or other charge of any kind whatsoever (whether in the form of additional charge or license fee or otherwise) upon printing paper, wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp, there shall be imposed upon printing paper, valued above 5 cents per pound, when imported either directly or indirectly from such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government, an additional duty equal to the amount of the highest export duty or other export charge imposed by such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government, upon either printing paper or upon an amount of wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp necessary to manufacture such printing paper.

"'567. Printing paper (other than paper commercially known as handmade or machine handmade paper, japan paper, and imitation japan paper by whatever name known), unsized, sized, or glued, suitable for the printing of books and newspapers, but not for covers or bindings, not specially provided for in this section, valued at not above 5 cents per pound, decalcomania paper not printed.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 237: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 237, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 240: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 240, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "701"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 242: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 242, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "702"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 245: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 245, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "703"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 246: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 246, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "704"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 248: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 248, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "705"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 249: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 249, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "706"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 250: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 250, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "707"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 251: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 251, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "708"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 253: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 253, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "709"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 256: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 256, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 257: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 257, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "801"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 262: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 262, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "802"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 263: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 263, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert: "Provided, That the above shall not be interpreted to prevent the establishing in this country on the part of a foreign producer of an exclusive agency for the sale in the United States of the products of said foreign producer or merchant, nor to prevent such exclusive agent from agreeing not to use, purchase, or deal in the article of any other person, but this proviso shall not be construed to exempt from the provisions of this section any article imported by such exclusive agent if such agent is required by the foreign producer or if it is agreed between such agent and such foreign producer that any agreement, understanding or condition set out in this section shall be imposed by such agent upon the sale or other disposition of such article to any person in the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 264: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 264, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "803," and on page 100 of the bill, line 15, strike out the words "six hundred and two" and insert in lieu thereof the words "eight hundred and two"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 265: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 265, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 804. That whenever any country, dependency, or colony shall prohibit the importation of any article the product of the soil or industry of the United States and not injurious to health or morals, the President shall have power to prohibit, during the period such prohibition is in force, the importation into the United States of similar articles, or in case the United States does not import similar articles from that country, then other articles, the products of such country, dependency, or colony.

"And the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, shall make such rules and regulations as are necessary for the execution of the provisions of this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 266: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 266, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 805. That whenever during the existence of a war in which the United States is not engaged the President shall be satisfied that there is reasonable ground to believe that under the laws, regulations, or practices of any country, colony, or dependency contrary to the law and practice of nations, the importation into their own or any other country, dependency, or colony of any article the product of the soil or industry of the United States and not injurious to health or morals is prevented or restricted the President is authorized and empowered to prohibit or restrict, during the period such prohibition or restriction is in force, the importation into the United States of similar or other articles, products of such country, dependency, or colony as in his opinion the public interest may require; and in such case he shall make proclamation stating the article or articles which are prohibited from importation into the United States; and any person or persons who shall import, or attempt or conspire to import, or be concerned in importing, such article or articles into the United States contrary to the prohibition in such proclamation, shall be liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $50,000, or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, in the discretion of the court. The President may change, modify, revoke, or renew such proclamation in his discretion."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 267: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 267, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 806. That whenever, during the existence of a war in which the United States is not engaged, the President shall be satisfied that there is reasonable ground to believe that any vessel, American or foreign, is, on account of the laws, regulations, or practices of a belligerent Government, making or giving any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage in any respect whatsoever to any particular person, company, firm, or corporation, or any particular description of traffic in the United States or its possessions or to any citizens of the United States residing in neutral countries abroad, or is subjecting any particular person, company, firm, or corporation or any particular description of traffic in the United States or its possessions, or any citizens of the United States residing in neutral countries abroad to any undue or unreasonable prejudice, disadvantage, injury, or discrimination in regard to accepting, receiving, transporting, or delivering, or refusing to accept, receive, transfer, or deliver any cargo, freight or passengers, or in any other respect whatsoever, he is hereby authorized and empowered to direct the detention of such vessels by withholding clearance or by formal notice forbidding departure, and to revoke, modify, or renew any such direction.

"That whenever, during the existence of a war in which the United States is not engaged, the President shall be satisfied that there is reasonable ground to believe that under the laws, regulations, or practices of any belligerent country or government American ships or American citizens are not accorded any of the facilities of commerce which the vessels or citizens of that belligerent country enjoy in the United States or its possessions, or are not accorded by such belligerent equal privileges or facilities of trade with vessels or citizens of any nationality other than that of such belligerent, the President is hereby authorized and empowered to withhold clearance from one or more vessels of such belligerent country until such belligerent shall restore to such American vessels and American citizens reciprocal liberty of commerce and equal facilities of trade; or the President may direct that similar privileges and facilities, if any, enjoyed by vessels or citizens of such belligerent in the United States or its possessions be refused to vessels or citizens of such belligerent; and in such case he shall make proclamation of his direction, stating the facilities and privileges which shall be refused, and the belligerent to whose vessels or citizens they are to be refused, and thereafter the furnishing of such prohibited privileges and facilities to any vessel or citizen of the belligerent named in such proclamation shall be unlawful; and he may change, modify, revoke, or renew such proclamation; and any person or persons who shall furnish or attempt or conspire to furnish or be concerned in furnishing or in the concealment of furnishing facilities or privileges to ships or persons contrary to the prohibition in such proclamation shall be liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $50,000 or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"In case any vessel which is detained by virtue of this act shall depart or attempt to depart from the jurisdiction of the United States without clearance or other lawful authority, the owner or master or person or persons having charge or command of such vessel shall be severally liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000, or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, and in addition such vessel shall be forfeited to the United States.

"That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 270: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 270, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "IX"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 271: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 271, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by Senate amendment insert "900"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 272: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 272, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the section number proposed by said amendment strike out "107" and insert "901"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 273: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 273, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 902. That unless otherwise herein specially provided, this act shall take effect on the day following its passage, and all provisions of any act or acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

CLAUDE KITCHIN,
HENRY T. RAINEY,
LINCOLN DIXON,
CORDELL HULL,
Managers on the part of the House.

F. M. SIMMONS,
HOKE SMITH,
JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
WILLIAM HUGHES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment No. 1: The Senate placed the repealing clause and the clause providing the date of effectiveness of the act, when said date is not otherwise specified, immediately following the enacting clause. The Senate recedes from its amendment, which permits the aforementioned provisions to come at the close of the act as the last section as provided in the House bill.

Amendment No. 2: This amendment is merely a clerical change. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 3: The House bill provided that the total net income in excess of $500,000 should be taxed 10 per cent. The Senate amendment provides that the rate of 10 per cent shall be imposed upon the amount by which the net income exceeds $500,000 and does not exceed $1,000,000, 11 per cent upon the amount by which the net income exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $1,500,000, 12 per cent upon the amount by which the net income exceeds $1,500,000 and does not exceed $2,000,000, 13 per cent upon the amount by which the net income exceeds $2,000,000. And the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8: These amendments are merely clerical changes, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 9: The House bill provided that stock dividends made out of earnings or profits should be considered income to the amount of its cash value, and the Senate recedes.

Amendments Nos. 10, 11, 12, and 13: These amendments are merely clerical changes, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 14: This amendment is a clerical change, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 15: This amendment adds the words "or beneficiaries," and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 16: The Senate amendment provides that—

"For the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived from a sale or other disposition of real property, the profits realized within the year from the sale or other disposition of any real estate purchased within two years previous to the close of the year for which such income is estimated shall be the basis for determining the amount of such gain so derived from such sale or other disposition thereof."

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment, and agrees to the following amendment in lieu of the Senate amendment:

"(c) For the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived from the sale or other disposition of property, real, personal, or mixed, acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of March 1, 1913, shall be the basis for determining the amount of such gain derived."

Amendments Nos. 17, 18, and 19: These amendments are merely clerical changes, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 20: This amendment exempts securities issued under the provisions of the Federal farm-loan act of July 17, 1916, from the income-tax provisions; and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 21 and 22: These amendments are merely clerical changes, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 23: This amendment is merely a clerical change, and the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with the amendment adding, after the word "school," on page 8 of the official print of the bill, line 6, the word "district."

Amendments Nos. 24, 25, 26, and 27: These amendments are merely clerical changes, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 28: The Senate amendment provides:

"Provided, That for the purpose of ascertaining the loss sustained from the sale or other disposition of property, real, personal, or mixed, acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of March 1, 1913, shall be the basis for determining the amount of such loss sustained."

And the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 29 and 30: These amendments are merely clerical changes. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 31: This Senate amendment provided that: "(a) In the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow but by the settled production or regular flow under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof, not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made; (c) and in the case of timber a reasonable allowance for stumpage not in excess of the market value of the standing timber actually sawed and sold during the year for which such return and computation are made." The House agreed to the Senate amendment, with an amendment providing that the Secretary of the Treasury should have power to make rules and regulations with reference to the allowance allowed for the exhaustion of oil and gas wells and mines and eliminating the provision with reference to timber, as this portion of the amendment was not necessary in view of the fair market value of property on March 1, 1913, being agreed upon as the date for the basis of determining the amount of the gain derived from the sale or disposition of property.

Amendment No. 31½. This amendment provides that for the purpose of the normal tax only the income embraced in a personal return shall be credited with the amount received as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of a trustee. And the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 32, 33, and 34: These amendments are merely clerical changes. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 35: The Senate amendment is only a clerical change. And the House recedes with an amendment inserting, on page 10 of the official print of the bill, line 19, after the word "school," the word "district."

Amendments Nos. 36, 37, and 38: These amendments are merely clerical changes. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 39: The Senate amendment provides: "Provided, That for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of such loss or losses sustained in trade, or speculative transactions not in trade, from the same or any kind of property acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of March 1, 1913, shall be the basis for determining the amount of such loss or losses sustained." And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 40: The Senate amendment provided:

"In lawful business transactions entered into but not connected with his regular business or trade, the losses actually sustained therein during the year."

And the House recedes from its disagreement with the following amendment in lieu of the Senate amendment:

"In transactions entered into for profit but not connected with his business or trade, the losses actually sustained therein during the year to an amount not exceeding the profits arising therefrom, in the United States."

Amendment No. 41: The Senate amendment is a change in the paragraph number. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 42: The Senate amendment is a clerical change. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 43: The Senate amendment is a change in the paragraph number. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 44: The Senate amendment provides that:

"(a) In case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made; (c) and in the case of timber a reasonable allowance for stumpage not in excess of the market value of the standing timber actually sawed and sold during the year for which such return and computation are made."

The House agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment providing that the Secretary of the Treasury should have power to make rules and regulations with reference to the allowance allowed for the exhaustion of oil and gas wells and mines, and eliminating the provision with reference to timber, as this portion of the amendment was not necessary in view of the fair market value of property on March 1, 1913, being agreed upon as the date for the basis of determining the amount of the gain derived from the sale or disposition of property.

Amendment No. 45: The Senate amendment followed the present law with reference to the $3,000 and $4,000 exemption for unmarried and married persons, respectively. The House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment making the $4,000 exemption extend to the heads of families as well as to married persons.

Amendments Nos. 46, 47, and 48: These Senate amendments are clerical changes, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 49: This amendment relates to the oath to be made by a fiduciary in making his return. The House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment with an amendment which in substance incorporates both the House and Senate provisions.

Amendment No. 50: The Senate amendment provides that no return of income not exceeding $3,000 shall be required of estates or trusts, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 51: The Senate amendment is a necessary clerical change, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 52: This amendment relates to the income return of persons carrying on business in partnership and more clearly sets out the intent of the provisions than the House provision, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 53: This amendment relates to the making of the return and should be carried over to the administrative section of the title. The effect of the Senate amendment is to strike the provision out of the individual section and to carry it over to the administrative section as a new section, which will be known as section 19, and the House recedes.

Amendment Nos. 54, 55, and 55½: These amendments are clerical changes, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 56: The Senate amendment provides that: "No penalty shall be imposed or collected from any person or corporation for failing heretofore or hereafter to retain a tax at the source if it is shown satisfactorily that no tax in fact was or would be due by reason of an exemption for which no claim was filed with such person or corporation by the person entitled to such exemption," and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 56½: The Senate amendment is a clerical change, and the Senate recedes.

Amendments Nos. 57 and 58: The Senate amendments made it unnecessary for lessees to withhold rent, and the Senate recedes.

Amendments Nos. 59 and 60: These Senate amendments relate to the personal liability of persons withholding the tax at the source. The House provision made persons withholding the tax at the source liable for the tax. The Senate provision made such persons liable for the tax if they failed to withhold it, and provided that they should not be liable for any penalty if they made certified returns of information concerning the same to the collector of the district. The Senate recedes from both of these amendments.

Amendment No. 61: The Senate amendment provides that a person whose tax is withheld at the source may claim his exemptions by filing said claim with the collector of internal revenue of the district of his residence or chief place of business. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 62: The Senate amendment provides that if any person, for the purpose of obtaining any allowance or reduction by virtue of a claim for such exemption, knowingly makes any false or fraudulent representation, that he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $300, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 63: The Senate amendment provided that dividends should include any distribution of the profits or earnings of a corporation or association accrued since March 1, 1913, whether made in cash or stock dividends. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment providing that stock dividends made out of the earnings or profits shall be considered income to the amount of its cash value.

Amendment No. 64: The Senate amendment provided "for the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived or loss sustained from the sale or other disposition by a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, of property, real, personal, or mixed, acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of March 1, 1913, shall be the basis for determining the amount of such gain derived or loss sustained by sale of such property." The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment striking out the following last five words of the amendment inserted by the Senate: "by sale of such property."

Amendment No. 65: The Senate amendment provides that the income of cooperative banks organized and operated for mutual purposes and without profit shall be exempt from the income-tax provisions. The House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment with an amendment exempting cooperative banks without capital stock organized and operated for mutual purposes and without profit.

Amendment No. 66: The Senate amendment is a clerical change. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 67: The Senate amendment exempts mutual ditch or irrigation companies from the income-tax provisions. And the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 68 and 69: The Senate amendments are clerical changes. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 70: The Senate amendment exempts Federal land banks and national farm-loan associations from the income-tax provisions. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 71: The Senate amendment exempts joint-stock land banks as to income derived from bonds or debentures of other joint-stock land banks or any Federal land bank belonging to such joint-stock land bank from the income-tax provisions. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 72: The Senate amendment eliminated the provisions of the House bill which limited the deduction of the rentals paid by corporations as a condition to the continued use or possession of property to the case of property to which the corporation has not taken or is not taking title or in which it has no equity. And the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 73: The Senate amendment adds losses charged off and not compensated by insurance or otherwise to the corporation-deduction provision. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 74: The Senate amendment provided that "(a) in the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production, to be ascertained not by the flush flow but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines, a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof, not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made; (c) and in the case of timber, a reasonable allowance for stumpage, not in excess of the market value of the standing timber actually sawed and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; (d) and in the case of insurance companies, the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds and the sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts."

The House agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment providing that the Secretary of the Treasury should have power to make rules and regulations with reference to the allowance allowed for the exhaustion of oil and gas wells and mines and eliminating the provision with reference to timber, as this portion of the amendment was not necessary in view of the fair market value of property on March 1, 1913, being agreed upon as the date for the basis of determining the amount of the gain derived from the sale or disposition of property.

Amendment No. 75: The Senate amendment provided that mutual employers' liability and mutual workmen's compensation and mutual casualty insurance companies requiring their members to make premium deposits to provide for losses and expenses shall not return as income any portion of the premium deposits returned to their policyholders. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 76: The Senate amendment is a clerical change. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 77: The House provided that in the case of indebtedness wholly secured by property collateral, tangible or intangible, the subject of sale or hypothecation in the ordinary business of such corporation, joint-stock company, or association as a dealer only in the property constituting such collateral, or in loaning the funds thereby procured, the total interest paid by such corporation, company, or association within the year on any such indebtedness may be deducted as a part of its expense of doing business. And the Senate recedes from its amendment striking out the word "only."

Amendments Nos. 78 and 79: The Senate amendments are clerical changes. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 80: The Senate amendment is a clerical change. And the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment adding, after the word "school," on page 33 of the official print of the bill, line 13, the word "district."

Amendment No. 81: This amendment is a mere clerical change. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 82: The Senate amendment eliminated the provision of the House bill which limited the deduction of the rentals paid by corporations as a condition to the continued use or possession of property, to the case of property to which the corporation has not taken or is not taking title, or in which it has no equity. And the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 83: This amendment is a clerical change. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 84: The Senate amendment provides that "in the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made; (c) and in the case of timber, a reasonable allowance for stumpage not in excess of the market value of the standing timber actually sawed and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; (d) and in the case of insurance companies, the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds and the sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts." The House agreed to the Senate amendment, providing that the Secretary of the Treasury should have power to make rules and regulations with reference to the allowance allowed for the exhaustion of oil and gas wells and mines and eliminating the provision with reference to timber, as this portion of the amendment was not necessary in view of the fair market value of property on March 1, 1913, being agreed upon as the date for the basis of determining the amount of the gain derived from the sale or disposition of property.

Amendment No. 85: The Senate amendment provided that mutual employers' liability and mutual workmen's compensation and mutual casualty insurance companies requiring their members to make premium deposits to provide for losses and expenses shall not return as income any portion of the premium deposits returned to their policyholders. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 86: This amendment is merely a clerical change. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 87: This amendment prevents the deduction, in the case of bonds or other indebtedness which have been issued with a guaranty that the interest payable thereon shall be free from taxation, for the payment of any tax paid pursuant to such guaranty, instead of merely the income tax, as provided in the House bill. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 88: This amendment is a clerical change. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 89: The Senate amendment is only a clerical change. And the House recedes with an amendment inserting, on page 36 of the official print of the bill, line 25, after the word "school," the word "district."

Amendments Nos. 90, 91, and 92: These amendments are clerical changes. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 93: This amendment provides that if a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company has no principal place of business, office, or agency in the United States, then the return shall be made to the collector of internal revenue at Baltimore, Md. And the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, and 99: These amendments are clerical changes. And the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 100 and 101: These amendments make the income-tax provisions relating to withholding at the source applicable to nonresident alien individuals apply to nonresident alien firms, copartnerships, companies, corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 102: This amendment provides that if an amount in excess of the amount properly due under an income-tax return required under the provisions of the act of August 5, 1909, the act of October 3, 1913, or this act has been paid into the Treasury a refund may be had of the excess amount paid, notwithstanding the provision of section 3228 of the Revised Statutes. And the House recedes with an amendment specifying the titles of the acts of August 5, 1909, and October 3, 1913.

Amendments Nos. 103 and 104: These amendments are clerical changes. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 105: This amendment gives the Commissioner of Internal Revenue authority to grant corporations or individuals a reasonable extension of time in meritorious cases to make their returns. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 106: The Senate amendment provides that section 3225 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to a statement made in good faith, regarding annual depreciation of oil or gas wells, mines, and timberlands. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment striking out "timberlands" so that this provision will only apply to statements and returns with reference to depreciation of oil and gas wells and mines.

Amendments Nos. 107 and 108: Are merely clerical changes. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 108½: This amendment provides that "where any tax heretofore due and payable has been duly paid by the taxpayer, it shall not be re-collected from any person or corporation required to retain it at its source, nor shall any penalty be imposed or collected in such cases from the taxpayer, or such person or corporation whose duty it was to retain it, for failure to return or pay the same, unless such failure was fraudulent and for the purpose of evading payment." And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 109: This amendment relates to the making of the return and was carried in the House bill in the individual section. As an administrative provision it is more properly placed with the administrative sections. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 110: The Senate amendment provided that "Nothing in this title shall be construed to release a taxable person from liability for income tax, and any contract hereafter entered into for payment of any interest, rent, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical payment without allowing any deduction authorized to be made by this title or for the reimbursement of any amount so deducted shall be void." And the Senate recedes.

Amendments Nos. 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, and 116: These amendments are changes in section numbers. And the House recedes from its disagreement with the amendment numbering the sections numerically.

Amendment No. 117: This amendment provides that nothing in section 25 shall conflict with that portion of section 10 under which the taxpayer has fixed its own fiscal year. And the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 118, 119, and 120: These amendments are changes in section numbers, and the House recedes from its disagreement to these amendments with amendments numbering the sections properly.

Amendments Nos. 121 and 122: These are clerical changes. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 123: The Senate amendment limits the 5 per cent rate to net estates exceeding $450,000 and not exceeding $1,000,000, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 124: The Senate amendment introduces a new classification, as follows:

A 6 per cent rate upon the amount by which such net estate exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $2,000,000;

A 7 per cent rate upon the amount by which such net estate exceeds $2,000,000 and does not exceed $3,000,000;

A 8 per cent rate upon the amount by which such net estate exceeds $3,000,000 and does not exceed $4,000,000;

A 9 per cent rate upon the amount by which such net estate exceeds $4,000,000 and does not exceed $5,000,000; and

A 10 per cent rate upon the amount by which such net estate exceeds $5,000,000, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 125: This amendment is a change in section number, and the House recedes from its disagreement with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendment No. 126: The Senate amendment changes a printer's error. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 127: The Senate amendment strikes out the words "and adequate," leaving the consideration to be a fair one, instead of a fair and adequate one. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 128: The Senate amendment changes the period prior to death during which a transfer of property shall be deemed to have been made in contemplation of death, from four years to two years. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 129: This amendment is a change in section number. And the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendments Nos. 130 and 131: The Senate amendments are clerical. And the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 132 and 133: These amendments are changes in section numbers. And the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments with amendments numbering the sections properly.

Amendment No. 134: The Senate amendment changes the time of the beginning of interest on unpaid taxes upon estates to one year after the decedent's death instead of from the time of death. The Senate recedes.

Amendments Nos. 135, 136, and 137: These amendments are changes in section numbers. And the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments with amendments numbering the sections properly.

Amendments Nos. 138 and 139: The Senate amendments provide that a return shall be made in case the gross estate at the time of death exceeds $50,000, together with certain details of such returns. The House recedes with an amendment requiring returns whenever there is an estate subject to this tax or where the gross estate exceeds $60,000.

Amendments Nos. 140, 141, and 142: These amendments are changes in section numbers. And the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments with amendments numbering the sections properly.

Amendment No. 143: The Senate amendment strikes out the words "and adequate," leaving the consideration to be a fair one, instead of a fair and adequate one. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 144: This amendment is a change in section number. And the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendment No. 145: The Senate amendment provides that in case any of the tax provided for is paid out of the part of the estate passing to or in possession of any person other than the executor, such person shall be entitled to reimbursement from any part of the estate still undistributed, or by a just distribution from the other heirs. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 146: This amendment is a change in section number. And the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendments Nos. 147, 148, 149, and 150: The Senate amendments in each instance insert the word "a" before the word "fair" and strike out the words "and adequate." These amendments leave the consideration as a fair one, instead of a fair and adequate one. And the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 151, 152, and 153: These amendments are clerical changes. And the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 154, 155, 156, and 157: These amendments are changes in section numbers. And the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments with amendments numbering the sections properly.

Amendment No. 158: This amendment is a change in section number, and the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment numbering the section with an amendment numbering the sections properly.

Amendment No. 159: The Senate amendment strikes out the word "person" and inserts the word "corporation." And the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 160: The Senate amendment strikes out the word "partnership." The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 161: The Senate amendment inserts the words "joint-stock companies." The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 162: The Senate amendment strikes out the definition of the word "manufacture," as it is not necessary in the amended title. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 163: The Senate amendment strikes out the entire Title III, with the exception of section 300, and inserts in lieu thereof 10 new sections. The effect of the Senate amendments was to change the basis of the tax from the gross receipts to the net profits. It also strikes out the tax on copper and its alloys. It added a paragraph terminating the life of the tax one year after the end of the present European war. The House receded with certain amendments, the principal of which is the method of determining the net profits and the rate of tax is increased from 10 per cent, as provided by the Senate, to 12½ per cent.

Amendment No. 164: This amendment relates to a change in section number, and the House recedes from its disagreement with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendment No. 165: This Senate amendment defines wine. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment defining wine to be the product made from the normal alcoholic fermentation of the juice of sound, ripe grapes, without addition or abstraction, except such as may occur in the usual cellar treatment of clarifying and aging, and providing that wine can be perfected by the addition of sugar and water, but that the additions shall not increase the volume more than 35 per cent.

Amendment No. 166: This amendment is a change in section number, and the House recedes from its disagreement with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendment No. 167: The Senate amendment taxes compounds sold as wine at the same rates as still wines and artificial or imitation wines. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 168: The Senate amendment fixed a uniform rate of 8 cents per gallon upon all wines. The Senate receded.

Amendment No. 169: The Senate amendment struck out the provisions imposing a tax of 4 cents per wine gallon upon wines containing less than 14 per cent of alcohol, 10 cents upon wine containing in excess of 14 per cent and not in excess of 21 per cent of alcohol, and 25 cents upon wines containing over 24 per cent of alcohol. The Senate receded.

Amendment No. 170: The Senate amendment changed the provisions imposing the distilled-liquor tax upon wines containing over 21 per cent of alcohol. The Senate receded.

Amendment No. 171: The Senate amendment is clerical, and the House receded.

Amendment No. 172: The Senate amendment struck out the provision abating or refunding the tax under the present law upon still wines unsold in the actual possession of the producer, so that the rates of this act could be imposed thereupon. The Senate receded.

Amendments Nos. 173 and 174: These amendments are clerical, and the House receded from them.

Amendment No. 175: This amendment is a clerical change. And the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 176: This amendment is a clerical change. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 177: This amendment is a change in section number; and the House recedes from its disagreement with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendment No. 178: The Senate increased the tax upon brandy for fortifying wines from the rate of 10 cents per proof gallon, provided in the House bill, to 55 cents per gallon; and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 179: The House provided that the tax upon brandy for fortifying sweet wines should be paid 90 days after notice. The Senate increased the period to 6 months; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 180. This amendment provides that when sugar is used in sweetening wine, the sugar must contain not less than 95 per cent of actual sugar calculated on a dry basis; and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 181 and 182: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 183: This amendment allows an additional removal of wine from bonded premises before it is necessary to pay the tax; and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 184, 185, and 186: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 187: The House provided that each bottle or other container of artificial carbonated wine should pay 1 cent on each one-half pint or fraction thereof. The Senate increased this rate to 2½ cents. The House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment with an amendment placing the tax at 1½ cents for each one-half pint or fraction thereof.

Amendment No. 188: This amendment restricts the taxable compounds to beverages; and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 189 and 190: The House provided that liqueurs, cordials, etc., containing distilled spirits of wine should pay a tax of 1½ cents on each one-half pint or fraction thereof. The Senate amendment provides that liqueurs, cordials, etc., containing sweet wine, fortified with grape brandy, shall pay a tax of 1½ cents on each pint or fraction thereof; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 191: This amendment provides that liqueurs, cordials, etc., not containing sweet wines shall pay three-fourths cents on each one-half pint or fraction thereof; and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 192: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 193: The Senate struck out the tax upon medicinal compounds, so the House provision struck out by the Senate amendment is not necessary; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 194: This amendment provides that in the case of imported still wines, including vermuth, sparkling wines, including champagne, and imported liqueurs, cordials, and similar compounds, the tax may be paid by assessment, instead of by stamps; and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 195, 196, 197, and 198: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 199: The Senate amendment is necessary in order to permit the blending of wines by other than rectifiers, and permits the use of grain or other ethyl alcohol in the fortification of sweet wines; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 200: This amendment provides that distillers using the filtration-aeration process may use an unlimited amount of water in the process of mashing or filtration for fermentation; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 201: This amendment provides that alcohol or other distilled spirits of proof strength of not less than 180 degrees intended for export free of tax may be drawn from receiving cisterns at any distillery or from storage tanks in any distillery warehouse, for transfer to tank or tank cars for export from the United States. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment properly numbering the section.

Amendment No. 202: This amendment makes section 3255 of the Revised Statutes applicable to this act; and the House recedes with an amendment changing the section number to its proper number.

Amendment No. 203: This amendment provides that distilled spirits commercially known as gin, of not less than 80 per cent proof, at any time within eight years after entry in bond, at any distillery, may be bottled in bond at such distillery for export without payment of tax. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment making this provision section 405.

Amendment No. 204: This amendment permits the use of a pipe line for the withdrawal of near beer from the brewery premises; and the House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment to properly renumber the section.

Amendment No. 205: This amendment relates to the change in section number; and the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment properly renumbering the section.

Amendment No. 206: The Senate provides that corporations, joint-stock companies, and associations shall pay 50 cents for each $1,000 of capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits used in any of the activities or functions of their business, including such sums of capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits as may be invested in or loaned upon stocks, bonds, mortgages, real estate, or other securities. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment providing as follows: "every corporation, joint-stock company, or association now or hereafter organized in the United States for profit and having a capital stock, and every insurance company now or hereafter organized under the laws of the United States, or any State or Territory of the United States, shall pay annually a special excise tax with respect to the carrying on or doing business of such corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company, equivalent to 50 cents for each $1,000 of the fair value of its capital stock, and in estimating the amount of capital stock, surplus and undivided profits shall be included." The amendment further provides that in the case of an insurance company, such deposits and reserve funds as they are required by law or contract to maintain or hold for the protection of or payment to or apportionment among policyholders shall not be included in assessing the tax upon the fair value of the capital stock. The amendment allows an exemption of $99,000 from the capital stock. The amendment further provides that a nonresident corporation doing business in the United States shall pay a tax equivalent to 50 cents for each $1,000 of the capital actually invested in the transaction of this business in the United States, and contains the exemption for nonresident insurance companies the same as that given resident insurance companies. It also allows a deduction for nonresident companies, from the amount of capital so invested, equal to such proportion of $99,000 as the amount so invested bears to the total amount invested in the transaction of business in the United States or elsewhere.

Amendment No. 207: This amendment is clerical; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 208: The House provided a tax upon theaters, museums, or concert halls which was based upon the gross receipts. The Senate reenacted the emergency revenue provisions relating to theaters, museums, or concert halls providing that in cities, towns, or villages of 5,000 inhabitants or less the amount of such payment should be one-half that of those located in the larger places. The House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment with an amendment limiting the taxing provision to theaters, museums, and concert halls.

Amendment No. 209: The House provided a tax upon bowling alleys and billiard rooms open to the public with or without price. The Senate amendment placed the tax upon bowling alleys and billiard rooms open to the public with or without price in addition to clubs and private homes. The House recedes from its disagreement with the Senate amendment with an amendment providing that the tax shall not apply to billiard tables and bowling alleys in private homes.

Amendment No. 210: This amendment changes the section number. And the House recedes from its disagreement with an amendment renumbering the section.

Amendment No. 211: This amendment makes little cigars weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand taxable at the same rate as cigarettes. The House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate with an amendment changing the word "little" before cigars to "small."

Amendment No. 212: The House provided a tax upon manufacturers of cigarettes of 3 cents for every 10,000. The Senate increased the tax upon manufacturers of cigarettes to 8 cents for every 10,000 and made small cigars taxable at the same rates. The Senate recedes from its amendment, thus leaving the tax upon manufacturers of cigarettes and small cigars 3 cents per every 10,000.

Amendments Nos. 213, 214, 215, and 216. These amendments are changes in section numbers. And the House recedes from its disagreement to the same with an amendment properly renumbering the section numbers.

Amendment No. 217: This amendment imposes a stamp tax upon bonds, debentures, and certificates of indebtedness, certificates of stock, stock transfers, sales, or agreements to sell products of merchandise at an exchange or board of trade or other similar place for future delivery, the entry of goods at customhouse for warehousing or withdrawal, passenger tickets and seats in parlor or palace cars, and berths in sleeping cars, etc. The House recedes with an amendment striking out all the stamp taxes but leaving the last section of this amendment, which provides for annual leave for internal-revenue agents and inspectors the same as granted to similar agents and inspectors in other departments.

Amendment No. 218: This amendment containing the administrative features for the stamp-tax provisions, and in view of the fact that the Senate receded from its amendment retaining the stamp taxes the Senate also recedes from its amendment containing the administrative provisions for the administration of the same.

Amendment No. 219: This amendment is a change in section number. And the House recedes from its disagreement with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendment No. 220: The Senate amendment struck out the words "on and after the day following the passage of this act," the effect of which was to change the time of this tax going into effect. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 221: The Senate amendment changed the free list by limiting a number of articles to their more crude condition. The House receded with amendments changing the spelling of certain of the terms.

Amendment No. 222: The Senate amendment changed Group II of this section by including therein certain of the more advanced articles included in Group I. The House receded with amendments changing the spelling.

Amendment No. 223: The Senate amendment inserts in Group III of this section medicinals, flavors, and synthetic phenolic resin. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 224: The Senate amendment is clerical. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 225: The Senate amendment inserts in Group III the following: "Colors, dyes, or color taken, obtained, derived, or manufactured from natural alizarin and indigo." And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 226: The Senate amendment changes the section number. And the House recedes from its disagreement with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendment No. 227: The Senate amendment strikes out the words fixing the time of going into effect of the duties imposed in this section. And the Senate recedes, causing the tax to go into effect the day after the passage of this act.

Amendment No. 228: The Senate amendment changes the section number. The House recedes from its disagreement with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendment No. 229: The Senate amendment imposed the specific duty of this section upon alizarin, indigo, and dyes obtained therefrom. The House receded with an amendment excepting these dyes and medicinals and flavors from these specific taxes.

Amendment No. 230: The Senate amendment is a clerical one, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 231 and 232: These amendments are changes in section numbers, and the House recedes with amendments numbering the sections properly.

Amendment No. 233: The Senate amendment inserts the following: "and the words 'salicylic acid,'" in paragraph 1. This is a necessary amendment, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 234: The Senate amendment delayed the taking effect of this title until the termination of the present European war. The Senate receded, causing the title to take effect the day following the passage of this act.

Amendment No. 235: The Senate amendment inserted a new title, increasing the price limit of print paper that can be admitted free of duty from 2½ cents per pound to 5 cents per pound. The House receded with an amendment correcting clerical errors.

Amendment No. 236: This amendment is a change in the title number, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 237: This amendment is a change in the section number, and the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendments Nos. 238 and 239: The House provided the President should designate the chairman and vice president of the Tariff Commission biennially. The Senate provided the President should designate the said chairman and vice president annually, and the House recedes from both amendments.

Amendment No. 240: The Senate amendment changed the section number, and the House recedes from its disagreement with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendment No. 241: The Senate amendment is clerical, and the House agrees.

Amendment No. 242: The Senate amendment changes the section number. The House recedes from its disagreement with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendment No. 243: The Senate amendment adds to the duties of the Tariff Commission the investigation of the industrial effects of our customs laws. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 244: The Senate amendment adds to the duties of the Tariff Commission the investigation of the effect upon the industries and labor of the country. And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 245: The Senate amendment changes the section number. The House recedes from its disagreement, with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendment No. 246: The Senate amendment changes the section number. The House recedes from its disagreement with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendment No. 247: The Senate amendment adds to the duties of the Tariff Commission the power to investigate economic alliances. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 248, 249, 250, and 251: The Senate amendments change section numbers. The House recedes, with amendments correcting these numbers.

Amendment No. 252: The Senate amendment empowers the Tariff Commission to investigate the Paris economy pact and similar organizations and arrangements in Europe. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 253: The Senate amendment changed the section number. The House recedes from its disagreement with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendment No. 254: The Senate amendment made a permanent appropriation of $300,000 per year. The House provision only authorized this appropriation. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 255: The Senate amendment changes the title number. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 256 and 257: The Senate amendment changes the section number. The House recedes with an amendment numbering the section properly.

Amendment No. 258: This Senate amendment is clerical. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 259 and 260: The Senate amendments extend the provisions of this section by making it unlawful to import or cause to be imported into the United States articles in unfair competition. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 261: The Senate amendment provides that nothing in this title shall be construed as depriving the proper State courts of jurisdiction in actions for damages thereunder. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 262: The Senate amendment changes the section number. The House recedes with an amendment correcting this number.

Amendment No. 263: The Senate amendment allows the establishment in this country on the part of a foreign producer of an exclusive agency for the sale of the products of said producer or merchant. The House receded with an amendment so as not to extend the exemption to the goods imported.

Amendment No. 264: The Senate amendment changed the section number. The House recedes with an amendment inserting proper section number.

Amendment No. 265: The Senate amendment inserts a section giving the President power to retaliate in case any country prohibits the imports of goods from the United States. The House recedes with a small clerical amendment.

Amendments Nos. 266 and 267: The Senate amendment inserted two sections empowering the President during the existence of a war in which the United States is not engaged, whenever he shall be satisfied that our trade is being unjustly discriminated against, to use retaliatory measures. The House recedes, with certain clerical amendments.

Amendment No. 268: The Senate amendment inserted a section empowering the President, under certain conditions, to deny the use of the United States mails, express companies, telegraph, cable, or wireless company to citizens, firms, companies, or corporations of certain belligerent countries. The Senate receded.

Amendment No. 269: The Senate amendment restricted the admission of certain fish from the North Pacific, through any foreign country, except in bond from an American port. The Senate receded.

Amendment No. 270: The Senate amendment changed the number of the title. The House receded with an amendment correcting the number of this title.

Amendment No. 271: The Senate amendment changes the section number. The House recedes with an amendment correcting this number.

Amendment No. 272: The Senate amendment provides that the appropriation of $2,000,000 carried in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917 shall be available for time subsequent to June 18, 1916, and that payment shall be made without reference to the enlisted men having enlisted before or after the call by the President. The House receded with an amendment correcting the number of the section.

Amendment No. 273: The Senate amendment had the effect of changing the position of the last section of the act. The House receded with an amendment restoring the section to its original position and numbering the section properly.

CLAUDE KITCHIN,
HENRY T. RAINEY,
LINCOLN DIXON,
CORDELL HULL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I had reserved the right to object. I desired to ask the gentleman a question in reference to the provision on page 50, lines 17, 18, and 19.

Mr. KITCHIN. The Senate receded. It becomes a public record, to be inspected upon the order of the President.

Mr. LINDBERGH. That remains the same as it went from the House to the Senate?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, the first difference between the Senate and House on the revenue bill was in the income-tax provisions. One of the material changes from the House bill, or, rather, additions to the bill, which were made by the Senate amendments, was the increase in the surtax of the income tax on amounts exceeding $500,000. The House bill provided that the total net income in excess of $500,000 should be taxed 10 per cent. The Senate amendment provides that the rate of 10 per cent shall be imposed upon the amount by which the net income exceeds $500,000, and does not exceed $1,000,000, 11 per cent upon the amount by which the net income exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $1,500,000, 12 per cent upon the amount by which the net income exceeds $1,500,000 and does not exceed $2,000,000, and 13 per cent upon the amount by which the net income exceeds $2,000,000. The House receded from its disagreement to this amendment and concurred therein.

Another material change by Senate amendment was with respect to the exemptions. The House bill changed the present law by extending the exemptions of $4,000 to the head of a family instead of to a married person. The Senate amended the bill, striking this out and incorporating the provisions of the present law. The conferees agreed on the House provision extending the exemptions to the head of the family. These are the important propositions that came before the conference committee in regard to the income tax.

I think we could save time and better get at the important portions of the conference report if gentlemen who are interested will take the bill as it was amended by the Senate and ask me as to the action of the conferees with respect to the Senate amendments.

Mr. MEEKER. The gentleman means just in regard to the income tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. As to any amendment by the Senate. In regard to the estate or inheritance tax, we concurred in the Senate amendment increasing the rates on net estates exceeding $450,000. The House bill had it 5 per cent on the excess of the net estate over $450,000. The Senate amendments limited the 5 per cent rate to net estates exceeding $450,000 and not exceeding $1,000,000, and introduced a new classification, as follows:

A 6 per cent rate upon the amount by which such net estate exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $2,000,000;

A 7 per cent rate upon the amount by which such net estate exceeds $2,000,000 and does not exceed $3,000,000;

An 8 per cent rate upon the amount by which such net estate exceeds $3,000,000 and does not exceed $4,000,000;

A 9 per cent rate upon the amount by which such net estate exceeds $4,000,000 and does not exceed $5,000,000; and

A 10 per cent rate upon the amount by which such net estate exceeds $5,000,000. The House receded and concurred in them.

In the munitions tax the House, as gentlemen will recall, levied a tax upon the gross receipts. We also levied a tax upon copper, alloyed and refined. The Senate struck out the copper tax. The House concurred in that amendment.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman intend to explain why that was left out?

Mr. KITCHIN. It was left out because the Senate conferees would not yield on it. That is the best reason I can give. Of course, I can not tell what took place in the conference.

Mr. DENISON. I was going to ask the gentleman if he could enlighten the House on the reasons that were given, whether the Senators——

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I could not say what reasons the conferees gave; but the Senate conferees would not yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wanted to know what was done on the Senate amendments relative to mutual fire and life insurance companies.

Mr. KITCHIN. The provisions as to mutual fire and life insurance companies are left substantially as the House bill had them. The amendments to which the gentleman refers are doubtless the amendments first reported by the Senate Finance Committee. These were stricken out or modified before the bill left the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. On what theory was the copper tax stricken out?

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, on the theory that it was a special tax upon one industry, and there was no similar tax upon other industries, like zinc or lead or iron or steel.

Mr. MANN. Was that the theory that the committee had when they put the bill through the House?

Mr. KITCHIN. That was not the theory. The theory that we had was that it entered more largely into the composition of munitions of war than the products of the other big industries; that it was making exorbitant profits on account of the war, and it therefore could, without an unreasonable burden, and ought to pay a special tax.

Mr. MANN. Did the House conferees change their opinion on the subject?

Mr. KITCHIN. The House conferees have not changed their opinion, but under all the circumstances presented to them they reluctantly yielded. But the gentleman ought not to be too inquisitive, for he will get into the secrets of the conference. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The Senators from the Democratic States were too much for the House conferees. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. The Republican Senators were against the copper tax, and in deference to all the Republican Senators and a few Democratic Senators the Senate conferees insisted. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The House conferees, then, did what they did because of the judgment of the Republican conferees in the Senate?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; the Democratic conferees and all the Republicans in the Senate. I fear that the Republican Senators badly influenced them. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman was not influenced by the Republican Members of the House.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman has nothing else to add that is real good; I will proceed. [Laughter.]

Now, instead of a tax on the gross receipts from munitions of war, the Senate placed a tax of 10 per cent on the net profits. The House conferees concurred with an amendment making it 12½ per cent on the net profits.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can the gentleman please tell how the net profits are to be determined, and by whom?

Mr. KITCHIN. They are to be determined by taking the gross receipts and making the same deductions as were provided in the House bill; that is, deducting from gross receipts labor, materials, salaries, and overhead charges, and so forth. After deducting these from the gross receipts, the balance is the net profit.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Was there any limitation on the salaries that could be paid in order to diminish the net profits?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. That would have to be thrashed out by the Treasury Department and the companies should such a question arise. There are no provisions about that in the Federal income tax or in the income-tax laws of the States.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have in mind some experience that the Government had with great corporations, in which certain sums were to be paid back from the net income, and there was never any net income from which to pay back anything. If the payments had been required to be made out of the gross receipts, then something would have been paid back. That is the simpler and only sure way to get what the Government is entitled to.

Mr. KITCHIN. I agree with the gentleman. It is my judgment that a smaller tax on the gross receipts would have been simpler and surer.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would not impute to anybody a dishonest motive, to have a thing of this kind put into the law, and of course the gentleman from North Carolina would not infer that I was imputing such a motive.

Mr. KITCHIN. Certainly not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But that sort of a provision in the law affords every sort of an opportunity to beat the Government out of what it is entitled to. When you leave it to the people to fix the amount of the net income, they will see to it that it is not any larger than it can possibly be made.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman that we did not leave it to them any more than the net income under the income tax is left to the taxpayer. The department is authorized by the bill to examine their books, and they must show the cost of everything that enters into the cost of the product.

Mr. KREIDER. You arrive at that amount just the same as you do in the income tax of corporations and individuals?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; except as to the amortization of temporary buildings that they erect for this purpose. A reasonable deduction on account of this may be allowed by the Treasury Department.

Mr. KREIDER. The gentleman believes it would be as correct as in the income tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; as correct as in the income tax.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Will the gentleman read lines 17, 18, and 19 on page 50 as they now are?

Mr. KITCHIN. The Senate amendment is stricken out, and that provision now reads this way:

When the assessment shall be made, as provided in this title, the returns——

Mr. LINDBERGH. That is satisfactory.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Building and loan associations are not included in this bill at all, are they?

Mr. KITCHIN. They are exempted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They are wholly exempted from taxation under this bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Although a member of the conference committee I am not as well informed as to the amendments as I would like to be. [Laughter.] If the gentleman will indulge me——

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman did not come around early enough. He was late. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I came around promptly as per invitation for this evening at 8 o'clock, and we had such a pleasant social session that I will not at this time divulge any of the secrets of that conference. However, I should like to ask the gentleman what became of amendment 206, taxing joint-stock companies and corporations 50 cents for each $1,000 of capital stock.

Mr. KITCHIN. We have changed that by concurring with an amendment providing for a tax of 50 cents on each $1,000 of the fair value of the capital stock and provided that in ascertaining the fair value of the stock there shall be taken into consideration the surplus and undivided profits; not that the surplus and undivided profits as such should be taxed, but that in estimating the value of the capital stock they should be considered or included.

Mr. STAFFORD. Leaving it at the exemption of $99,000 still?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; $99,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As to amendment 217, the documentary stamp tax, has that been taken from the bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. All stamp taxes of every kind put in by the Senate have been wiped out. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does that include adhesive stamps?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The stamp taxes have been entirely eliminated?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Pardon me for saying that I think that was a pretty good political move at this time.

I thought the gentleman and his party, who imposed the stamp tax, would see the propriety of taking it off.

Mr. KITCHIN. We followed the example of your party once and put them on, but we will not do so any more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. About amendment 263, on page 148—this refers to the antidumping provision:

Provided, That the above shall not be interpreted to prevent the establishing in this country on the part of a foreign producer of an exclusive agency for the sale in the United States of the products of said foreign producer or merchant, nor to prevent such exclusive agent from agreeing not to use, purchase, or deal in the article of any other person.

Before the gentleman answers, I should like to call his attention to section 3 of the Clayton antitrust law, which prevents any such exclusive agency on the part of any manufacturer or agent in the United States. Having called the gentleman's attention to section 3 of the Clayton antitrust law, I would ask whether that amendment 263 standing in this bill is not in direct contravention of the Clayton antitrust law?

Mr. KITCHIN. I really do not think it is; but I think if the agent, after he received the goods, were to impose any of the conditions set out in the section upon the person here to whom he sells the exclusive agent would be guilty under the Clayton Antitrust Act. But we go further. The House conferees added another proviso, which was accepted, making that section apply to goods shipped by the foreign producer to this exclusive agent, if he required the agent or had any agreement with the agent to impose those conditions upon any person to whom he sold in the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Unless there was something additional in conference to what appears in the print here, this provision would be in direct conflict with the Clayton antitrust law. It would favor the foreigner as against the American manufacturer or agent.

Mr. KITCHIN. But certainly not with the amendment to that, to which I have alluded.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Several gentlemen are interested in the wine-tax provision, about which there has been a great deal of correspondence. Will the gentleman explain what was done there?

Mr. KITCHIN. The wine tax is exactly where the House placed it, the Senate receding in several amendments; but as to wines known as the Ohio wines we concurred in the Senate amendment with an amendment which permits an amelioration of the wine with water and sugar to the amount of 35 per cent of the resultant product. The Senate amendment by its wording, though intending to permit 35 per cent of the resultant product, would only permit about 26 per cent of the resultant product; but we have changed it as it was intended to be and have allowed them to ameliorate the wine to 35 per cent in volume of the resultant product.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman regard that as a compromise between the eastern and the California growers?

Mr. KITCHIN. I would not regard it exactly as a compromise. The eastern fellows wanted it more and the California fellows wanted it less.

We thought that was fair and just to both, and fair and just to the Treasury. I do not think that either the California wine producers or the Ohio wine producers will have much ground for protest.

Mr. MEEKER. Does the gentleman believe that that will clear up the contention between the California and the eastern men and give them a fair chance in the market?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. I will say to the gentleman that the Bureau of Chemistry in the Agricultural Department has forbidden the Ohio wine producers to make wine which would have exceeded 25 per cent of amelioration. I have given some little study to the wine production in Ohio and Missouri, and I was convinced, as the conferees on the part of the House were, that the Agricultural Department had made it a little too low. We believed that in some years, on account of the condition of the grape, its acidity, and so forth, they needed as much as 35 per cent—some years they do not need so much—and we put it at 35 per cent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What became of amendment No. 269, known as the Alaskan fishery rider?

Mr. KITCHIN. That went out.

Mr. ANDERSON. While the gentleman is on the wine proposition, what became of amendment No. 170, which reduced the alcoholic contents from 24 to 21 per cent?

Mr. KITCHIN. The Senate receded. The provisions of the House bill, agreed to by the conferees, conform to the tariff laws we have in that respect.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish the gentleman would acquaint the House with the action of the conferees on the embargo amendments.

Mr. KITCHIN. The House concurred in all the amendments except section 104, which relates to the retaliation by mail, express, telegraph, and so forth.

Mr. STAFFORD. The language is as incorporated in the Senate?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In relation to print paper, was that eliminated?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; that was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. If I understand the contention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] correctly, that means virtually that the newspaper publishers will be obliged to pay higher for print paper, because the Canadians will be able to charge more than $2.50 a hundred pounds.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say that I realize there is some ground for that argument.

Mr. STAFFORD. If I had not been a member with my distinguished colleague on the committee that investigated that subject, I would not be so firm in my belief in approving everything that the gentleman from Illinois stated yesterday as to the ultimate result of the news-print paper industry in this country. While the news-print paper concerns may temporarily get some benefit—those in Maine, New Hampshire, and New York where they have pulp wood—the other news-print paper concerns of the country will be starved in not being able to get the necessary supply of pulp wood from Canada. I think it was a grave mistake in the conferees to yield to the action of the Senate in that particular.

Mr. KITCHIN. For some time during the conference I shared the last sentiment that the gentleman just expressed, but not on the same grounds.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman tell us what became of amendment 100, for the collection of taxes?

Mr. KITCHIN. That went out as soon as we pointed the guns, and it was turned over to the gentleman's committee. I misunderstood the gentleman at first. I thought he asked about the $100,000 appropriation by the Senate amendment for the collection of the munition tax. Amendment 100 was concurred in.

Mr. GILLETT. And amendment 102, in relation to returns and incomes of insurance companies, page 50?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is kept in with an amendment describing the acts of 1909 and 1913 more definitely.

Mr. GILLETT. It was left in applying to acts of 1909 and 1913.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. We described the acts with more particularity, so that it will be certain what acts are referred to.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Was the stamp tax taken off from fire insurance premiums?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. This morning I called the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina to certain words in the blacklist amendment and suggested that they be stricken out. What happened?

Mr. KITCHIN. The words "discretion of the President" and "in the opinion of the President" were stricken out. I thank the gentleman from New York for calling the attention of the conferees to those words. After some discussion in conference, it was unanimously agreed that those words should go out, and we have stricken them out.

Mr. BENNET. I want to say that I think the conferees are to be congratulated on that. With those words out, which is the constitutional right of Congress to do, it seems to me that we have put in the law some very good blacklist provisions. I say that very frankly, because I have made some speeches in which I have criticized the administration for not having done it, and now it is done it seems to me no more than fair that I should admit that it is a good provision.

Mr. KITCHIN. I thought we would come along before the session adjourned and do something that might meet with the gentleman's approval. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER. I would like to have 15 minutes before the gentleman moves the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is one of the conferees, and I believe he ought to have 15 minutes. I hope that other gentlemen will ask for just as little time as possible. I am anxious to get this to the Senate as soon as possible. But I think the gentleman ought to have that time.

Mr. DENISON. Before the gentleman from Massachusetts begins, I want to ask about a special tax on capital stock. I understand the tax was rejected in the House when the bill was before the House.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; that simply applied to banks, and this applies to all corporations.

Mr. DENISON. The Senate amendment taxes the capital stock and undivided profits.

Mr. KITCHIN. We fixed it at the fair value of the capital stock.

Mr. DENISON. The effect of the amendment as insisted upon by the House managers will be to increase the tax, generally speaking?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; to decrease the tax. The Senate amendment had the tax on the capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits—that is, the par value of the capital stock. We have put a tax of 50 cents a thousand upon the fair average value of the capital stock.

Mr. DENISON. That means the market value?

Mr. KITCHIN. When it has a market value, it would be the market value; but some stocks have no market value, and they would have to ascertain what the fair actual value is.

Mr. DENISON. Does not the gentleman think that ordinarily the market value of bank stock is far grenter than the par value of the capital stock with the surplus added?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; and they would take that into consideration. They would get the actual value, and the provision declares they can consider the surplus and undivided profit in ascertaining that value. The earnings would also be considered.

Mr. DENISON. The result will be that all banks will pay their regular income tax and then this surtax of 50 cents per thousand on the actual value of the capital stock?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; and all other corporations. The bill as reported to the House had it $1 on the capital stock and surplus and undivided profits, and confined it to banks. This is 50 cents per thousand on the fair value only of the capital stock and applies to all corporations.

Mr. DENISON. Will that apply also to munition manufacturers?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. Munition manufacturers are permitted to deduct the special munition tax paid from this, too.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in reference to that tax of 50 cents a thousand on the capital stock, I understood the gentleman to say that it would be 50 cents a thousand upon the fair market value?

Mr. KITCHIN. It reads, "The amount of such annual tax shall in all cases be computed on the basis of the fair average value of the capital stock for the preceding year."

Mr. MANN. Who determines that?

Mr. KITCHIN. The Treasury Department determines that, just as it would if we had put it the actual value. It would have to make investigation and determine the value.

Mr. MANN. Of course, it is a very simple matter to determine what the capital stock and surplus, and so forth, is, and it may be a simple matter to determine what the fair average value is, which, I take it, is the fair market value, where there is a market.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is that to be determined as of a particular date, or the fair value for the year?

Mr. KITCHIN. It is a fair average value for the preceding year.

Mr. MANN. I would think it would take considerable figuring to find out the market value of some of the stock.

Mr. KITCHIN. I imagine they would take a day or two in each month of the year—say the first day in the month and the last—and average it in that way; or, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER] suggests, as is done by many corporations, the highest and lowest value during the year would be taken and divide it by two to get the average or the highest and lowest in each month, and from this get the average. It would be more difficult than if we had said the par value, but that would not be just, for some stocks of par value of 100 are not worth 20.

Mr. MANN. These people must make a return in the first instance?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the Treasury Department would not fix the value of the stock before the return is made?

Mr. KITCHIN. They make a return first, and they swear what the fair average value of the stock was for the preceding year. Of course if the department has any reason to suspect them, it would make them give it more particularly and in detail.

Mr. MANN. This, of course, will not tax the indebtedness?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no; this will not. The Finance Committee in the Senate first had it on the capital. Then they had it on the capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits, and we now have it on a fair average value of the capital stock.

Mr. MANN. Is there any estimate as to how much money that will raise?

Mr. KITCHIN. First, as the Senate had it, they estimated it would raise about $18,000,000. I think it will raise from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 as we now have it.

Mr. MANN. These corporations pay an income tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; pay an income tax.

Mr. MANN. They pay this capital-stock tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It is to be taken out of the munitions tax as to munition companies?

Mr. KITCHIN. They are given credit for what they pay on munition taxes.

Mr. KREIDER. If I understand the gentleman, all stamp taxes have been repealed?

Mr. KITCHIN. All.

Mr. KREIDER. Whether or not they are to be applied to the issue of stocks of corporations?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; this and all other stamp taxes are repealed. Mr. Speaker, if no one desires further to make inquiries as to the report, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I have a few words to say about your retaliatory amendments aimed against the allies.

Your President has bidden you to be neutral in thought, word, and deed. He has directed you to be neutral between right and wrong, between black and white, between humanity and inhumanity. But has he directed you to be hypocrites?

You claim that you are devoted to the cause of humanity and despise the cause of commercialism. Then, why do not you pass an amendment refusing our harbors to Germany's interned ships until she repudiates her Lusitania crime? Why do you pass amendments which even you admit can serve no other end than the stuffing of sordid pockets, already bulging with the golden harvest of our fellowmen's misery?

In adopting these retaliatory amendments you are taking an action which all over the world will be looked on as a blow in support of Germany's unholy cause. Without warning your own people you have suddenly surrendered to the insidious propaganda which so long has corrupted such a large part of our press. Doubtless your action will serve its purpose—it will bring to your standard in doubtful States hundreds of thousands of disloyal voters who care nothing for the bloom and glory on the American roll of honor, and everything for the jealousies and hatreds of lands which they swore to renounce when they took the oath which made them—God forgive us—American citizens.

With her uncanny thoroughness Germany arranged a system by which her spies could send their crafty news through neutral mails. The allies stopped the leak by military censorship, as stop it they must. Many innocent letters were opened, it is true; but ultimately they reached their destinations. Fortunate letters! More fortunate, indeed, than our women and babies who were lost on the Lusitania. They never will reach their destination in this world. Their unavenged corpses have long since been eaten by lower forms of life, leaving their weeping relatives to marvel at their country, which believes that "strict accountability" means a flood of gentle ink.

Ninety-nine men out of a hundred who howl against the allies' censorship want Germany to win the war. Yet the overwhelming mass of the American people pin their faith on the banners of the allies.

Fat traders, who by hook or by crook seek access to the luscious profits of the contraband market, yell against a blockade which hampers their lust for more gold to jingle in their already overweighted pockets.

And to all this we yield and in our statute book we inscribe still more threats, at whose unfulfillment countless Americans of the future will blush with shame. I say that the threats in this bill will be unfulfilled. President Wilson may rattle the saber which you have given him; doubtless he will do so in a series of resounding notes. He will not draw that saber. He will bark, but he will not bite. He will bluster, but he is "too proud to fight."

He has not dared to force from Germany a disavowal of her horrid crime against the Lusitania. He did not dare to face the banded trainmen and require them to withhold their hands till their Nation's Government could examine into the justice of their cause.

You are closing this Congress by adding a sorry chapter to a sorry record.

You saw Belgium violated with wanton inhumanity and you held your peace. You listened to the shocking tale of the cruel death of Edith Cavell and you smugly continued on your way. It was brought to you that thousands of helpless maidens in northern France were being ravished from their homes to serve the needs of their bloody conquerors. You pretended that you could not hear their shrieks. Deaf to the cries of women and children! Mute when you should have spoken! Shouting when you should have been mute!

What has Congress done? Your only protests have been aimed at the allies, who are fighting our fight and the fight of civilization. The maniac Casement failed in his attempt to stab in the back 200,000 gallant Irishmen fighting for civilization in Flanders' blood-soaked trenches; you strove to stay the hand of justice.

And now you pass your paltry threats, which secretly you believe and hope are empty. Pass them! Nag and hinder the allies if you will! Bring a satisfied grin to the hideous face of hatred; feed another snarl to the nasty countenance of spite—but remember that for every grin and for every snarl future Americans must pay a millionfold in blushes!

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask the same privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks the same privilege. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask the same privilege.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING] makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, my call for a quorum, I am sorry to say, may inconvenience some Members and force others to return to Washington who are not here. But when I hear that the lack of a quorum is being used to whip into conference bills matters that ought not be in the bills and keep out of bills what ought to be in, I feel it my duty to make the point. The reason I withhold the point for the time being is that possibly the one matter that I have in mind may be corrected in order that the point of no quorum may not be insisted upon.

On page 50, lines 17, 18, and 19, the Senate amended the revenue bill, H. R. 16763, by striking out "assessment" and inserting "assessments of any corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company." As the House bill stood it included individuals, as the terms were general; but the amendment of the Senate restricts it to the concerns named in the amendment. It has been shown by reputable authority that it is individuals mostly who are dodging the income-tax law, and that multimillionaires have in the last year defrauded the Government, by false statements, of approximately $300,000,000. The effect of the House provision was to make the statements public, provided the President ordered it. The fact that the Senate amendment may prevent the Government collecting hundreds of millions of dollars that it would if the House provision is retained justifies me in making the point of no quorum, which I shall do unless the House provision is retained. There was an amendment offered in the Senate which would have been much better than even the House provision, but it was defeated by a narrow margin.

Mr. Speaker, the statement of Mr. Basil M. Manley in the hearings on H. Res. 221 sets out the conditions clearly. His statement claims that the income-tax evasion is $320,000,000, and is based upon his calculations that the aggregate income of everybody, including corporations, is $46,000,000,000 a year.

Secretary McAdoo denies that, and claims that the income is $20,000,000,000. The absurdity of McAdoo's claim seems to me clear. Even back in 1914 the census shows the income to be $24,000,000,000, and there can be no doubt that the census omitted a great deal. Since then the income has been enormously increased. This Congress has appropriated $1,700,000,000. If Secretary McAdoo was correct, then this Congress is taking 8½ per cent of all the people's earnings to run the Federal Government. If you add the taxes of the States, cities, counties, and other subdivisions, that would again be very much increased. There can be no doubt that Secretary McAdoo is away off in his figures.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. And I, Mr. Speaker, make the same request.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I make the same request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to these several requests?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. I make the same request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, is this leave on this bill or on all matters?

The SPEAKER. No; on this bill.

Mr. MANN. That is not on my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's request is already granted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mine was the request immediately following that of the gentleman from Illinois, and I asked specifically to extend my remarks on this bill. All the other requests were on the same line from that time on.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to extend on this bill. I wanted to extend on appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. I wanted to extend my remarks on this bill, and also on vital statistics.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. RAKER. I want to extend my remarks on this bill and on the subject of vital statistics—vital conservation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on this bill, and also on vital conservation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the military and naval legislation of the present Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the naval and military legislation of this Congress. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting a speech of the Hon. John A. Maguire, Member of the Sixty-first, Sixty-second, and Sixty-third Congresses, in relation to the work in Congress and his experience here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the work of Congress. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. KITCHIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 60.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session of the Congress by adjourning their respective Houses on the 8th of September, 1916, at 10 o'clock ante meridian.

[Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I will say that before we adjourn I am going to ask unanimous consent that we meet at 8.30 o'clock to-morrow morning. I understand that the Senate will meet at that time, and they have asked me to fix the time for final adjournment at 10 o'clock. We are preparing to have the enrolled bill ready by 8.30 o'clock, and if it is, both Houses can adjourn at 10 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 8.30 to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 8.30 a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NOTIFICATION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged resolution.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, before we go home to-night, that I have five minutes to reply to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] on his declaration of war.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman in half a minute. The Clerk will report the resolution offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 369.

Resolved, That a committee of three Members of the House be appointed by the Speaker, to join a similar committee to be appointed by the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses have completed the business of the present session and are ready to adjourn, unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

Mr. KITCHIN. I move the adoption of the resolution, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EVA M. BOWMAN.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (S. 136) for the relief of Eva M. Bowman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a conference report, which will be read by the Clerk.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 136) for the relief of Eva M. Bowman having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

HUBERT D. STEPHENS,
GEORGE M. YOUNG,
Managers on the part of the House.
HENRY F. ASHURST,
HARRY LANE,
MOSES E. CLAPP,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, what is the amendment?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. The Senate allowed $5,000. The House struck out $5,000 and inserted $1,460. The Senate have receded and agreed to the House amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

PEACE OR WAR.

Mr. DECKER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DECKER. I should like to amend that request by making it 10 minutes. I do not think I will use all the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object—I am not going to object—I want to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if we are through with business for to-night?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And it is expected that we will adjourn when the gentleman from Missouri concludes his remarks?

Mr. KITCHIN. As soon as the speeches are over.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of Congress, it may seem presumptuous on my part, but I can not sit silent in my seat and listen to the speech of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] without saying to him and saying to the country and saying to the world that this House of Representatives is not an adjunct of the British Parliament; without saying to the country and to him that this is a neutral Nation.

The vitriolic speech of the distinguished gentleman is but a repetition of the sentiment and propaganda that has been coming from some parts of this country, from people who have bet their money on the English horse and want the United States to help it win, who want the United States to become a party to that awful, horrible, conflict beyond the sea.

He pours forth his vitriolic abuse against the distinguished head of this Nation. He refers again to the crossing of the Belgian frontier by the Germans and chides the President of this Nation because he did not interfere. He would leave the inference that when the guns of Liege could not stop them, where the brave Frenchmen could not stop them, that a mighty sweep of the big stick of Theodore Roosevelt would have sent the Germans back to Berlin.

There is just one proposition in this case. The distinguished gentleman—and he is distinguished; he was once the Republican candidate for governor of Massachusetts; he has just returned from campaigning for Mr. Hughes—talks about a more aggressive policy; he talks about the flood of ink; he wants but one thing. He is not satisfied with what Woodrow Wilson, the great President, has done; he wants but one thing, and that awful thing is war for the United States.

He can not play both ends against the middle. He knows in his artful way that many Germans in this country are not satisfied with the course of Woodrow Wilson because they think that he has been too aggressive. I am sorry that they all do not think, as I think, that that great man in the White House, following the example of George Washington, who was no molly-coddle, following the example of Alexander Hamilton, following the example of Ulysses S. Grant, has been trying to guide the ship of state along the lines of strict neutrality. But now he seeks to stir up in this country against Woodrow Wilson and this administration the animosity of those whose sympathies are with the allies in that awful struggle. He thinks that Mr. Hughes already has the German vote, and now, through men like himself and Theodore Roosevelt, who abused Woodrow Wilson for not going to war on account of Belgium, he expects to get the pro-English vote for Mr. Hughes. In his letter of nonacceptance Mr. Roosevelt said, in substance, "I talked to Mr.

Hughes, the candidate for President of the United States on the Republican ticket, and he is satisfactory to me," and if he is satisfactory to me, Theodore Roosevelt, he ought to be satisfactory to the most pro-English gentleman in this country.

But I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts that he does not voice the sentiment of the people of this country; he does not voice the sentiment of the true Republicans; he does not voice the sentiment of Democrats; he does not voice the sentiment of the Progressives, because the people of this country, not only many of the leaders high in authority but the rank and file of all parties, thank God to-night that there is a man in the White House who is following the path of strict neutrality.

Oh, you may call it a wobbling policy, you may call it resorting to the pen instead of resorting to the sword, but I want to say to you who believe as the gentleman from Massachusetts believes—and I hope there are not many that agree with him, and if there are I want to say to you—the people of this country thank God that they are living under the leadership of a man who is willing to resort to negotiation before he resorts to the sword.

They talk about the lowering of the prestige of this country, they talk about the sacred honor of that flag, they talk about the honor of our country, but I want to say to you that the prestige of this Nation, the honor of that sacred flag was never so high in the estimation of the world as it is to-night.

Oh, you say we do not stand high in the chancelleries of the world. Ah, we may not stand so high in the estimation of those people who with their scheming and their false pride brought on this horrible war on the other side of the sea, but over your faces I look to the faces of the people of this country. The man sitting in that Speaker's chair once said, "No man is fit to be the lawgiver for a mighty nation who yields to the demands and solicitations of the few who may have access to his ear, and is unmindful of the vast multitude who may never hear his voice or look into his face."

I am thinking to-night, Mr. Speaker, of the men out on the farms, to whom you then referred. I am thinking to-night, Mr. Speaker, of the men who go down in the mines to dig for their daily bread. I am thinking to-night of the men in the factories of old New England, whence the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] comes. I am thinking of the women and the men who earn their bread in the sweat of their face. I am thinking of those who have to die when war comes. I am thinking of them, Mr. Speaker; and I am thinking not only of those on this side of the sea, but I am thinking of the plain people over there beyond the seas, the kind of people to whom you referred, and I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], How does our prestige stand with the plain people across the seas? I am willing to leave the question of our national prestige not to those who wear the gold braid over there, but I am willing to leave it to the mothers of Europe whose sons are dying at Verdun.

I am willing to leave the question of our prestige to the sisters of Europe whose brothers are rotting in unmarked graves along the far-flung battle lines. I am willing to leave the question of our prestige to the little children of Europe, who, as a result of this aggressive policy which the gentleman from Massachusetts recommends, this vengeful chip-on-the-shoulder policy, will go through life without a guiding father's care. I am willing to leave the question of our national prestige to the men over in Europe who are standing to-night in the trenches and hoping that they may live to see the rising of another sun. I am willing to leave it to those brave men behind the guns in Europe, who look with longing eyes to this land of ours beyond the seas and wish that they, too, had a ruler like Woodrow Wilson, who would be willing to negotiate before he plunged the men and the boys of his country into the awful caldron of war. Oh, yes; I am willing to leave it to them—this question of our honor and our prestige after the awful war is over, after the men begin to stagger home with parts of their bodies shot away, some of them with blinded eyes, some of them with awful pains of asphyxiating gas in their lungs, some of them with the dreadful effect of rheumatism from standing in the trenches—these men who go home to the firesides where chairs are empty and begin to bear the burdens and pay the debts caused by this saturnalia of destruction.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DECKER. And I want to use in closing the words of the distinguished gentleman from New York who sounded the keynote of this campaign from the Democratic standpoint, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] sounded it to-night from the Republican standpoint. The issue is, Wilson with strict neutrality and honorable peace, or Hughes with the dangers of intermeddling and calamitous war. We accept the challenge and, in the words of Martin H. Glynn, we say to you and to the country, this policy of Woodrow Wilson "may not satisfy those who revel in destruction and find pleasure in despair. It may not satisfy the fire eater and the swashbuckler, but it does satisfy those who worship at the altar of the god of peace; it does satisfy the mothers of our land at whose hearth and fireside no jingoistic war has placed an empty chair; it does satisfy the daughters of our land from whom brag and bluster have sent no loving brother to the dissolution of the grave; it does satisfy the fathers of our land and the sons of our land who will fight for that flag and die for that flag when reason primes the rifle, when honor draws the sword, and justice breathes a blessing on the standards they uphold."

THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I take occasion in these few moments to disagree with both the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER]. There are questions in the United States of America which rise above partisanship. There are questions, and always have been questions, upon which men of both parties and of all parties have stood as one. I took occasion earlier in the evening, before any attempt had been made to impart a partisan tinge to this particular portion of the revenue bill, to extend, out of a full heart, my sincere congratulations to the managers on the part of the House for these provisions in the revenue bill alluded to as retaliatory provisions. I do not like the word "retaliatory." For my part, as an American, representing an American district in an American Congress, I prefer to refer to them as "American provisions." [Applause.] And, Mr. Speaker, I do congratulate the Congress of the United States, Democrats and Republicans, that, true to the highest traditions of our American country; that, disdaining to inject any element of partisanship into this body where we ought, on international questions, to stand united before the world, and do stand united before the world; almost as one man, Republicans and Democrats, with but one dissenting vote, and with but one dissenting voice in either House we have written into this revenue bill, about to become a law of the land, written again the ringing words of that patriot of old, "Millions for defense but not one cent for tribute." [Applause.] The eloquent gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER] has described the horrors of war; described them well; described them accurately; but, Mr. Speaker, there are worse things even than war; one of those things is national humiliation.

Unless we had written upon the statute books the provisions perfected to-day by the managers on the part of the House and of the Senate we would have gone forth, not as Republicans, not as Democrats, not as Socialists, but gone forth as Representatives of the people of the United States who had proven themselves unworthy of the traditions of a long list of illustrious and patriotic predecessors. [Applause.] To-night, with that law on the statute books, as it will be, we can go out and face not only our constituents—the least matter from this aspect—not only our country, to which we owe the highest measure of duty, but we can face the countries of the world and the judgment of the ages with the sure knowledge that in this time of turmoil and stress, with the world in arms, with powerful nations to be affected by this particular legislation, with knowledge upon our part that every word and every line of this law that is going on the statute books may mean the putting behind it, as the law itself says, the forces of the Army and Navy, we have, nevertheless, by a unanimous vote, put into the hands of the President of the United States the power to use the land and naval forces of the country for the upholding of our national honor. [Applause.] We have done it and done it properly; done it rightly; done it as Americans. We have dared deliberately, seriously, firmly, to assert our sovereignty as a Nation. Whatever else we have done of good or ill in this Congress—I for one will look back upon the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, no matter what else has occurred, with pride, with satisfaction, with gratification, with joy, because in this supreme regard we have proven ourselves to be worthy the name of Americans. [Applause.]

COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the committee to wait upon the President under the resolution adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. FITZGERALD, and Mr. MANN.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. CULLOP. To ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 5916. An act authorizing an investigation to determine the true north and west boundaries of the Warm Springs Reservation in Oregon; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 5611. An act providing for noncontiguous homestead entries within the former Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., of land of the character described in the enlarged homestead act of February 19, 1909; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 5450. An act to amend section 108, chapter 5, of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL DEFENSE, ETC.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the gentleman from Indiana to yield to me for a moment to call up Senate joint resolution 169 on the Speaker's table.

Mr. CULLOP. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up Senate joint resolution 169, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 169, interpreting section 50 of the act of June 3, 1916, for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes.

Resolved, etc., That in the interpretation and execution of section 50 of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1916, credit shall be given as for service in the senior division of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps to any member of that division for any period or periods of time during which such member has received or shall have received at an educational institution under the direction of an officer of the Army, detailed as professor of military science and tactics, a course of military training substantially equivalent to that prescribed by regulations under this section for the corresponding period or periods of training of the senior division, Reserve Officers' Training Corps.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what does this do?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, the object of this resolution is simply to meet a construction that has been placed by the War Department on the Army reorganization act passed June 3, 1916. Under that act there was a provision for the Reserve Officers' Corps in the civil educational institutions of this country. The War Department has construed the language to mean that no benefit can be received from the provisions of section 50 until there shall have been a performance of military duty on the part of the students in those educational institutions for two years.

In other words the act will not go into effect, so far as section 50 is concerned, until two years after its passage, whereas, as a matter of fact, students in a number of these institutions have already received a training substantially as provided in the law. I might state it in another way. If the act is construed as the War Department says, members of the junior and senior classes at colleges who have been trained by military officers will have to go in under the same provisions as colleges that would take advantage of it from now on.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, will not this bill give all the land-grant colleges an advantage over every other educational institution that is willing to come under the operation of the law and establish the course established in the national defense?

Mr. DENT. It will give them the advantage because of the fact that under the terms of this legislation they are considered as having already had the experience and training provided for under the act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that under the terms of the defense act, at these institutions a corps must be organized and established and the War Department must provide the course of instruction to be followed, but that no such regulations have yet been adopted. This is to permit them to say that some course heretofore followed is equivalent to the course which is to be adopted in the future. My recollection is further that a certain number of hours a week——

Mr. DENT. Yes; five hours——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Had to be devoted to military instruction. There is no provision in this resolution, as I heard it read, requiring as a minimum five hours' instruction per week in this course that is construed as equivalent to the course to be fixed?

Mr. DENT. Oh, yes. The resolution states they must have complied with the provisions contained in the Army reorganization act. It plainly states that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this legislation requested by the War Department?

Mr. DENT. It is. The Secretary of War requests it—urgently requests it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Do the men who are commissioned as officers in this reserve corps get any advantage by reason of seniority?

Mr. DENT. Those who have had the training in accordance with the provisions of the act will, of course, have the advantage.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It was asked whether this resolution gave an advantage to certain schools that now partake of the benefits of it. It does; but it might, perhaps, be well to say it is not a continuing advantage. It will not handicap any of the schools hereafter. It simply recognizes certain schools already recognized by the department as schools of superior excellence and training, and it will allow the students in those institutions now completing the two years' course to go on with the benefits of those two years so that they may complete the four-year course.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is to give certain provisions of the Army reorganization bill a retroactive force, as I understand it?

Mr. DENT. Yes. It gives to them an advantage to which they are entitled, because they have already performed the service prescribed in the act.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no monetary obligation against the Government entailed by the passage of this resolution?

Mr. DENT. No monetary obligation, except the obligation as to rations of 30 cents a day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Dating from what time will these rations apply?

Mr. DENT. They will date from now, if this resolution is adopted.

If this resolution is not adopted it will be two years hence. In other words, the members of these junior and senior classes would have no incentive to go into this service.

Mr. STAFFORD. So far as the retroactive rations are concerned, it will have no effect?

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. It only seeks to take advantage of the prior military training they already have?

Mr. DENT. Yes. It puts them on the same basis as the colleges that go into the business from the beginning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] is recognized.

[Mr. CULLOP addressed the House. See Appendix.]

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order heretofore made, adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, September 8, 1916, at 8 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Board of Engineers proposing a modification of the project for the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats, in the District of Columbia (H. Doc. No. 1357); to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Lynn Harbor, Mass. (H. Doc. No. 1358); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting information relative to the military service of Passed Asst. Surg. Clarence C. Kress (H. Doc. No. 1359); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ABERCROMBIE, from the Committee on Education, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 399) to create the Department of Education, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1197), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17577) for the relief of Samuel Schmitz, and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and a resolution were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DENT: A bill (H. R. 17786) providing for military highways between Foley and Fort Morgan, in Baldwin County, Ala.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GARDNER: A bill (H. R. 17793) to authorize an additional appropriation for the acquisition of a site and the erection of a Federal building at Newburyport, Mass.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi (by request): A bill (H. R. 17794) to abolish exemptions from taxation of private realty in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: Resolution (H. Res. 368) requesting the Secretary of Agriculture to furnish to the House of Representatives copies of data on which a certain portion of the annual report of the Department of Agriculture for 1912 was based and correspondence relative thereto; to the Committee on Agriculture.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CASEY: A bill (H. R. 17787) granting an increase of pension to Martin Connelly; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POWERS: A bill (H. R. 17788) granting an increase of pension to Andrew York; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAYBURN: A bill (H. R. 17789) for the relief of J. B. Smith, son of S. M. Smith; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILLIAMS of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 17790) granting an increase of pension to Elias Hanes; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CRAMTON: A bill (H. R. 17791) granting an increase of pension to Hattie J. Beecher; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRITT: A bill (H. R. 17792) granting a pension to Mrs. Lethea Chambers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PHELAN: A bill (H. R. 17795) granting a pension to Joseph B. Wade, alias John Bent; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. KETTNER: Petition of John E. Cowgill, general chairman, Order of Railroad Telegraphers, San Francisco, Cal., urging that House bill 9216 be passed in its original form; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of ministers and laymen of the Swedish Evangelical Free Church of North America in session assembled in Chicago, Ill., June 7 to 11, 1916, protesting against shipment of munitions of war to nations in Europe, with reasons therefor; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of C. E. Butler, executive, Knob Hill Orchards Association, Oakland, Cal., urging passage of the original Pomerene bill as passed by Senate on three different occasions; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of H. C. Bryant, Museum of Vertebrate Zoology, Berkeley, Cal., urging passage of Chamberlain-Hayden game-sanctuary bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Langley & Michaels Co., San Francisco, Cal., favoring passage of House bill 17396, introduced by Representative DOREMUS; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of W. B. Atkinson, Niland, Cal., favoring amendments to sections 2, 3, 4, 5, Cullop bill, H. R. 9216; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of James E. Addicott, ex-president of Association of Applied Arts and Sciences of California, San Francisco, Cal.; Frank H. Ball, State Normal School, Santa Barbara, Cal.; George A. Merrill, director California School of Mechanical Arts, San Francisco, Cal., favoring Smith-Hughes vocational education bill; to the Committee on Education.

Also, petition of John S. Mitchell, president Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles, Cal., protesting against proposed amendment to revenue bill suspending drawback payments on exports until six months after peace in Europe; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, telegrams from H. L. Titus, San Diego, Cal., and Paul Shoup, president Pacific Electric Railway, Los Angeles, Cal., asking that all electric railways be excluded from any proposed legislation regulating hours of service; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of mayor and common council, city of Riverside, Cal.; H. C. Cree, city clerk; and W. H. Schureman, secretary Chamber of Commerce, Pomona, Cal., urging that Interstate Commerce Commission is proper tribunal to deal with controversies between railroads and employees; that it should be invested with authority to deal with such controversies; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, telegram from W. Clayton, vice president, San Diego & Arizona and San Diego & Southeastern Railways, San Diego, Cal., protesting against eight-hour law; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MORIN: Protest of Western Insurance Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa., in re refund of overpayments applying solely to new income-tax act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RAKER: Memorial of San Francisco Board of Supervisors, petitioning the establishment of a naval academy and aviation school on the Pacific coast; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. TAGUE: Petition of George Daly, of Boston, Mass., in re foreign affairs; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. VARE: Memorial of Pennsylvania Pharmaceutical Association, relative to proposed changes in the patent laws; to the Committee on Patents.

Also, memorial of Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., relative to banking and currency laws; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. WARD: Petition of residents of Charlotteville, N. Y., in favor of the adoption of a prohibition amendment to the Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, letters of protest against condition of affairs between Great Britain and the United States, signed by Henry M. Weyrauch, of Liberty, N. Y.; Isaac W. Dietz, Peter Sternberg, William Ehcke, and Lawyer Sternberg, of Central Bridge, N. Y.; Leopold Haidegger and J. T. Dayton, of Neversink, N. Y.; Rev. H. C. Freimuth, of Liberty, N. Y.; and Rev. George J. M. Ketner, of Central Bridge, N. Y.; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, September 8, 1916.

(Legislative day of Thursday, September 7, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

THE FERTILIZER INDUSTRY (S. DOC. NO. 551).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate, the report of the Federal Trade Commission on the fertilizer industry as of date of August 19, 1916, which, with the accompanying paper and illustrations, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 169) interpreting section 50 of the act of June 3, 1916, for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 136. An act for the relief of Eva M. Bowman;

S. 5886. An act extending the time for the completion of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., authorized by an act entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled 'An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River,'" approved August 23, 1912;

H. R. 16763. An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes;

H. R. 17645. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15287. An act authorizing the addition of certain lands to the Colorado and Pike National Forests, Colo.;

H. R. 11472. An act to reserve certain lands and make them a part of the Pike National Forest; and

S. J. Res. 169. Joint resolution interpreting section 50 of the act of June 3, 1916, for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15842) to revise, amend, and codify the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States, extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of President and Vice President of the United States, limiting the amount which may be expended, providing for the publicity of campaign expenses, and for other purposes.

Mr. OWEN obtained the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire with the privilege of the Senator from Oklahoma at this time to have unanimous consent to bring up and have immediately considered without debate the bill providing for pensions of widows of the Spanish-American soldiers both of Cuba and the Philippines. If there were any way that that could be yielded to at this time I should like to have it done.

Mr. OWEN. I want to occupy the floor for only a few minutes, but if the matter does not lead to debate I shall not object.

Mr. LEWIS. I have made my request before. I will not take the Senator from his feet.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest to the Senator that he make the request later.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object to the request of the Senator from Illinois. I am very much opposed to that bill, and I object.

Mr. LEWIS. I understand the Senator from Georgia objects to the consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Of course there is no quorum here and the bill ought not to pass at all.

Mr. LEWIS. With that opposition of the Senator from Georgia——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have already expressed it clearly in the Senate. I think we would defeat the bill on a roll call in the Senate. It is an inexcusable raid on the Treasury.

Mr. LEWIS. I will not take the Senator from Oklahoma longer off his feet.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like, however, to make this statement in connection with what I have said: I would be gratified to see a bill drawn that would care for those who suffered from fever or sickness while in camp. I would support a bill that cared for those who actually went to Cuba or actually had anything to do with the war. But for the large majority, who never went outside of the United States at all and who were not sick at all while in camp, I consider it inexcusable to ask to treat them in any sense as the soldiers who fought during the Civil War were treated.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator will allow me for a moment, the Senator must be under a misapprehension as to the contents and purpose of the bill. It is a bill merely to requite those widows of soldiers whose lives were either lost in Cuba or the Philippines or having taken disease subsequently or as a result of the rigors of their service subsequently died.

I am very anxious about the bill, because I say, frankly, I served with the men and my affections are enlisted with them, and my knowledge of the necessity of this measure and the justice of it justifies me.

Mr. President, let me say in conclusion that I must inform the able Senator from Georgia that the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] and other Senators who oppose this bill under what I must insist is a misapprehension of its spirit that we can not hope to get enlistments in the present conflict in Mexico, or for any emergency, nor can we hope to keep them in service if they are to be met with the spectacle of what appears to be utter ingratitude on the part of their country.

I will not take the Senator from Oklahoma further from his feet, but I will press this bill to a successful passage in December. I now give ample notice of that determination.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I confess that I feel deeply disappointed at the defeat of the passage of the corrupt practices prevention act at this session. In discussing the matter I have not had any will to wound the feelings of our political opponents. I realize that the use of money improperly is not entirely confined to either party, and I do not wish to appear as believing that the corruption of elections is strictly confined to either party or any party at any time. The poverty of people, the poverty of men who have the suffrage, often leads to their being influenced to sell their votes, directly or indirectly, for money or reward, in the form of employment, and so forth, and in that way it has become possible to resort to corrupt practices on a scale very dangerous to the Republic.

A somewhat extreme example of this occurred in Ohio which was exposed and punished there by a great and honest county judge, Judge Blair, and his patriotic fellow citizens. I wish to put in the RECORD the statement of that case, an editorial in the Outlook, without reading, together with the statement of the case by Mr. Creel, in which the details are presented. Without reading it I will make the extract for the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WHAT ARE YOU GOING TO DO ABOUT IT?—THE SHAME OF OHIO.

[By George Creel and Sloane Gordon.]

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—Every third voter in a great county in a great State has for years regularly sold his vote, and the judge who haled him to court and spectacularly disfranchised him says the rest of the State is as bad. Here there is nothing—no plunderbund seeking unfair privileges—to strike back at; just everyday citizens who demand pay, not for voting this way or that, but for voting at all. The situation lends color to the sneering assertion of the corrupters of legislators that the people get what they deserve, and it is true that many public scandals are fruits of the people's own raising. Nevertheless, pointing to the latest sores in the body politic, the blush-bringing revelations of Ohio legislators' venality, the question is still asked of the American voter, with the assurance that it will be answered favorably, What are you going to do about it?]

In 1894, so the story goes, during an election in Adams County, Ohio, the treasurer of the Democratic executive committee counted out $600 in crinkly $2 bills with which to buy a party majority in Scott Township. A Democratic leader took the money, tucked it safely away, and started out on his errand of corruption in much the same matter-of-fact manner that rural mail carriers now go on their daily rounds. The day went by, and in the evening horsemen began to bring disturbing news from the Scott Township neighborhood. Neither money nor messenger had arrived, and the voters, peevish and impatient, had finally sold out to the Republicans for what they could get.

Late that night the leader drove into West Union and told at headquarters a harrowing tale of highway robbery. He had been "held up" at a lonely bend in the road, knocked down, and relieved of his roll of bills. In support of his thrilling story he showed much-muddied clothes and a badly battered hat. If you press for further facts concerning these alleged and strange happenings, the gossipy whittlers of Adams County will tell you that this leader was Albion Z. Blair, now a judge of the court of common pleas. The story as referred specifically to Judge Blair may be merely the invention of his political enemies, but it is typical of a situation which has disgraced Ohio politics for years. And the main point of interest about it is that this same Judge Blair is the man who hardly more than a year ago started a militant crusade against vote selling which resulted in the disfranchisement of about 1,600 voters—practically one-third of the entire electorate of Adams County. This was the beginning of Ohio's answer to Boss Tweed's sneering "What are you going to do about it?"

JUDGE BLAIR—WHOLESALE DISFRANCHISER.

That wholesale disfranchisement made Judge Blair a national figure. The corruption of Adams County became a scandal of national interest. And rightly so. For Adams County is a purely American farming community. There is not a foreigner in the county—even the usual Armenian rug peddler is missing—and the people have as hard and fast a pride in their unmixed blood as any Mayflower Bostonian. And if the conditions of our corrupt municipalities—of a New York, of a Chicago, of a Cincinnati—can obtain in these supposed strongholds of patriotism, here is a problem to appall the most optimistic.

A curiously interesting figure, this Judge Blair. A distinct "singed-cat" type—eyes squinted and dull behind thick glasses, tousled iron-gray hair covering ears and rusty coat collar, awkward, even shambling—he gives no hint of courage and large purpose, but rather expresses the snooping pursuit of card-playing youngsters, whisky-drinking country boys, and those other petty activities of the "reform" judge in rural centers. In Portsmouth, where he has lived since his election, he teaches a large Sunday-school class, imports evangelists of the Billy Sunday sort, and, according to newspaper print, frequently gets down on his knees to ask God's guidance whenever intuition deserts him, taking the repentant criminal along with him.

Aside from matters of a Scott Township nature, he talks very freely. Hunched up in an old, dilapidated chair, careless of the mud that covered him after the 14-mile drive from the railroad, he looked down on West Union's courthouse yard and made no bones about confessing his own intimate knowledge of corruption.

AUCTIONING VOTES IN AN OHIO TOWN.

"Of course I knew all about it. Who didn't?" He had made a prohibition speech in Indiana the night before, and this strain had reduced his voice to a growl. "I've lived here pretty near all my life, and it has been going on ever since I remember. I saw them buying and selling votes as a boy; as a man I watched the infamous traffic going on under everybody's eyes. Why, I've stood right out there on that corner and seen 'em auction off voters to the highest bidder, the mayor and prosecutor looking on. They used to buy and sell the franchise as though it were an apple or an egg—openly, noisily, haggling over the price. Each year the evil grew. It took on the familiarity of habit. Men, scrupulously honest in every other relation of life, bought votes or sold them, and the youth of the county, coming to their majority in this poisoned air, were the unconscious victims of a vicious custom."

Of all the things connected with this well-nigh incredible story, there is nothing more amazing than these admissions of long-standing knowledge, long-standing tolerance. For 20 years Adams County stewed in corruption until honor ran in the gutters like water, yet never a citizen raised his voice in protest, never an official took thought of his solemn oath. "Everybody" knew it! "Everybody" stood for it! Not until this series of articles was well under way was there the slightest movement in the direction of reform. Blair himself had been upon the bench four years when he walked into West Union last November and set about the work of regeneration!

It can not be denied, however, that he made a good job of it when he did begin. As a first step he impaneled a carefully selected grand jury made up of seven Democrats, seven Republicans, and one Prohibitionist, with ex-Congressman J. J. Fenton as foreman. Now, the Ohio statutes with regard to election frauds provide that "any person violating such a law is a competent witness against another so offending, and the testimony so given can not be used against the person so testifying."

Our criminal law is a sorry thing at best, but its most wretched feature is the premium that it puts on treachery. Judge Blair and the grand jury decided that the vote buyers of Adams County should be given first chance to "turn traitor," thus saving their precious skins at the expense of the poor devils they had bought. At a conservative estimate, there were about 200 vote buyers in Adams County and about 2,000 vote sellers, so that the proposition on its face had a look of unfairness. "It was not a question of individuals but of results," Judge Blair explained.

The treasurers and executive committees of both parties were called in and plainly told that they must "give up everything" if they wished to escape present and future prosecution. The judge knew and the grand jurors knew. What use for them to lie, even had they had the courage? Notebooks, scraps of paper, pencilled envelopes, and what not were brought in; memories were searched and then taken out and shaken to see if any name remained. Such was the desire to curry favor that many a man ran back time after time with records that he had forgotten. From treasurers to campaign managers, from campaign managers to township captains, from township captains to the active buyers, the money was followed until it reached the pockets of the voters.

THE STAMPEDE TO THE COURTHOUSE.

As party leaders, workers, and candidates sneaked in and out of the grand-jury room a white-gilled electorate held its breath. "Everybody" now knew that vote selling was a crime. And by shrouding the workings of the probe in absolute mystery Judge Blair cunningly added to the panic. There were none of the usual leaks, for the "snitchers," out of very shame, kept their mouths shut.

Having squeezed the informers dry, Judge Blair shattered the county's dry-mouthed silence with this ominous announcement: "The name of every vote seller is known. If the guilty parties will come into court of their own volition and make full confession, the greatest leniency will be shown them. If they keep silent, however, and put the county to the expense and trouble of serving papers and making arrests, the full penalties of the law will be imposed."

Of course this was somewhat of a "bluff"; but having seen the cowardice of the vote buyers, Judge Blair took a chance on the cowardice of the vote sellers. But the people, although panic-stricken, still clung to the Missouri idea and held aloof. Whereupon the grand jury returned four indictments against well-known residents of West Union, and the sheriff made the arrests. Judge Blair, after sternly explaining to the prisoners that they had forfeited the right to his promised consideration, fined them $25 and costs each, sentenced them to eight months in the Cincinnati workhouse, and disfranchised them for five years.

That was on Saturday. When Judge Blair reached the courthouse Monday morning he found the street, porches, halls, and rooms packed and jammed with sweating hundreds, every man fighting for the privilege of confession. All of them were "respectable" in the sense that they worked for a living and had never begged or stolen, and the fear of the Cincinnati workhouse was sick in their mouths. Seemingly possessed by the idea that Judge Blair's leniency—like a department-store bargain—was for one day only, they pushed and shoved and grabbed at his arms and coat tails.

It was impossible to arraign them individually, so great the number, and Judge Blair adopted the simple expedient of taking them a "roomful at a time."

"Um-m-m!" he would murmur, peering through his bull's-eye glasses at the familiar faces of old friends. "All those that desire to plead guilty will hold up the right hand."

The plea of guilty having been entered in this expeditious fashion, the men formed in single file to go by the judge's little table.

"How much did you get, Charlie?"

"Five dollars, Judge."

"They flimflammed you. Over your way the market price was $10."

Slowly, methodically, his short-sighted eyes pressed close against the paper, Judge Blair put down the names, fined them the amount received for their votes, imposed a suspended sentence of six months in the workhouse, and then disfranchised them for five years. With the slip of paper clutched tightly in his hand, each defendant elbowed out, scurried across the hall into Clerk Garman's room, and planked down the amount of his fine.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF DISHONOR.

Day after day the rush continued. The courthouse square was thick with wagons, buggies, and horses, and the hotels could not feed or shelter the crowds. Many came 20 miles or more, walking the entire distance, and could not go home for the night. Private houses were thrown open, and citizens went up and down the lines of half-frozen culprits with trays of sandwiches and buckets of hot coffee. One old woman, clutching a dented lantern and dragging a simple son, came in and entered a plea of guilty for the boy and the invalid husband left at home. She had walked 18 miles, starting at midnight, and the ice edges had cut through her shoes. Some one asked her, "Why?"

"Well," she said, her mouth sagging and her faded eyes full of tears, "my old man allus thought it was the law to pay us fer our votes."

Two shamefaced preachers confessed and were fined and disfranchised, and many octogenarians, wearing Grand Army buttons, came and went with the miserable stream. "Everybody else was gettin' it," they mumbled when Judge Blair looked long at the bit of bronze in their buttonholes.

One man, worth $50,000, had sold his own, his son's, and his son-in-law's votes for $7.50, "much below the market price," as Judge Blair commented. The majority, as a matter of fact, were well-to-do, owning large farms; but there were those to whom the sale of the vote meant bread and clothes. Hill people these, far removed from the rich bottomlands, forced to tear livelihood from an ungracious soil with their very finger nails. A mother confessed to selling her son's first vote for food money; another had used his $5 to pay the doctor that helped the stork; and still others bought shoes for their barefoot children. First corrupted through their necessities and then betrayed that the corruptionist might save his own hide!

At the end of two weeks the rush died down, first fear having abated somewhat. Judge Blair straightway wrote a grim statement for the two weekly papers, saying that there were still many to hear from, and warning them that the time for confession was growing dangerously short. He also had "dodgers" printed and pasted in hotels and at crossroads, pleasant reading for the casual guest or lonely horseman. In consequence the crowd swelled to former proportions, and over the hills—walking, riding, driving—came more of Adams County's repentant manhood. Twenty-five men, living at a distance, tramped all night to get in an early plea, and after reading a "dodger" one old man walked 9 miles to tell Judge Blair that he had received $15 for his vote instead of $11, as first stated.

From dawn to dark, week after week, West Union listened to the shuffling of nervous feet, the scratching of the judge's pen, and the clink of money in Clerk Garman's office. On March 1, 2,107 indictments had been found, 1,585 men had pleaded guilty, and $15,000 in fines had been collected. Many gave checks, others paid cash, and there were those too poor to do else than make arrangements for weekly installments. The fines usually ran from $5 to $20, but frequently reached $50, and in one instance, where a rich farmer tangled himself in a lie, Judge Blair made him pay $300.

WHY "HONEST" MEN SOLD THEIR VOTES.

Several hundred vote sellers are still recalcitrant, it is estimated, and Clerk Garman figures that when the "job" shall have been finished the total disfranchisement will be about 2,000 and the collection in fines over $26,000. And of those who shambled before Judge Blair, confessing their shame in halting mumbles, not one had other excuse than that "it was the custom"—which, by the way, is not the rustic plea of rustic stupidity that one might think. The Adams County man bitterly resents any attempt to excuse his corruption on the score of ignorance or poverty.

"But why was it the custom for decent, hard-working, law-abiding people to sell their votes like so many sodden hoboes in a Cox ward?"

"Partisanship."

And even after one has seen and studied West Union and ascertained the proper balance for a cane-bottomed chair around the big stove in the Florentine Hotel, no other answer can be won. Until the recent investigation, at least, every man, woman, and child in Adams County was either a Democrat or a Republican, and partisanship was carried into business, religion, and society. If the new preacher was a Democrat, the Republicans did not want him; the same way with schoolteachers; and in trade the Republican merchant got Republican custom and Democrats went to the Democratic hotel. The county has always been so evenly divided between Republicans and Democrats that candidates were elected by majorities of one and two and three, and the very closeness of the contest gave zest to rivalry. In the early days this partisanship probably had its base in the usual stupidities of tradition and prejudice, but as election succeeded election, Jefferson and Lincoln were quite forgotten, and campaigns came to be as entirely personal as a fist fight.

THE BEGINNING OF CORRUPTION.

Of course the use of money was only a question of time, just as it always will be anywhere under similar conditions. Brand Whitlock, James Faulkner, and other Ohio political authorities all agree that the first employment of money was in 1879, when Charles Foster ran for governor on the Republican ticket and sent $2 bills into Adams County—and all other counties—for the purchase of votes. It was a secret and shameful thing in those days, and only farm hands and a few small-town loafers could be bought.

The "thing" continued in its secret, $2 form until 1886, when Ed. Sillcott, eager to restore his county to the Democratic fold, hurried back from his Federal job in Washington, bringing stacks of $10 gold pieces. Sillcott bought openly, and his shining bribes caught many a respectable citizen, who saw "no sense" in letting money get away when "everybody seemed to be taking it."

The "Sillcott idea" grew and flourished. Prices went higher and higher with each succeeding election until $25 was the average. By 1890 that which had been secret and shameful became open and authorized, and attained to the dignity of habit. The slush fund, instead of being intrusted to nondescripts, was handled by the campaign managers and candidates themselves, and men of property and respectability joined with the proletariat in demanding higher prices for their votes. The prevalent corruption even took on economic angles, figuring in the giving and getting of credit. Merchants, confidently relying upon the golden flood that poured through the broken staves of the campaign "barrels," extended a much larger line of credit before election than afterwards. The county, in sober truth, came to look upon this bribe money as a legitimate source of income.

"We tried to stop it lots of times,' one of the party leaders confessed. "We'd get the candidates on the two tickets to sign a regular contract that no votes would be bought; but, pshaw, the people wouldn't stand for it. They were so used to getting cash for their votes that they felt like we were stealing their wages from them. Why, you would have thought that we were guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade. And first one side and then the other would sneak out of the purity agreement, and in a little while we'd be shelling out more money than ever before."

Strange as it may seem, nearly all the money came from the candidates themselves and local partisans, the State committees and State candidates contributing only nominal amounts. The Foster money in 1879 and the Silicott fund in 1886 were the only outside donations of any real importance. And as the county's electorate became more and more corrupt and the need of money increasingly imperative, men quit seeking the offices, and offices "took after" the men. Instead of selecting men of proved competence or even popularity, the campaign committees "beat the brush" for candidates with money. And having marked down their man, every imaginable influence was used to secure his acceptance, to work him up to the proper partisan pitch, to convince him that he owed it to his party and his friends to make the race. Men, fairly hounded into office seeking, have put mortgages on their farms to meet the heavy assessments and constant drains, and Adams County is still full of "paper" signed by candidates or indorsed by enthusiastic partisans. The mayor's salary in West Union is $25 a year, yet nominees for this empty honor have had to spend hundreds of dollars. One rich farmer always used $300 in a school-board election from no other motive than stark pride in having his party control. Not an officeholder in the county but has quit politics poorer than when he went in, and those that escaped bankruptcy consider themselves fortunate.

"But these well-to-do farmers—you don't mean to say that they didn't realize their dishonesty when they sold their votes?" was asked of a former campaign manager who was attempting to explain away the shame of the county.

"But they didn't sell them." He was very emphatic on this point. "Out of the 2,000 men implicated, I'll bet you that not more than 100 were ever bought away from their party. It was simply a case of paying the Democratic farmers to come out and vote the Democratic ticket, and the same way with the Republicans; that is, paying them for the time they lost from their work."

Not only were these men sufficiently corrupt to take money for their votes, but they were so utterly lost to all conception of citizenship that they would not vote at all unless they did get paid for it!

THE SHAME CROPS OUT IN THE STATEHOUSE.

To eliminate entirely the pleasant theory that the Adams County disgrace is endemic, Judge Blair insists that every other county in Ohio is equally corrupt. And the buying and selling of votes at home has had its fruit in the State-wide betrayal of the people and the lasting disgrace of the Commonwealth.

An investigation set on foot last spring proved beyond the possibility of denial that the present legislature is the most hopelessly corrupt body of public looters that ever disgraced Ohio or any other State. Already 19 indictments against members of the house and senate and employees thereof for soliciting and accepting bribes—for selling their political birthrights, for bargaining openly, brazenly, flagrantly, with the representatives of privilege—have been returned by a Franklin County (Columbus) grand jury, and there is little doubt that an additional score of indictments will yet be found. Among the senators indicted were the chairman of the senate judiciary committee, Isaac E. Huffman; five members of the senate finance committee—Dean, Cetone, Huffman, Crawford, and Andrews; one of the leaders of the Democrats in the House, Dr. George B. Nye; and one equally prominent leader of the Republicans in the lower body, Dr. A. Clark Lowry. The sergeant at arms of the senate, Rodney J. Diegel, and his assistant, Stanley Harrison, were also among those caught in the grand-jury net. And there were others. The trials have not all been held. On one count Nye—the first man tried—was acquitted. His defense was technical. Other indictments have been found and other trials held. The outcome, in so far as the punishment or the acquittal of individuals is concerned, is of small moment.

BUSINESS MEN ORGANIZE AGAINST GRAFTERS!

The astounding thing is that the investigations which led up to the indictments revealed in Ohio a degree of political and legislative degeneracy difficult to realize. The Ohio Legislature was shown to be so impure—the atmosphere so charged with the current of corruption—that the members who were arrested and made to answer for their shortcomings actually resented, in indignant periods, the interference on the part of officers of the law with their affairs. Opha Moore, secretary of the Ohio Manufacturers' Association—the man who urged the investigation—was condemned and reviled in legislative circles.

"He's a busybody who'd better tend to his own business," was the assertion of Senator Cetone, one of the indicted.

"I'll tell what I know about him," threatened Sergeant at Arms Diegel. What Diegel knew was that he had been receiving money from Moore to keep Moore posted in relation to certain measures up before the legislature. Diegel was taking money from the Ohio Manufacturers' Association on the one hand and from lobbyists on the other; was negotiating for the delivery of the votes of senators and representatives, and was caught taking $200 in marked bills from a detective hired by Moore, the said detective posing as a lobbyist. These details are merely illustrative of the conditions that have been prevailing for years in Ohio's capital. The fact is that the industry of trafficking in bills has been so well established that for their own protection the manufacturers of the State were compelled to organize systematically to withstand the attacks of the house and senate wolves! And the worthy legislators joked about the debauchery and fought back. The senate, with many indicted members, went so far as to pass a resolution to furnish accused members with immunity baths. Under the Ohio law a witness before a senate investigating committee is exempt from criminal prosecution. No sooner were indictments returned against a number of the members than the protection of this law was invoked by the introduction of a resolution providing for a senate investigating committee. The grand jury was in session at the time. It was doing all the investigating necessary. For a senate investigation to be injected at that time meant complication at the best. Gov. Harmon, Attorney General Timothy S. Hogan, County Prosecutor E. C. Turner, and every officia. honestly intent on seeing that justice was unhampered, opposed the selection of the investigating committee. Public protest reached from the Ohio River to Lake Erie. It screamed its objections. But the Ohio senate passed the resolution nevertheless and proceeded to appoint the committee. Fortunately, the house, without the concurrence of which no appropriation can be made, declined to vote money for the maintenance of the committee. But that committee held meetings anyhow until it became evident that the public protest would develop into a cyclonic demand for senatorial convictions.

But to return to the actual corruption of the legislature. In Ohio within recent years "milking" has become one of the most highly profitable industries. At the beginning of each session swarms of lobbyists, many of them ex-members, have appeared in Columbus laden with carefully drawn measures, the passage of any one of which would mean much financial loss to some "interest." The lobbyist would establish friendly relations with a member of the house or the senate and prevail upon him to introduce the bill. The next move on the part of the lobbyist would be to arrange with the threatened "interest" to prevent the passage of the measure, the legislator introducing it being, as a rule, a party to the game.

According to some estimates there were 118 "milkers" introduced in the 1911 session of the legislature. Prominent among them was the optometry bill. It had been up before. It was backed by a powerful lobby. It sought to give opticians the right to examine eyes and prescribe glasses without complying with the regulations with which regularly graduated practitioners must comply.

A bill compelling coal operators to pay miners for coal mined before it is screened was another.

A bill limiting working hours for women; one compelling the inspection of steam boilers; a measure to license itinerent drug venders; the Whittemore insurance bill, creating a special code for certain classes of insurance companies—these are a few of the many Ohio "milkers." Some of those who presented and advocated these bills are honest and earnest men. But the wolves among the legislators smelled out and pursued the opportunities which either the passage or the defeat of each and every one of the 118 milk-producing measures afforded.

THE CHIEF AMONG THE GRAFTERS.

In this, as in former legislatures, the corruptionists organized early in the session. In the senate the appointment of standing committees was taken out of the hands of the lieutenant governor, the presiding officer, and turned over to a committee on committees. This odorous aggregation planned brazenly to place the important committees under the control of members of the lootbund. Of the senators already indicted, every one was a member of the powerful finance committee. The judiciary committee was practically controlled by Senator Huffman and his friends. And on other important committees can be found the names of Huffman, Cetone, Andrews, and the other senators who were trapped and indicted.

Rodney Diegel, the sergeant at arms—who has been found guilty of aiding and abetting the bribing of senate members—used to conduct a hotel at Put in Bay, in Lake Erie. To this resort the legislators went for their annual reunion. Diegel became acquainted with them, and through this acquaintanceship secured his place on the State pay roll. He became what was facetiously termed the "betting commissioner of the senate." It was a matter of common knowledge that Diegel was the man to see when one found it necessary to open negotiations for either the passage or defeat of a measure. Diegel would take the proposition under advisement, consult with his friends in the senate, and furnish an estimate of the cost. If the estimates were satisfactory, Senator Huffman, for instance, would take the matter in hand. Were the bill to be killed, he would, through the powerful organization which he had perfected in the body, have it referred to the judiciary committee, where it would receive sepulture in a convenient pigeonhole, no matter how great the clamor for its presentation.

THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON "ESTIMATES."

In the course of events it was found expedient by the senate grafters to work in conjunction with those of the house. Dr. George B. Nye, the member from Pike County, who had served three terms and was leader of the Democratic grafters on the house side, entered into the arrangement. Dr. A. Clark Lowry, Republican from Lawrence County, occupied the same position with relation to the Republican minority. He and Nye worked together and furnished "estimates." It is most confidently asserted that they paid more attention to rounding up and securing funds from bribe givers than did even the assiduous grafters of the senate. So well was Nye's grafting propensity known in Columbus that men about about town joked with him about it.

"Say, Doc," remarked a Columbus man to Nye one afternoon in the Neil House cigar store, "I believe they've given you the double-cross on the ——— bill," mentioning an obscure measure that was never looked upon as a "producer."

Nye took it very seriously. "Well," he replied sadly, "I've suspected that I was getting the worst of it on three or four jobs, but that's a new one. I haven't got time to watch everything. It's pretty tough to deal with a bunch of crooks like I've got to handle."

As the months dragged on the members of the Ohio Manufacturers' Association became convinced that they would have to adopt drastic methods to stop the increasing deviltries of the statehouse banditti. They had tried argument, had employed expensive attorneys to present arguments before committees in order to prevent the passage of notoriously bad measures, had used every honorable means to accomplish results, and had been met on every hand with hints that money would be required to "take care of the boys." Opha Moore, the secretary, who knew much of the inside workings of the plunderbund by reason of his long contact with bribe solicitors, approached and employed Diegel as his representative. The sergeant at arms was not only willing but anxious. Only he did not know at the time that he was to be used to further the ends of justice. He accepted a weekly salary from Moore, in return for which he was to give the secretary of the Manufacturers' Association information in regard to the status of certain measures, and also to advise him as to where and when money could be judiciously placed in order to facilitate or retard legislation, according to the requirements. Diegel reported regularly to Moore. Slowly but surely he unwittingly spun a web about those of his senatorial associates who were "amenable." He told Moore, in the course of various conversations, of 29 members of the senate who could be "reached." Inasmuch as there are but 34 senators, the proportion of crooks, according to the word of the sergeant at arms, is rather large. However, proof is lacking to confirm Diegel's statement in this regard.

Moore moved swiftly. He consulted members of his organization and secured sufficient financial assistance to proceed. He held a number of conferences with the county prosecutor. Then he engaged William J. Burns, the famous detective, to assist in trapping the thieves. Burns sent three of his operatives. They engaged rooms at the Chittenden Hotel and soon scraped up acquaintance with Diegel. They let it be quietly known that they were lobbyists and in Columbus for the purpose of killing the Whittemore insurance bill. For days they entertained members of the house and senate, bought drinks lavishly, and financed "joy rides." In their rooms at the hotel they installed a dictagraph, an instrument so delicate that it transmits the slightest whisper uttered in a room to the person at the receiving end of the line. In an apartment adjoining that in which the detectives received, negotiated with, and paid money to Ohio's corrupt senators and representatives a court stenographer was installed, and he took down, word for word, the amazing conversation which the bribe soliciting and accepting legislators indulged in. They flocked to the rooms of the Burns operatives and discussed the sale of votes openly. The detectives adroitly led them into naming the prices they wished for their votes. Nye, the leader of the Democratic corruptionists in the house, became loquacious on several occasions and gave his opinions of other lobbyists without reserve. He has always been regarded as a "wet" man in the legislature, but he confided to the detectives (and the dictagraph) that the liquor lobby was composed of a number of "short skates" who wanted a man to vote their way for nothing.

THE PRICE OF AN OHIO LEGISLATOR.

Representative Owen J. Evans, of Stark County, a friend of the late President McKinley, and the man who presented the name of United States Senator ATLEE POMERENE to the Democratic caucus last January, committed himself irrevocably as a bribe taker. He subsequently confessed in court and was fined $500.

Senator L. R. Andrews, of Ironton, a man looked upon as of irreproachable character in his home community—a man of wealth and position—went so far as to write an impatient note to one of the detectives because he had been kept waiting too long in the lobby of the hotel on the day on which he was to receive his bribe money. He received $200 in marked bills. Similar amounts were received by Senators Huffman, Cetone, and others. Diegel got $200 for negotiating the sale of the legislative votes.

CORRUPTERS AND CORRUPTED LINE UP.

When the explosion came and legislators were indicted by the grand jury there was consternation running riot in the legislative halls. For two days no business of consequence was transacted in either the house or the senate. Then the forces of evil rallied, and the most determined efforts were made to thwart prosecution. Nothing so striking comes out of the whole nauseous mess as the line-up of a majority of the senate in an effort to save the indicted members from conviction. Columbus literally rang with the cries of denunciation directed against the Ohio Manufacturers' Association and the Burns detectives. Legislators held indignation meetings and put up such a show of outraged innocence that the unknowing were more or less convinced.

Many powerful interests—those who have illegitimately sought law passage or law death—are strikingly energetic in their efforts to hamper the prosecution. Diegel, the convicted sergeant at arms, is a poor man, but one of the attorneys who defended him for taking $200 is said to have received a fee of $6,000. The total amount spent in the defense of Diegel alone is estimated at not less than $20,000. A veritable battalion of high-priced attorneys have watched every move of every trial so far conducted, and the struggle to keep out evidence and to acquit those accused is still going on.

The Franklin County grand jury, after returning 19 indictments, recessed for an indefinite period early in June. The trials of Nye (on one count), Evans, and Diegel were pushed and resulted in two convictions. The trials of Huffman, Andrews, Lowry, and the rest are to be resumed at the fall term of court, with the prospect that there will be many convictions. Also is there the certainty that there will be many more indictments to pave the way for more trials. The situation is disgraceful, sordid. The only credit is that public opinion throughout the State is at last compelling an honest attempt to answer the sneer of its grafters, "What are you going to do about it?"

BRIBERY AS A LOCAL CUSTOM.

For many years persons who were solicitous about the political morals of Ohio have been hearings reports of evil conditions prevailing in some of the southern counties of the State. Stories were told of voters coming to the voting places in platoons and sitting on the fences all day long because no man had hired them to vote for the candidates of their own party. These tales were generally supposed to be more or less apocryphal—the product of vivid imaginations. Within the last few weeks, however, there has been written on the records of the common pleas court of Adams County, Ohio, a recital which proves that rumor has been following far behind fact. Under the probing of Judge A. Z. Blair, of that court, and a grand jury of intelligence and force, a state of things has been coming to light which makes the most lurid tales of the muckrakers look pale by contrast. Nearly 1,500 voters had, at the latest reports, been indicted by the grand jury for selling their votes in the last election, and the list was swelling by the addition of 100 or more indictments every day. It seems probable that before the investigation is completed more than one-third of the six or seven thousand voters of the county will have been indicted. Indicted voters are coming to the county seat in troops from all parts of the county, receiving sentence, and accepting the penalty. In most cases a light fine is imposed, with a workhouse sentence, which is suspended, and in every case the offender is disfranchised for five years. The knowledge that this lenient treatment will be given those who voluntarily come into court and plead guilty, while the full penalty of the law, which involves a heavy fine and imprisonment, will be inflicted on those who try to evade the law, makes the indicted men eager to come in and accept the terms offered by the court. There have been but three or four who pleaded not guilty, and these men, against whom the offense was easily proved, are now in the workhouse. It appears that up to date only the sellers of votes have been indicted. Intimations have been given out that buyers of votes would presently be called to account, but that has not yet been done. The reason of this procedure is not stated. Judge Blair appears to be a clear-headed and kind-hearted magistrate, and he must be supposed to have good reasons for his policy. There are, of course, many more sellers than buyers—probably ten times as many; and the policy of using the buyers to catch the sellers will undoubtedly produce larger results. The party committeemen who have done the buying are well known, and by granting them immunity the authorities may obtain the names of the vote sellers. There seem to be no grudges harbored by the vote sellers against those who are thus exposing them; probably all parties feel that they are escaping with light punishment. Perhaps the balance may be redressed before the proceeding is ended; and in all such cases, when wide-branching evils are exterminated by law, some sore straining of the equities must be looked for.

WHAT'S TO BE DONE?

It is instructive to note that this slump of citizenship has not occurred among foreigners or negroes, nor in the slums of cities, but in a purely rural population, and among voters of native American stock. Adams County is one of the Ohio River counties, about 50 miles east of Cincinnati; its surface is rough and rugged, its population consists almost wholly of farmers; it has no manufactures of importance; it is traversed by but one railway; its county seat, West Union, is the only one in the State not on a railway line. There is no village or city in the county with a population of 2,000. The original settlers were from Virginia, Kentucky, and the north of Ireland. It is in such a population as this that the practice of bribery in elections has grown to such dimensions. It is not a recent development. For many years the evil work has been going on; many of those now arraigned testify that the thing was so common that they supposed it was all right. It was not only poor men who accepted bribes; well-to-do farmers sold their votes for a good round figure; two or three ministers of the Gospel are among the indicted. From $10,000 to $25,000 was distributed at every election; if there were 2,000 bribe takers, this would make the average price of a vote in a good year $12. The money seems to have been mainly expended by the committeemen among the voters of their own party; there was a gentleman's agreement among them that neither partisan was to poach upon the other's domain. This was done surreptitiously, but it was under the ban. The purchase of votes, as a rule, was done with the utmost openness; the buyers met the sellers in the public streets and bought voters as they would buy cattle in the markets. Is Adams County the sole offender among the 88 counties of Ohio? It is not probable. The Adams County people say that similar conditions prevail in six or eight of the neighboring counties, and there seems to be ground for their assertion. It is likely that similar investigations will be set on foot by grand juries in other counties. The people of Adams County appear to be disposed to take credit to themselves as being the first to deal thoroughly with a great public wrong. Perhaps that credit is due them. Gov. Harmon in his recent message deals with the matter briefly but trenchantly. He emphasizes the maxim that the briber is the more dangerous and more disreputable person, and urges that the law be administered with this principle in view; he deplores the repeal of the Garfield corrupt-practices law, which the politicians of Ohio lately found inconvenient and put out of way, and recommends its reenactment; and he makes a much more radical suggestion—that the State undertake to provide for all the necessary expenses of elections and make all party expenditures for such purposes illegal. Some such stringent remedy may be found necessary. As between the seller and the buyer of votes we do not find it as easy to choose as Gov. Harmon does. In any case, it is evident that in certain portions of Ohio, and doubtless also in other sections of the country, much elementary teaching is needed in the ethics of democratic citizenship.

Mr. OWEN. In this very egregious case in Adams County, Judge Blair, who was the county judge, finding that there was a widespread conspiracy throughout the county to sell votes indifferently to either party, took the steps necessary to expose it. Having obtained the evidence, he indicted 1,700 vote sellers, and disfranchised over a third of the voters of the county. How many more were guilty no man knew. Unhappily that dangerous condition was not confined to Adams County. It also was true in Scioto County, and a large number in the same way were disfranchised there. It was not confined to Adams and Scioto Counties. The same system was known to obtain in at least six or eight counties adjacent.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] a day or two ago pointed out that in the nomination of a senatorial candidate in that State—Mr. Myron Herrick—over $50,000 had been expended, and an estimate was made that there had been expended probably $200,000 for the nomination. While no charge of bribery is made, it is clear that a sound public policy will not justify such large expenditures.

As I called attention to a day or two ago, Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer, whom I quote without reading, stated that $750,000 had been used by various interests in bringing about the nomination of a Senator from Pennsylvania, as follows:

[From hearings before Committee on Privileges and Elections on January 6, 1915, by Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer, Democratic candidate for governor of Pennsylvania, p. 8.]

So that we have various Republican organizations in the State admitting that they expended in and about the election of Senator PENROSE about three-quarters of a million of dollars.

And when I say that this money has been expended in and about the securing of the election of Senator PENROSE, I speak advisedly, because while I was a candidate for governor in Pennsylvania the Republican candidate for governor, Dr. Martin G. Brumbaugh, refused publicly the aid of the Republican State organization, refused to allow it to expend any money for him and in his behalf, and publicly stated that he would not accept any assistance from it. So he organized, or somebody organized for him, the Brumbaugh citizens' committee, which conducted his campaign throughout the State, and it expended a large sum of money, the amount of which I do not have with me just now, which is in addition to these items I have mentioned. So that the money of which I am speaking is the money which was used for the purpose of electing Senator PENROSE.

Now, Mr. President, the unwise, impolitic, and dangerous use of money is not confined to any State. I think that the State of Ohio is entitled to great credit for having purged itself of that evil in Adams County. It is generally regarded as a slur on the State to refer to matters of that kind. I do not think it should be so regarded, because such abuses will occur anywhere where human beings exist and where the statutes are not well drawn and where the temptation arises through ambition or political or pecuniary interests.

What I object to is that the laws of the United States do not expressly forbid it by a decent corrupt-practices prevention act.

What I do want to call the attention of the country to is that it has been the opposition of the Representatives of the Republican Party in this body that has made it impossible at this session to pass this act to stop corrupt practices as far as the law may do so in this country.

In the other House, when this matter was passing there, there was some levity displayed, which I very greatly regretted, with regard to the attempt to stop corrupt practices. One of the most distinguished leaders there, an ex-Speaker [Mr. CANNON] referred to a corrupt-practices act as an unmitigated demagogy, and again referred to it as a joke:

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. * * * I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. He is familiar with these bills. Does the gentleman's bill make it any more difficult to commit perjury or violate the law than the existing law? [Laughter.]

The whole thing, in my judgment, is simply undiluted demagogy.

[From CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 13, 1916, p. 10979.]

Mr. COX. What was the general purpose in only requiring items reported of expenditure in excess of $10? In my country, on both sides, it is the $1 and $2 bills of which the banks are drained about two days previous to the election that does the work out there.

Mr. RUCKER. Well, I never lived in Indiana and never participated in politics there, and perhaps I do not understand it. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. President, if the people of this country permit the governing power of the country to be bought with money and regard a corrupt-practices prevention act as a joke and demagogy, they need have no expectation of having decent government or to have incorrupt statesmen.

I tried five times in vain to obtain Republican consent that a vote might be had upon this bill, because under the Senate rules the right of filibuster makes consent necessary to obtain action within any reasonable time. Five different times the leader of the Republican Party on this floor [Mr. SMOOT] refused his consent, and Senators PENROSE, GALLINGER, and CURTIS and others filibustered against the passage of this bill. When at last, under great difficulty, the bill was made the unfinished business the RECORD discloses an organized filibuster against the bill, requiring to be read at length the text of the House bill, which had previously been read twice, which had been printed long ago, while the Senate Chamber itself was vacated, no one listening to the monotonous chanting of the Clerk, and then requiring every word of the bill to be read over again, and then requiring the report to be read, and then requiring every long exhibit in the report to be read, requiring to be read the existing statutes relating to the publicity of campaign contributions; then requiring the Journal, which had not been read for very many days, while the continuous legislative day had been extended through a long period of time, to be read, and demanding that it be read slowly "in order that the dignity of the Senate might be preserved," but incidentally that time might be killed.

Mr. President, it having become perfectly obvious that the Republican leaders of this body are determined that this measure shall not come to a vote, and it being perfectly obvious that under the permitted practice of the Senate the Senate majority could not require a vote but must yield to the demands of the minority or exhaust the minority in a physical contest of weeks, the friends of the bill find themselves confronted in passing this bill with the intolerable difficulty of an unlimited delay. Many of the Senators and Members of the House, candidates for reelection, are anxious to return to the campaign.

We have been, therefore, compelled by necessity to yield our righteous demand for the passage of this bill. We are compelled to yield to the bad conditions which are permitted by the rules of this body, rules which I have for four years demanded to be changed, and which it is perfectly obvious to the country must be changed if the representatives of the people of the United States are to be permitted to carry out the promises made to the people in campaigns.

Mr. President, how can the Republican Party, if it should be successful in the pending campaign, carry out any promises they might make if a minority can prevent the majority from acting in this body, and with what face can the Democrats go to the country making any promises to the country and hope to deliver those promises if a minority in this body can exercise the right of veto over the majority and prevent the majority from bringing any question to a vote except practically by unanimous consent or by a physical exhaustion of the opposition.

The same kind of filibustering opposition—invisible to the general public—has used up the time of this body for weeks and months on the various steps which have been taken by Democracy to fulfill their many promises to the people. A most extraordinary record it is of actual Democratic accomplishment nevertheless. But when we undertook to revise the tariff we had to stay here weeks and months and meet in the early morning and run until late at night in order to accomplish that purpose. The same thing was true of the Federal reserve act, of the Clayton antitrust bill, the Federal Trade Commission act, and so forth ad nauseam.

Without reading I wish to place in the RECORD a statement of these accomplishments which I made in Everybody's Magazine.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SAYS SENATOR OWEN, DEMOCRAT.

Parties must be judged by their conduct, not by their virtuous protestations. What have the Democrats done in the last few years?

First, they overthrew machine rule, or Cannonism, in the House of Representatives, and overthrew machine rule in the Senate.

They fought for and established direct election of United States Senators.

They lowered the monopoly-promoting features of Republican prohibitive tariff schedules to the revenue-producing point, while affording all the incidental protection that American industries honestly required.

They put the necessaries of life on the free list.

Under this tariff act our exports and imports have increased from four billion to six billion in two years. Our imports, in spite of the war, have increased from eighteen hundred and ninety-three millions to two billion one hundred and fourteen millions; our balance of trade from four hundred and seventy millions to nineteen hundred and seventy millions, and the Treasury is in magnificent condition, with a net balance of over $230,000,000 in the general fund, and $1,825,233,000 of gold, and $501,496,000 in the Treasury vaults.

The Democrats established a progressive income tax and a progressive inheritance tax, placing more largely the taxes upon those who can pay them without suffering.

The Democrats have taken steps to provide a permanent nonpartisan Tariff Commission for the express purpose of safeguarding American manufacturing interests.

The Democrats have passed a Federal Trade Commission act for the purpose of protecting honest business men against the unfair practices of powerful competitors.

The Democrats have passed the Clayton antitrust bill, making unlawful various unfair practices, presenting conspiracies and monopolies in their incipiency, preventing unfair price discrimination, interlocking directorates, monopoly-promoting contracts; removing labor from the commodity class, and giving the American laboring man a new charter of industrial freedom by providing a trial by jury in contempt cases, by abolishing government by injunctions, and recognizing the right of legitimate organized cooperation.

The Democrats passed the Federal reserve act, taking the control of the credit system out of the hands of the Money Trust and placing it where it belonged, in the hands of the people of the United States, giving freedom to all independent banks and to the business men of the Nation, making panics impossible, stabilizing industry, commerce, transportation, and finance, and establishing a sound basis for the magnificent prosperity now moving forward in the United States. Under this great act the national banks increased their deposits over two billions in two years, while the State banks increased their deposits over two hundred millions.

Why did the standpat Republicans violently filibuster against these wise and just legislative acts? Under these laws both capital and labor are busy and happy.

The Democrats passed the seaman's act, giving liberty to all sailors who entered our ports, providing for safety at sea by adequate lifeboats and rafts.

Why did the Republican leaders strenuously oppose this bill and then let it pass both houses without a record vote?

The Democrats have strenuously demanded a Government-owned merchant marine, providing ships as an auxiliary for the Navy, for transports, supply ships, coaling ships, repair ships, hospital ships, tenders, etc., and will pass it this session after having exhausted Republican opposition.

The Democrats repealed the Republican act giving free tolls to the Atlantic coastwise shipping trust through the Panama Canal. They thus removed the charge against the United States of international injustice and of the violation of our treaty with Great Britain and Colombia, secured a fair deal to the Federal Treasury, and put the honor and integrity of the United States on the high plane it should always occupy.

The Democrats passed the famous agricultural-extension act for the systematic promotion of agriculture, animal industry, and farm economies. Under it thousands of farm demonstrators are organizing the farms of the Nation along the most intelligent lines, and organizing thousands of boys' and girls' clubs, contesting for supremacy in corn, cotton, animal industry, canning, and farm economies.

The Democrats passed the rural-credits bill providing a means by which the farmers of the country may obtain cheap money on long time, thus stimulating agriculture, and enlarging the food supply and raw materials of America, while making the farm more attractive and valuable.

The Democrats passed the good-roads bill, which will, within the next five years, expend $85,000,000 in organizing the States of the Nation in good-road building.

The Democrats passed the transportation employees arbitration and conciliation act.

The Democrats have vigorously favored the conservation bills for the conservation of water power on navigable streams and on the public domain, the conservation of our mineral lands, forests, and the reclamation of arid and swamp lands.

The Democrats have promptly met every emergency. When the European war broke out, they instantly expanded the Vreeland-Aldrich currency act and furnished the people of the United States five hundred millions of currency, all of which has been retired. The Democrats furnished money and ships with which to bring distressed Americans from Europe in the summer of 1914.

The Democrats, through the Secretary of the Treasury, placed millions of the people's funds at the disposal of the people for the purpose of moving the crops, when the New York banks indecently declared themselves unequal to the task, in 1913 and 1914.

The Democrats have magnificently developed the parcel post and the rural free delivery.

They provided for the building of a Government-owned railroad in Alaska to develop the enormous treasure house belonging to the American people in that vast Territory.

The Democrats negotiated peace treaties with all the great nations of the world with whom it was possible—24 in number, including France, Great Britain, Russia, Spain, Italy, China, Norway, and Sweden.

The spirit of these treaties is that there shall be no war until the differences are thoroughly investigated and reported on by a permanent international commission nor for 12 months after diplomacy has failed. The nations who have agreed to this system involve 1,200,000,000 people.

The Democrats, in revising the tariff, drove the corrupt lobby from Washington City, and exposed their nefarious practices and Republican affiliations.

The Democrats have strengthened the corrupt-practices act that will put an end to the wrongful use of money in controlling government by corruptly influencing party nominations and party elections, and have put in the penitentiary many who used corrupt practices in Federal elections.

They have passed a child-labor bill to conserve the child life of the Nation; in this the Republicans cooperated, in deference to the overwhelming sentiment of the American people.

They have taken steps, the Republicans assisting, to fully prepare the United States against invasion by foreign enemies.

In the matter of the preparedness program, the Democrats have had the support of the Republican leaders.

The Democrats, under the leadership of President Wilson, have carried out with firmness and with resolution the traditional and unbroken policy of the Government of the United States of settling grievances by diplomatic negotiations, undismayed by political abuse at home.

From President Washington down to President Wilson, this has been the unbroken American policy, wherever it was possible to arrange peaceful settlement in that way.

President Wilson, with infinite skill and patience, has firmly and steadily adhered to this policy, and has avoided declaring war on Austria and Germany, and obtained from them without going to war a recognition of the principles of international law for which we contended.

In like manner our grievances against Great Britain for trespasses upon our commerce have already been adjusted in large measure by diplomatic negotiations.

The administration has been severely denounced for not resorting to more drastic action. To have gone further than President Wilson did go could have meant nothing less than war with the European nations, with its far-reaching and disastrous consequences to life, to property, and to the stability of the whole world.

Mr. Root, in his New York Republican keynote speech, denounced the Democratic administration for its "lack of foresight to make timely provision for backing up American diplomacy by actual and assured military and naval force."

Mr. Root himself and his associates had charge of the Government for 12 years preceding Mr. Wilson's administration and had not exercised the foresight which he finds lacking.

Mr. Wilson in two years authorized seventy millions to be spent in the fighting force of the Navy, as against twenty-six millions during the last two years of the Taft administration. The Democratic appropriations on account of the Army and Navy for the ensuing year will amount to the staggering sum of $693,783,000, not to mention authorizations which will add to the expenditure $477,454,000, during the next three years. In addition, we provide for $158,000,000 annually for pensions on account of past wars.

The Democratic preparedness program is meeting with the cordial support of the Republicans in Congress and there is, in fact, no issue between the two parties on this ground, and few citizens will counsel higher taxes on the American people than these expenditures must impose.

Regarding our foreign affairs, Mr. Root himself, as Secretary of State, instructed the American delegates to The Hague conference in 1907 that the condition upon which the American delegates signed The Hague convention was that—

"Nothing contained in this convention shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions of policy of any foreign State," etc.

Yet the Republicans, with obvious hypocrisy, denounce Mr. Wilson for not having protested the violation of the neutrality of Belgium.

The Democrats are denounced for not intervening in Mexico, but, in respecting the sovereignty of the Mexican people, and not intervening to settle their domestic revolution, the Democrats have followed the policy laid down by all administrations, and never more forcibly than by Abraham Lincoln, April 6, 1861. (S. Doc. 361, 64th Cong., 1st sess., p. 16.)

Senator Root himself opposed intervention in Mexico. (Ibid., 17.)

Following the unbroken policy of the United States of nonintervention, President Wilson, in accordance with the wish of all the Republics of North and South America, has kept us out of war with Mexico. The people of the United States do not want war, not even with the weakest of our neighbors. The American people do not want to take away from the poor Mexicans anything they have. The American people do not want to play the bully toward Mexico nor to take advantage of the extreme distress in which those people find themselves in their revolutionary attempts to overthrow the military clique which had seized everything of value in Mexico under the form of a republic while exercising the powers of a commercialized military oligarchy.

The Democrats truly sympathize with the common people of Mexico, as the Republicans loudly claim to do in their national platform of 1916.

The Democrats in their national platform point out in part the Democratic accomplishments for adequate preparedness, for patriotic Americanism, for Pan American accord, for the Monroe doctrine, for a merchant marine, conservation of our resources, for good roads, for a living wage to all employees, an eight-hour working day, the adoption of safety appliances, sanitary conditions for labor, adequate compensation for industrial accidents, standards for a uniform labor law where minors are employed, for special conservation of the comfort and health of women in industrial pursuits, for the care of superannuated employees, for the child-labor law, a Federal bureau of safety, the extension of the Federal Bureau of Mines, the extension of employment bureaus, the adjustment of industrial strikes by conciliation, for the civil service, for the protection of the public health, for economy and a budget system, for prison reforms, for a generous system of pensions to soldiers and their widows, for woman suffrage, for the development of Alaska, for the government of Territories through bona fide resident officials, for cloture in the United States Senate.

The Republican platform takes no issue with these proposals, but solemnly assures the country that it is loyal to American traditions, that it knows no allegiance except to the Constitution, to the Government and to the flag of the United States. The Republicans assert their belief in the Monroe doctrine, in better relations with Pan America, express their deep sympathy with Mexico, declare their belief in protecting the rights of citizens, favor rural credits, rural free delivery, merchant marine without Government ownership, economy and a national budget, conservation, civil-service reform, governing Territories by bona fide resident officers, child-labor law, workmen's compensation law, accident compensation law, woman suffrage.

They find themselves unable to criticize the great constructive legislative program which the Democrats have carried out with the exception that they object to the Underwood Tariff Act, because, "under its administration imports have enormously increased, while the revenues of which we stand in such dire need, have been greatly reduced."

The fact is, our revenues are larger than ever, and the Treasury is full to overflowing. Our imports and exports combined have increased 50 per cent in two years. The balance of trade has increased in our favor by fifteen hundred millions of dollars per annum, and is now over $1,900,000,000, for the fiscal year to June 30, 1916, and Europe is paying this balance by shipping American securities into this country, where they are being absorbed at the rate of about $5,000,000 a day. The country was never in a more prosperous condition and it is due directly to the wise and humane statutes which the Democrats have passed and put into prompt execution.

Nor is our prosperity temporary, nor due merely to the war. Our shipments of war supplies are less than a billion, while our internal commerce exceeds a hundred billions.

The Republicans have attempted to make a fictitious issue of preparedness and Americanism, but it is impossible to make this an issue, because both parties are in thorough accord in making adequate preparation and in maintaining American ideals.

The Republicans dare not go before the American people and assail the income tax, although they were opposed to it.

They dare not assail the Clayton antitrust bill, although they fought it.

They dare not condemn the Federal Trade Commission act, although they were opposed to it.

They dare not condemn the Federal reserve act, although they filibustered against it.

Neither do they now, in their platform, condemn the seaman's act, the agricultural-extension act, the industrial employees arbitration act, the grain and cotton standards act, the rural-credits act, the good-roads act, the Alaska railway act, the development of a parcel post, the improved marketing system, the passage of the Government-owned armor-plate act, or the act to build Government nitrate plants.

They do not condemn the Secretary of the Navy for saving millions of dollars by requiring competition in the letting of contracts for projectiles, armor plate, etc.

They do not condemn Secretary Daniels for educating all the sailors in the service of the United States and teaching them self-support.

The magnificent performance of our Department of State, through the foreign trade advisers, the Department of Commerce, our Department of Agriculture, and our Department of Justice—they do not dare to condemn. They confine themselves to broad generalities and emphasize their attachment to the Constitution and the flag.

The loss of confidence which the Republican Party experienced in 1912, when their corrupt party management was boldly guilty of high-handed fraudulent practices against their own associates in the national convention, can not be repaired by mere protestations of present virtue, so long as men known for their machine methods are in active control of the party management.

The American people were never before in their history more free to make up their independent judgment than they are now. Party ties never sat more lightly, and there are millions of men who will exercise their own independent judgment in this campaign.

The Americans have a very wise maxim of "letting well enough alone," and another—"not to swap horses while crossing a stream."

The great spirit of the modern democracy which has given birth to the regenerated Democratic Party, and which truly animated very many of the Progressive Party, has been to make the combined powers of the people, acting through their Government, the faithful and diligent servants of all the people, dealing justice and mercy without fear and without favor. It is this spirit which has moved the new Democracy, which has largely moved very many members of the Progressive Party, and which has even measurably influenced some of the standpat Republicans.

The standpat Republicans, who still control the Republican organization, are not in heartfelt sympathy with the spirit of the progressive Democracy, but they prefer to have a working understanding with big business, and to rely upon big business to raise big campaign funds with which to carry on their campaigns and with which to put them in power. The day has nearly gone by in the United States when the people of this Republic will permit their governing powers to be controlled by funds contributed by private persons and self-seeking corporations.

Every citizen must make his choice and judge parties by their acts.

The old Democratic Party was overthrown in 1856 by the revolt of American citizens under Lincoln's leadership who would not submit to the slavery of black men in the United States.

The old Republican Party was overthrown in 1912 by the revolt of American citizens under the leadership of Woodrow Wilson at the head of a regenerated Democracy and Theodore Roosevelt at the head of the Progressives, who would not submit to flagrant corruption nor the slavery of white and black men by the servants of the "invisible government."

Those who question the sincerity of the deathbed repentance of the old guard and their amusing protestations of attachment to progressive policies will support Woodrow Wilson, whose loyalty is beyond all doubt.

Mr. OWEN. I want to say now, Mr. President, that this bill will remain the unfinished business on the calendar and will be pressed by me when the Senate meets again. I profoundly regret that the leaders of the opposition have been willing to take this filibustering attitude with regard to the corrupt-practices act, and I call the attention of the country to it. There was nothing about the bill which was not capable of being adjusted if there were any willingness whatever to permit any kind of a corrupt-practices act, and this unwillingness on the part of the Republican leaders ought to put the moral elements in the United States on notice as to what they may expect of such party leaders. I think, Mr. President, that the States of the Union ought to realize the necessity of exercising the greatest vigilance if there be in the pending campaign any conspiracy attempted to carry out a presidential election by purchase.

Mr. President, in making these observations I have had no purpose to wound the feelings of any Senator on this floor. All the purpose I have had was to bring about a better condition of affairs in this country, where knowledge, judgment, reason, and patriotism alone shall be the determining factors in our elections, where party contests may proceed upon the justice of their arguments and not be controlled by the sinister, base, and despicable methods which have heretofore prevailed to so large an extent in many parts of our common country.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (No. 60) of the House of Representatives, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session of the Congress by adjourning their respective Houses on the 8th day of September, 1916, at 10 o'clock ante meridian.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, there is a particular bill in regard to which I think the Senate would do a very just and fair thing should it take up and pass it. I refer to Order of Business 324, being House bill 407, the bill known as the stock-raising homestead bill. I ask unanimous consent at this time that the bill be taken up and considered.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator that there are a great many bills on the Senate calendar which are of equal importance with the one for which he asks consideration. I should like to know why we can not take up the calendar. I do not want to object to the Senator's request, but it is not fair to have one or two bills taken up and passed and thereby prevent an opportunity for the consideration of other bills.

Mr. STERLING. Let me say that this bill, which, as I have stated, is a House bill, has been on the calendar since January 18 last. Several amendments have been made to it. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. I really think there will be no objection to that request.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I desire to say that the bill for which he asks consideration seems to me to be rather an important bill to take up under existing circumstances. Besides, I understand that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has once before objected to unanimous consent for its consideration; and he is not now in the Chamber.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; but I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that I know the circumstances under which the Senator from Georgia objected to the consideration of the bill. It was because the revenue bill was then under consideration, and he desired that bill passed, so that it would get into conference. That was the reason given by the Senator from Georgia for his objection to the consideration of the bill. He has no objection whatever to the passage of the bill. It will not take many minutes, I think, to pass it.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Georgia did not object to the consideration of this bill. It was the other bill to which he objected.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, is this a House bill?

Mr. STERLING. It is a House bill, which passed the House in January, and which since then has been on the Senate calendar.

Mr. SIMMONS. Are there any amendments to the bill?

Mr. STERLING. There are some amendments to it; but I think it will not take long to dispose of the amendments. The amendments are for the most part——

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator think he will get House action on the bill at this session, if it is now passed?

Mr. STERLING. I think we shall get House action on it; but, even if we should not, at any rate the bill will be that much further along.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the House is going to adjourn at 10 o'clock.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I object to the Senator from South Dakota and the Senator from North Carolina conducting a colloquy between themselves without any recognition from the Chair. May I ask the Senator from South Dakota a question? Will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I object to being taken off my feet in that sort of way. The Senator from Montana had not my permission to interrupt me. I do not understand what the Senator means when he says I am talking without any recognition from the Chair.

Mr. MYERS. Both Senators are talking back and forth, without addressing the Chair; but I have nothing more to say. I merely wanted to say that the Senator from Georgia has not opposed this bill and has no objection to it. It seems that some invisible force is opposing this bill, now long delayed.

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina further.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have nothing further to say, except that I hope the Senator from South Dakota will not press this bill until the Senator from Georgia comes in.

Mr. STERLING. I can assure the Senator from North Carolina——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia entered the Chamber.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have nothing more now to say, the Senator from Georgia having arrived.

Mr. KENYON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KENYON. I understood the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] to say there was an "invisible government" in this body; and I should like to inquire what that is?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not think that is a parliamentary inquiry. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, before consent is given, we should like to hear the bill read. I should like to know what it is. There are two homestead bills or bills connected with the western interests which the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], who is chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, has brought to the attention of the Senate a number of times. I would ask the body to pass both of these bills if possible. I think it ought to be done. The Senator from Montana has my most earnest sympathy in the strenuous efforts he has made. I am not surprised that he is impatient about it; I think he has had cause to be impatient; and I have wanted an opportunity to help him in his endeavors. I should like to see these bills passed this morning.

I desire to see them passed, because I am sure the bills to which I refer are meritorious and would be very valuable to the people of the West.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill asked for by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not know what the bill is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 407) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that on July 19 this bill was read and that the amendments reported to it were agreed to up to line 16 on page 3. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 4, page 3, line 22, after the word "entryman," to strike out "of lands of the character herein described," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That any homestead entryman who has not submitted final proof upon his existing entry, shall have the right to enter, subject to the provisions of this act, such amount of contiguous lands designated for entry under the provisions of this act as shall not, together with the amount embraced in his original entry, exceed 640 acres, and residence upon the original entry shall be credited on both entries, but improvements must be made on the additional entry equal to $1.25 for each acre thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 4, line 7, after the word "lands," to strike out "of the character herein described," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That persons who have submitted final proof upon, or received patent for, lands under the homestead laws, and who own and reside upon the land so acquired, may, subject to the provisions of this act, make additional entry for and obtain patent to contiguous lands designated for entry under the provisions of this act, which, together with the area theretofore acquired under the homestead law, shall not exceed 640 acres on proof of the expenditure required by this act on account of permanent improvements upon the additional entry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 4, line 20, after the word "passage," to strike out "hereof," and to insert "of this act"; and on page 5, line 11, after the word "herein," to strike out the following proviso: "Provided, That the lands so relinquished or reconveyed as herein provided shall thereafter be subject to disposition only on such terms and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That any person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of 21 years and is a citizen of the United States, who has entered or acquired under the homestead laws, prior to the passage of this act, lands of the character described in this act, the area of which is less than 640 acres, and who is unable to exercise the right of additional entry herein conferred because no lands subject to entry under this act adjoin the tract so entered or acquired or lie within the 20-mile limit provided for in this act, may, upon submitting proof that he resides upon and has not sold the land so entered or acquired and against which land there are no encumbrances, relinquish or reconvey to the United States the land so occupied, entered, or acquired, and in lieu thereof, within the same land-office district, may enter and acquire title to 640 acres of the land subject to entry under this act, but must show compliance with all the provisions of this act respecting the new entry and with all the provisions of existing homestead laws except as modified herein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 6, line 19, after the word "land," to strike out the words "of the character designated in this act," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That any person who has heretofore acquired title to land under any of the homestead laws of the United States and who is the owner and occupant of the land so acquired may purchase from the United States not exceeding 320 acres of stock-raising lands, as designated by this act, or unappropriated and unreserved lands valuable only for grazing contiguous to his said homestead, upon paying to the United States the sum of $1.25 per acre for such lands, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, which said land, together with the area theretofore acquired under the homestead laws, shall not exceed 640 acres.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, page 9, line 10, after the word "shall" to insert the words "while so reserved," and in line 13, after the word "discretion," to strike out "designate as stock driveways and withhold from entry under this act lands not over one-fourth mile in width needed for use in movement of stock to summer and winter ranges or to shipping points" and to insert "also withdraw from entry lands necessary to insure access by the public to watering places reserved hereunder and needed for use in the movement of stock to summer and winter ranges or to shipping points, and may prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the proper administration and use of such lands," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. That lands containing water holes or other bodies of water needed or used by the public for watering purposes shall not be designated under this act but may be reserved under the provisions of the act of June 25, 1910, and such lands heretofore or hereafter reserved shall, while so reserved, be kept and held open to the public use for such purposes under such general rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary may, in his discretion, also withdraw from entry lands necessary to insure access by the public to watering places reserved hereunder and needed for use in the movement of stock to summer and winter ranges or to shipping points, and may prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the proper administration and use of such lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CURTIS obtained the floor.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas let me ask a question about the bill which has just been under consideration before he presses another matter?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. My attention was diverted by conversation at the time the 640-acre homestead bill passed, and I would like to know if the amendment which I offered to that bill, which has just been passed, providing that the bill shall not take effect until the 1st day of next January, was incorporated in the bill before it passed? A month or more ago I offered an amendment to that effect, and asked that it lie on the table. May I ask if it was adopted and put in the bill?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, let me suggest, if I may, to the Senator from Montana that I hope he will not press that amendment at this time.

Mr. MYERS. It was a committee amendment.

Mr. STERLING. The bill has been passed. The time is now so short that before any settlement could be made or any advantage taken of the provisions of the bill it will be the 1st of January next.

Mr. MYERS. Very well; I will withdraw the suggestion. Let the action of the Senate stand. If my amendment was adopted, all right, If not, let it go.

PROPOSED FISHERIES INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas offers a resolution, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 272), as follows:

Whereas it has been charged upon the floor of the Senate of the United States that a foreign government had maintained a lobby in the city of Washington during this session of Congress; and

Whereas it has been charged upon the floor of the Senate that such lobby so maintained did influence certain legislation and caused to be stricken from the revenue measure a certain provision prohibiting the admission of fresh and frozen halibut or salmon from the North Pacific Ocean or its tributary waters into the United States through any foreign country except when the same shall be in bond from an American port: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a committee of three Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate to investigate such charges and report the result to the Senate at the opening of the next session of Congress: Provided, That said committee may sit at such times and places as may seem advisable, have power to send for papers and persons, issue subpœnas and administer oaths, and that the expenses of said investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have asked unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can not ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution. There is an unqualified statute that all bills and resolutions calling for an expenditure of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate shall go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. We can not set aside a statute by unanimous consent.

COST OF LIVING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 585, being House joint resolution 91. I think it will occasion no discussion whatever.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 91) authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, that joint resolution has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Education and Labor, and I join in the request of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I will say also that it has passed the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Department of Labor be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to make an inquiry into the cost of living of wage earners in the District of Columbia, and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable; and that there be appropriated for this purpose the sum of $6,000.

SEC. 2. That the special agents and clerks employed under this appropriation shall be selected from among the persons eligible on any civil-service register.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution has heretofore been considered as in Committee of the Whole, and an amendment has been agreed to. If there be no further amendment, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to take just a few moments of the time of the Senate to refer to the remarks made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] last night in connection with appropriations and expenditures for the present session.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator yield to me to call up a bill by unanimous consent?

Mr. SMOOT. I will not occupy more than five minutes; and then I intend to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill.

I have examined the appropriations for the fiscal year 1916 as compared with those for the fiscal year 1917, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. There is not very much difference between the amount of the appropriations as reported by him and the figures compiled by myself and reported to the Senate last Wednesday. The only difference occurs in relation to the deficiency bills. I have made an estimate of the amount carried in the last deficiency bill, and so has the Senator from Virginia.

The increase in appropriations, Mr. President, for the fiscal year 1917 over the fiscal year 1916, even according to the figures as reported by the Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is $517,537,197.61. From that I deduct $390,000,000 that can rightfully be charged to preparedness; that is over and above the amount that was appropriated for the same purposes in the fiscal year 1916, showing an increase in the appropriations for the year 1917 over the year 1916, outside of expenditures for preparedness, of $127,537,197.61.

Mr. President, it is very strange, indeed, that the Senator from Virginia should deduct from this amount $85,240,940.43 on the ground that the items making up that sum constitute appropriations for extraordinary purposes for the year 1917 as compared with the year 1916. Why, Mr. President, in that $85,000,000, which has been deducted from this year's appropriations, we find an item to carry out the provisions of the ship-purchase act of $50,100,000; we find an item for the construction of rural post roads of $6,000,000; an item for the Alaskan Engineering Commission of $6,247,620; an item in the Post Office act amounting to $12,144,270.43; an item for the Federal Farm Loan Board of $6,100,000; an item for collecting internal revenue of $1,674,050.

I will not, Mr. President, take the time of the Senate to read the small items making up the total of $85,240,940.43. The Democratic Party is claiming great credit for passing a good-roads bill, involving an immediate appropriation of $6,000,000 and future appropriations of $79,000,000, and yet the Senator is deducting the $6,000,000 from the appropriations for this year. The Democratic Party is claiming great credit for passing a ship-purchase bill, involving an appropriation of $50,100,000, and providing for an issuance of bonds for the payment of same, and that, too, is now deducted from the amount of appropriations for 1917.

The Democratic majority passed a law providing for the erection of a fertilizer plant, and appropriated $20,000,000 for the same to be paid for by the sale of Government bonds; and we are now told this amount must be deducted from the total appropriations for 1917, so as to endeavor to show slight increases in the appropriations of 1917 over those of 1916. Why, Mr. President, such a proceeding is entirely unprecedented. The fertilizer plant is to be built and a law has been enacted providing for and authorizing $20,000,000 in bonds for such a plant, and why should that amount be deducted from the total appropriations for this year? The ship-purchase bill, which passed Congress and has become a law, authorizes the issuance of $50,000,000 of bonds, and why should that sum be taken now from the appropriations for the year 1917?

Why, Mr. President, this is on all fours with the new and novel plan of bookkeeping now in vogue at the Treasury Department. I pick up the daily statement of the United States Treasury for September 1, 1916, in which it is stated that the net balance on hand in the Treasury on that day is $208,840,621.54. Mr. President, the net balance in the Treasury is not that amount. There was not that balance in the Treasury of the United States on September 1. From that amount should be deducted $99,977,065.59, which has already been placed to the credit of United States disbursing officers, and there should also be deducted from that amount the sum of $45,688,358 for the outstanding notes of the national banks of this country. These items are not resources of the Government of the United States. The Government of the United States can not claim as a credit the amount of $99,977,065 which has been placed to the credit of disbursing officers no more than I, if I owed the Senator from Oklahoma $100,000 and had borrowed that amount from the bank and placed it to his credit, could call it a resource.

I say, Mr. President, it is not true. Since the Senator from Virginia made his report of appropriations yesterday the Senate has passed a treaty authorizing the payment of $25,000,000 for the Danish islands.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator voted for it, did he not?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator did not vote for the treaty.

Now, Mr. President, just one word further.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator has just referred to the appropriation of $25,000,000, or the treaty for $25,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I did not say an appropriation. I said the passage of a treaty that authorized the payment of $25,000,000 for the Danish islands.

Mr. CLAPP. The thing is bad enough, it seems to me; and I want to ask the Senator whether it is proper to charge against the balance any of the appropriations, even?

Mr. SMOOT. Against what?

Mr. CLAPP. An alleged cash balance.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing charged to this balance. This is supposed to be a daily balance of the cash on hand in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; but the Senator, in criticizing that balance, referred to the fact that we had just adopted a treaty that would create an obligation of $25,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I referred to the amount of the appropriations that have already been made, and then stated that last evening, since the appropriations had been reported on by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], the Senate had adopted the treaty, which called for an appropriation of $25,000,000.

Mr. CLAPP. But I think if the Senator will look at his remarks while he was dealing with appropriations he will see that he then took up the question of the balance and criticized that because certain funds had been placed to the credit of disbursing officers; and, in connection with that, without meaning it, I think his statement would leave the impression that he thought this $25,000,000 should be——

Mr. SMOOT. If I made that impression upon the Senator, I did not have it in mind.

Mr. CLAPP. I know the Senator did not.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, according to the report that was made last evening of the amount of the appropriations, I call attention now to the fact that the increased appropriations for the fiscal years 1915, 1916, and 1917 over the appropriations for the fiscal years 1912, 1913, and 1914 amounted to $712,719,979.17.

In this connection, and as part of my remarks, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a table showing the appropriations for the last three fiscal years of the Taft administration, namely, 1912, 1913, and 1914, and for the first three fiscal years of the Wilson administration, namely, 1915, 1916, and 1917.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The table referred to is as follows:

Title of act.	Fiscal year 1912.	Fiscal year 1913.	Fiscal year 1914.	Fiscal year 1915.	Fiscal year 1916.	Fiscal year 1917.	Increase 1917 over 1916.	Decrease 1917 under 1916.
Agriculture	$16,900,016.00	$16,651,496.00	$17,986,945.00	$19,865,832.00	$22,971,782.00	$24,948,852.00	$1,977,070.00
Army	93,374,755.97	90,958,712.98	94,266,145.51	101,019,212.50	101,974,195.87	267,596,530.10	165,622,334.23
Diplomatic and Consular	3,988,516.41	3,638,047.41	3,730,642.66	4,309,856.66	4,061,280.01	5,355,096.66	1,293,816.65
District of Columbia	12,056,780.50	10,670,733.00	11,383,739.00	12,172,539.49	11,859,584.45	12,841,707.10	982,122.65
Fortification	5,473,707.00	4,036,235.00	5,218,250.00	5,627,700.00	6,060,216.90	25,748,050.00	19,687,833.10
Indian	8,842,136.37	8,920,970.66	9,486,819.67	9,771,902.76	9,771,902.76	10,967,644.88	1,195,742.12
Legislative, etc	35,378,149.85	34,216,463.38	35,1.2,436.50	37,630,229.70	36,904,799.75	37,925,690.25	1,020,890.50
Military Academy	1,163,424.07	1,064,668.26	1,099,302.87	997,899.54	1,069,813.37	1,225,043.57	155,230.20
Naval	126,478,338.24	123,225,007.76	140,800,643.53	144,868,716.61	149,681,964.88	313,300,555.84	163,638,690.96
Pension	153,682,000.00	165,146,145.84	180,300,000.00	169,150,000.00	164,100,000.00	158,065,000.00		$6,035,000.00
Post Office	239,134,403.00	271,429,599.00	285,376,271.00	313,364,667.00	313,364,667.00	322,937,679.00	9,573,012.00
River and harbor	23,855,342.00	31,059,370.50	41,073,094.00	20,000,000.00	30,000,000.00	40,598,135.00	10,598,135.00
Sundry civil	142,265,044.14	112,039,184.40	116,795,327.01	110,070,227.39	126,922,750.79	128,299,285.24	1,376,534.45
Total regular annuals	882,592,679.55	873,056,634.19	942,689,614.75	948,848,783.65	978,722,857.78	1,349,809,269.64	377,121,411.86	6,035,000.00
Deficiencies	9,740,971.24	9,700,939.67	28,074,912.31	23,363,586.61	12,316,343.90	[1] 68,555,286.90	56,239,023.00
Miscellaneous	4,773,306.81	3,448,712.93	388,597.22	12,709,361.29	2,330,603.34	[1] 85,000,000.00	82,669,396.66
Permanent annuals	129,575,924.12	133,206,424.12	127,525,664.12	131,196,407.00	121,567,207.00	123,074,673.00	1,507,466.00
Grand total	1,026,682,881.72	1,019,412,710.01	1,098,678,788.40	1,116,118,138.55	1,114,937,012.02	1,626,439,209.63	517,537,197.61	6,035,000.00

[1] This amount is approximated.

Increase 1917 over 1916	$511,502,197.61
Increase 1915, 1916, and 1917 over 1912, 1913, and 1914	712,719,979.17

CIVIL WAR VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 287, Senate bill 392, to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as the "Civil War volunteer officers' retired list."

Mr. BRYAN. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

COLORADO AND PIKE NATIONAL FORESTS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 700. This is a bill to increase the acreage of the Colorado and Pike National Forests. It is a bill introduced in the House by Mr. TIMBERLAKE, of my State, who is extremely anxious to secure action on it at the present session of Congress, and I assured him that if an opportunity offered I would call it up.

Mr. SMOOT. Is there an amendment to it?

Mr. THOMAS. There is no amendment to it, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15287) authorizing the addition of certain lands to the Colorado and Pike National Forests, Colo.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOUNT M'KINLEY NATIONAL PARK, ALASKA.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 409, Senate bill 5716, to establish the Mount McKinley National Park, in the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I could not even hear the number of the bill the Senator asks to have considered. What is the calendar number?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is Calendar No. 409, found on page 9 of the calendar. It was unanimously reported by the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read, Mr. President.

Mr. PITTMAN. I know of no objection to it. I will state, while the Secretary is looking for the bill, that the object of passing it now, the emergency attached to it, is so that the bill may pass, if possible, at this session, and if not as early as possible at the next session, in the House, because the Alaskan government railroad is being built right past this proposed park, and the area to be embraced within it is a natural breeding ground of caribou and other game that go into this section of the country every summer.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know how many acres of land are involved in the proposed park? I can not figure it out here in my mind.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is approximately 25 miles square, and takes in the mountain. It takes in Mount McKinley.

Mr. SMOOT. The creation of this park will forever prohibit the disposition by the Government of the lands in that reservation, and it is to be held forever as a game reserve?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is not to be held exactly as a game reserve. That was one of the reasons for its creation, of course. I will say to the Senator that the hearings that we had before the Committee on the Territories disclosed that there was no agricultural land fitted for homesteads within the borders of this proposed 25-mile square; that it simply embraces the rocky peak. On the south side of the mountain it is a continuous line of glaciers. On the north side it has a slope to the base which just about reaches to the border line, and the railroad will pass so near to this locality that it will be a subject of spoliation. The caribou breed on the north side of the mountain. As the Senator knows, during the winter they migrate to the south, and then come back into this country and breed. Undoubtedly when the railroad reaches this point there will be great destruction of all kinds of game. Not only that, but there probably will be destruction of trees and other things on the north side of the mountain.

Mr. SMOOT. In section 8 of the bill I find this remarkable provision:

That any person found guilty of violating any of the provisions of this act, or any rule or regulation that may be promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the management and care of the park, or for the protection of the property therein, for the preservation from injury or spoliation of timber, natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, or for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish in the said park shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor—

And so forth. Mr. President, I think, as far as the violation of a law is concerned, that should be the case; but where rules and regulations are changed every day, or could be changed every day, it seems to me it is going a great deal further than wisdom at least dictates to say that any person who violates a rule or a regulation that may be changed overnight shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be subjected to a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six month, or both, and be adjudged to pay all costs of the proceedings. In other words, I want to say to the Senator that a man may go in there just as innocently as he walks the streets of a city or the mountains of the West, and perhaps he may take a small piece of timber; he may take enough to fix a wagon tongue that may have become broken, and under this provision he could be fined $500 and imprisoned for six months.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think that is largely the same rule that obtains with regard to other national parks. I am satisfied that no such rule would be enforced as strictly as the Senator fears—not in Alaska; not before the justices of the peace who live up in that community, among those people. I have lived there too long to think that anything of that kind would be possible. There has never been any criticism as to severity in criminal matters there.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, let us strike it out.

Mr. PITTMAN. But I am willing to accept an amendment to strike that out.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I move that the words, on line 18, page 4, "or any rule or regulation that may be promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the management and care of the park" be stricken out.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator should go a little further than that—down to the word "park," in line 24.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; down to the word "park" in line 24.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the tract of land in the Territory of Alaska particularly described by and included within the metes and bounds, to wit: Beginning at a point as shown on Plate III, reconnoissance map of the Mount McKinley region, Alaska, prepared in the Geological Survey, edition of 1911, said point being at the summit of a hill between two forks of the headwaters of the Toklat River, approximate latitude 63° 47', longitude 150° 20'; thence south 6° 20' west 19 miles; thence south 68° west 60 miles; thence in a southeasterly direction approximately 28 miles to the summit of Mount Russell; thence in a northeasterly direction approximately 89 miles to a point 25 miles due south of a point due east of the point of beginning; thence due north 25 miles to said point; thence due west 28½ miles to the point of beginning, is hereby reserved and withdrawn from settlement, occupancy, or disposal under the laws of the United States, and said tract is dedicated and set apart as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people, under the name of the Mount McKinley National Park.

SEC. 2. That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid existing claim, location, or entry under the land laws of the United States, whether for homestead, mineral, right of way, or any other purpose whatsoever, or shall affect the rights of any such claimant, locator, or entryman to the full use and enjoyment of his land.

SEC. 3. That whenever consistent with the primary purposes of the park, the act of February 15, 1901, applicable to the location of rights of way in certain national parks and national forests for irrigation and other purposes, shall be and remain applicable to the lands included within the park.

SEC. 4. That the mineral-land laws of the United States are hereby extended to the lands included within the park.

SEC. 5. That the said park shall be under the executive control of the Secretary of the Interior, and it shall be the duty of the said executive authority, as soon as practicable, to make and publish such rules and regulations not inconsistent with the laws of the United States as the said authority may deem necessary or proper for the care, protection, management, and improvement of the same, the said regulations being primarily aimed at the freest use of the said park for recreation purposes by the public and for the preservation of animals, birds, and fish and for the preservation of the natural curiosities and scenic beauties thereof.

SEC. 6. That the said park shall be, and is hereby, established as a game refuge, and no person shall kill any game in said park except under an order from the Secretary of the Interior for the protection of persons or to protect or prevent the extermination of other animals or birds: Provided, That prospectors and miners engaged in prospecting or mining in said park may take and kill therein so much game or birds as may be needed for their actual necessities when short of food; but in no case shall animals or birds be killed in said park for sale or removal therefrom, or wantonly.

SEC. 7. That the said Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, execute leases to parcels of ground not exceeding 20 acres in extent for periods not to exceed 20 years whenever such ground is necessary for the erection of establishments for the accommodation of visitors; may grant such other necessary privileges and concessions as he deems wise for the accommodation of visitors; and may likewise arrange for the removal of such mature or dead or down timber as he may deem necessary and advisable for the protection and improvement of the park. The proceeds of leases and other revenues that may be derived from any source connected with said park shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in the administration, maintenance, and improvement of the park.

SEC. 8. That any person found guilty of violating any of the provisions of this act, or any rule or regulation that may be promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the management and care of the park, or for the protection of the property therein, for the preservation from injury or spoliation of timber, natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, or for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish in the said park, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be subjected to a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, and be adjudged to pay all costs of the proceedings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, beginning on line 18, after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the words "said park," on line 24, in the following words:

Or any rule or regulation that may be promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the management and care of the park, or for the protection of the property therein, for the preservation from injury or spoliation of timber, natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, or for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish in the said park.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

PROPOSED FISHERIES INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a little while ago I asked unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution. I offered the resolution in good faith and asked unanimous consent for its consideration, because it has been claimed repeatedly on the floor that a lobby has been driven from this Capitol; and yet it was charged in this Chamber last night by one of the leading Senators of this body that a foreign Government had sent a lobby here, that that lobby infested this Capitol, and that it had influenced certain legislation that would paralyze a certain industry of this country.

Now, I am not going to object to the consideration of this bill offered by the Senator from Nevada, but as a part of my remarks I want to read a resolution that I hope, if the Senators on the other side mean what they say, they will consent to have considered as soon as the pending bill is disposed of.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I take it the Senator is referring to——

Mr. CURTIS. I am referring to the charge made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to say, as a member of the Finance Committee and the conference committee, that the only person who has ever spoken to me or that I have ever known of being here about this particular amendment to the bill, outside of Senators and Representatives of this Government, is a man by the name of Strong, who has been in favor of it.

Mr. CURTIS. Then there can be no harm in investigating and letting the country know the facts. The resolution I ask to have considered as soon as this bill is disposed of is as follows:

Whereas it has been charged upon the floor of the Senate of the United States that a foreign government has maintained a lobby in the city of Washington during this session of Congress; and

Whereas it has been charged upon the floor of the Senate that such lobby, so maintained, did influence certain legislation and cause to be stricken from the revenue measure a certain provision prohibiting the admission of fresh and frozen salmon from the north Pacific Ocean or its tributary waters into the United States through any foreign country, except when the same shall be in bond in an American port: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the lobby committee of the United States Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate such charges, and report the result to the Senate at the opening of the next session of Congress, or as soon thereafter as practicable.

As soon as this bill is acted upon I shall ask unanimous consent, if the Presiding Officer will recognize me for that purpose, for the passage of this resolution. I think, under all the circumstances, it is important that some resolution of this kind be passed before we adjourn.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with that resolution. I do not believe it is within the province of the representatives of any foreign Government to come here and undertake to influence legislation either in the Congress itself or with the officials of this Government.

I think the Senator will find, when he reads what I had to say, that I did not charge that the presence of these gentlemen influenced Congress to legislation; but they were here. That is a fact. There is not any question about it. The memorandum prepared by one of these gentlemen, the Secretary of External Affairs, has been read into the RECORD. He was here when it was written, or I believe he was here when it was delivered. It was delivered to one of the highest officers of this Government, the Secretary of State. Another gentleman, representing the fisheries bureau of the Canadian Government, was here. They acted in cooperation, I believe, the memorandum shows, with the counselor of the British Embassy.

Mr. President, I concede all the powers of the representatives of foreign governments, and I have no objection to their making any representations to this Government that they may see fit to make; but what I object to, and the reason why I am so in sympathy with the resolution of the Senator from Kansas, is that men ought not to be permitted to come here from any foreign Government and undertake to influence legislation through the State Department or any other branch of the Government. Why are these ambassadors here, if they can not represent the government?

I do not think we ought to be mealy-mouthed about it, Mr. President. We ought to find out what the facts are, and the committee of this Congress ought to be permitted to say to the Congress of the United States whether they approve or disapprove of that kind of conduct upon the part of the representatives of any government. I am not afraid to vote for it, and it ought to be done.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to an inquiry?

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to make a statement just following that. I submitted this resolution because of the following extract from the speech of the Senator from Oregon, and I want to read it as a part of my remarks:

Mr. Joseph Pope, another distinguished gentleman who came down here from Canada, did not hesitate to come and undertake to influence the officials of our Government. Has there been a time in the history of this Government when the Government of the United States sent men to Canada or to Great Britain or to any other foreign Government and undertook to influence legislation in those Governments? Talk about cleaning out a lobby from the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, Mr. President, and yet cheerfully submitting and listening to a lobby that comes here from foreign countries undertaking to influence legislation!

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I yield the floor.

Mr. REED. Before the Senator from Kansas takes his seat I desire to ask him a question.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I am a member of the so-called lobby committee, and that committee is still in existence.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that a resolution was passed extending its life.

Mr. REED. I desire to ask the Senator if he is in possession of any other information than that contained in the statement which he has just read?

Mr. CURTIS. I am not.

Mr. REED. And the Senator's resolution is based solely upon that statement, made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], which was read into the RECORD?

Mr. CURTIS. The speech which was made last night.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not understand the Senator from Oregon to have meant anything more by his words than to express the thought that some of the representatives of Canada have been here talking with the State Department. I do not understand the Senator to have meant that they have brought any bills to Congress or sought to lobby anything through Congress or influence any Member.

Of course, the question arises under those circumstances whether there is anything requiring an official investigation. Nothing should be done here purely for the purpose of offending any friendly nation. Whatever we do ought to be done with cool heads and a full understanding of the import of that which we are about to do.

So far as I am concerned, it is my opinion that foreign Governments have been too much inclined to impose on the good nature of this country. I think a number of events have transpired that only could have happened because the representatives of foreign Governments or foreign peoples have rather entertained the idea that America being a free country they are at liberty to come here and do whatever they please. We have been so big, so generous, so confident of our ability to take care of ourselves, we simply have left our door open and America has become a sort of international commons where every gentleman desiring to exploit anything from a rebellion to an ordinary conspiracy has confidently made his habitat here and set in motion his devious purposes.

Mr. President, notwithstanding the plain letter of the statute of the United States, during the Taft régime the Madero revolution was almost openly and publicly organized on American soil.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to know if it is not a fact that the whole Villa and Carranza propaganda has been carried on in the United States, and this Government has given aid to it; that it has permitted the Carranza government to take troops across American territory and also permitted the importation of arms and ammunition.

Mr. REED. That really has nothing to do with the question I am discussing. I shall point the distinction.

I am talking about the representatives of foreign conspirators coming upon American soil and organizing revolutions contrary to the statutes of the United States and, of course, to every principle of international law. That was done by Mr. Madero. It was done and the fact published in the papers from day to day. Yet it was permitted to go on under the Taft administration. I do not say that for the purpose of dragging up the old Mexican ghost that has been paraded here every 15 minutes, especially by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. The fact that our Government permitted Carranza to march troops across our territory bears no relation to the sort of act I am speaking of. Permission was granted to Carranza by our Government to cross American soil. That was done after we had recognized Carranza as the head of the Mexican Government. That is not the kind of case I was referring to when the Senator from Kansas interrupted me.

Mr. President, I hope I will not be again interrupted, for I am taking too much time. What I have to say is this: I think it is high time for this country to serve notice on all the countries of the world, and upon their representatives, official or nonofficial, that American territory is not intended for the exploitation of their schemes. And, further, notice should be given that America can attend to her own business without their aid or counsel.

I think it is high time to teach these gentlemen that the dignity of the American Government is offended against and our generosity and good nature imposed upon when they come here in any other way than through proper official channels.

I think, more than that, that of all the nations of the world most likely to trench upon the proprieties, most likely to undertake to do something of the very nature suggested by the resolution of the Senator from Kansas, is the British Nation. So far as I am concerned, I hope we have arrived at a time when the British Nation will be brought to book with reference to many acts it has been perpetrating. If I understand the temper of this Congress and the temper of this Government, that day is about here. If any light can be thrown upon anything that has been done by an investigation by the lobby committee, though I am one of the unfortunate members of that committee, I shall be glad to sit here in vacation and take up the matter.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in his observations and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] in his remarks invite my observations to a matter which for a moment I deem not unwise to give voice to, particularly in the closing hours of this particular session.

There may and doubtless there is international relations here and there calling for investigation, but if it is so, such calls for prudence and calls for the exercise of discretion and reflection before entering upon anything that unnecessarily wrongs anyone or does injustice to ourselves.

Of course, we wish to offend no nation. We will not be guilty of bad sense. This body, of course, will not be guilty of bad manners.

But, Mr. President, if international relations of this country are to be dwelt upon for a minute while we are called upon to reflect upon those agencies that may be interrupting a proper protection by this Government and its interests throughout the world, I beg to say that we should turn seriously to the announcement in yesterday's public papers, augumented by this day's news, of the nature of the increased demands which Japan has made upon China. Two of these demands made are of the 21 made six months past, then in part withdrawn but now revived, and peremptorily made upon China apparently with the assent of Russia. One of these is that China shall dismiss her own officers and in their places there be put immediately Japanese officers in China; that these Japanese officials shall officer all the bureaus of China, particularly the foreign consular and commercial departments.

In this respect it appears that Russia acquiesces, and, Mr. President, in view of my personal experience in those countries when I held an insignificant commission from officials in this Government to investigate certain matters in China and Japan, all coupled with my information gained through history and my observations of the present condition of things in these governments in connection with the affairs of the world, it is my conclusion that all these are directed to the prohibition of the United States of America from the sphere of trade or influence in Asia. It is, I fear, to deprive the United States of the privilege of sending their commercial agents into Asia and selling our commerce upon equal terms in Asia with Britain or Russia or France or Germany.

Mr. President, it is perfectly evident to me that the purpose is to retaliate upon the United States in two forms—one by Japan. This is to retaliate against us for that we have put a limitation upon her people coming into this country, and which she feels to be an injustice and charges in certain quarters to be a humiliation—a natural and expected attitude of Japan—to be treated with but not to be misunderstood. As to Russia, it is a retaliation for what she feels has been our attitude respecting the commercial treaties with her and the relations we have assumed to the Jewish citizens of Russia and Russian Jews now in America and American Jews traveling in Russia. We can appreciate the feelings of Russia, though we may not be able to give our approval to her policy.

Mr. President, if there is anything to be investigated which in my judgment calls for investigation early and more seriously than anything else touching our international relations at this time, it is to ascertain the reasons for that significant silence upon the part of the diplomatic and consular representatives of the United States of America in the East as to these threatening conditions that seem, to my mind, to impend as to the United States and to its danger.

Mr. President, I conclude with this observation, that some inquiry should be made by our State Department or by some branch of our Government as to why there has been so little information conveyed to the United States Government upon these matters to which I am alluding, and why there has been so little effort made to insist upon our own rights at an early stage of these complications and before they advance to a more difficult stage calling for some action other than negotiation.

I now say—and, Senators, you will have occasion to recall, through your courtesy in listening to me this morning on these observations—that Japan realizes what she is doing and Russia realizes what she is doing. Both actions are with a view of forcing us out of the East and to prevent us having any opportunity for commercial competition in Asia and Siberia. But Japan is wise and diplomatic; she knows that an advance must come from us; that we will have to demand that the cotton of the South and our manufactures and farm implements of the West and all of the industrial products of the North and West shall enter Asia.

Japan will then make the proposition that in order that we shall enter Japan or China with our goods we should yield our opposition to their people coming ad libitum into this country. That only upon those conditions will she yield the right of our trade with her or the possessions she influences. Let us remember, Mr. President, that the very retaliation clause in this bill we now have under consideration shows how natural it is for Japan to take such course of retaliation if reciprocity is refused.

Russia, adopting by the same token the same methods, will liksewise consent to the opening of opportunities for the open door in China and the East to us only in return for our withdrawing the limitations and qualifications set out in the proposed commercial treaty which is now pending between Russia and ourselves, and Russia will demand that no further effort upon our part be made to enforce what we insist to be the just rights of those citizens in our country called the Jews i.. their relation to Russia. That these two eminent nations of the East are playing now the game of chess statesmanship with the United States, with the view of forcing upon us the surrender of the principles to which I have just referred, I have no doubt. It is shrewd—from their point of advantage, natural—but we must not be checkmated.

In conclusion I say, Mr. President, that if investigations of any kind are to be pertinent, a suggestion from the Government, made to its representatives abroad, to investigate these conditions and report early to the officials in Washington such method as might be properly adopted for the immediate protection of our rights before these complications reach a point where they will be serious to us would be most in order, most appropriate; and, sir, from my place in this Senate I suggest it to the administrative officers of my Republic as a preliminary that may avoid harsher measures from all concerned.

MOUNT M'KINLEY NATIONAL PARK, ALASKA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in the Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

On September 7, 1916:

S. 5407. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to extend the time of payment of the amount due the Government by the city of Augusta, Ga.;

S. 3268. An act for the relief of John Duggan;

S. 3646. An act to amend the act of February 11, 1915 (38 Stat. L., p. 807), providing for the opening of the Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation;

S. 5987. An act to amend subsection 11 of section 3244, Revised Statutes;

S. 6561. An act providing for the sale at public auction of all unsold suburban lots not reserved for public purposes in the Government town site of Port Angeles, Wash., and for the issuance of patents for those previously sold under the act of May 2, 1906, on the payment of the price at which the said lots were reappraised under said act without further condition or delay;

S. 6748. An act providing that Indian schools may be maintained without restriction as to annual rate of expenditure per pupil; and

S. 6839. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Juneau, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction and equipment of schools therein, and for other purposes.

On September 8, 1916:

S. J. Res. 173. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of September salaries to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the day of adjournment of the present session;

S. 136. An act for the relief of Eva M. Bowman;

S. J. Res. 169. Joint resolution interpreting section 50 of the act of June 3, 1916, for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes;

S. 6625. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls; and

S. 5886. An act extending the time for the completion of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., authorized by an act entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled 'An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River,'" approved August 23, 1912.

PROPOSED FISHERIES INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CURTIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 273), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Whereas it has been charged upon the floor of the Senate of the United States that a foreign Government had maintained a lobby in the city of Washington during this session of Congress; and

Whereas it has been charged upon the floor of the Senate that such a lobby so maintained did influence certain legislation and caused to be stricken from the revenue measure a certain provision prohibiting the admission of fresh and frozen halibut or salmon from the North Pacific Ocean or its tributary waters into the United States through any foreign country, except when the same shall be in bond in an American port: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the lobby committee of the United States Senate be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate such charges and report the result to the Senate at the opening of the next session of Congress or as soon thereafter as practicable.

DEVELOPMENT OF WATERWAYS (S. DOC. NO. 550).

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Printing, I report back Senate resolution 271, and ask for its adoption.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate hearing before the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, United States Senate, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, on bill (S. 5736) to promote interstate commerce, etc., by providing for the development and control of waterways, etc., be printed as a Senate document, and that 5,000 additional copies for the use of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce be printed.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator allow the resolution to be amended so as to give 5,000 additional copies to the Senate folding room instead of to the document room? If the copies go to the document room, one Senator can take the whole of them, if they go to the folding room each Senator will get his share.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well, let the resolution be so modified as to read "for the use of the Senate folding room" instead of the Senate document room.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

TREASURY STATEMENTS, ETC.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey obtained the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me for a minute?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Of course I will yield to my neighbor just across the Delaware.

Mr. PENROSE. We might meet across the river some time. Mr. President, I have here a statement of the condition of the Treasury on September 5, showing the balance, according to the way the minority figures, of $35,451,367.11. A very much smaller balance will be readily observed than that appearing on the face of the daily statement.

I also have a number of statistics which I have had carefully compiled, and I ask consent to have the same printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator upon what subject?

Mr. PENROSE. The revenue bill—the general discussion.

Mr. LEWIS. It is a part of the Senator's address?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; a part of my address. That is right.

Mr. LEWIS. In view of that fact, I do not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Condition of the Treasury Sept. 5, 1916.

Net balance in general fund, reported Sept. 5, 1916		$209,057,416.33
On Sept. 5, 1916, there were outstanding obligations and unavailable assets, as follows:
(1) To credit of disbursing officers (representing outstanding valid claims against the Government)	$101,516,256.85
(2) National-bank notes redemption fund (payable from the general cash)	45,465,208.00
(3) Limited tender or unavailable assets (subsidiary silver coin, fractional currency, minor coin, silver bullion)	22,210,854.08
(4) Deposits in Philippine treasury	3,538,730.09
(5) Treasury warrants outstanding, matured coupons, and interest checks (estimate based on usual transactions for one-fourth month)	875,000.00
Total amount of deductions		173,606,049.22
Actual balance in general fund		35,451,367.11
Stated another way, the same result is reached:
Amount reported Sept. 5, 1916, as assets in the Treasury		$296,455,279.18
Deductions, as above	$173,606,049.22
Amount reported Sept. 5, 1916, as liabilities	87,397,862.85
Total amount of deductions and liabilities		261,003,912.07
Actual balance in general fund		35,451,367.11
Included in this balance are the following receipts:
(1) Proceeds from sale of 2 battleships to Greece, specifically reappropriated by Congress to build 1 first-class battleship		$12,000,000
(2) Postal savings deposits utilized		5,855,780
(3) Sugar duties by repeal of free-sugar clause of Underwood law, less drawback (2 months, May and June, 1916), estimated		7,000,000
Total		24,855,780

Mr. PENROSE. The Treasury also had the benefit of $135,000,000 collected from stamp and excise taxes for 1915 and 1916, $84,000,000 of which was collected in the fiscal year of 1916.

The personal and corporation income taxes for the fiscal year 1916 amounted to $124,867,430.28, the greater part of which was paid into the Treasury at the close of the fiscal year in June last, and some of it even after the beginning of the present fiscal year.

This amount exceeded expectations and helped inordinately to swell the receipts of the Treasury at the close of the fiscal year 1916, enabling the Secretary of the Treasury to announce at that time a surplus for the fiscal year of some $56,000,000 and a general-fund balance, according to his bookkeeping methods, far in excess of the actual available funds.

These taxes having been collected, paid in, and accounted for, receipts from those sources will not be available again until the end of the present fiscal year.

Whether we call the actual balance in the general fund today, $35,451,367.11, income-tax money or whether we call it stamp-tax money, or money derived from various other sources, the fact remains that it is all that is left of the supposedly plethoric general fund, into which it was the purpose of the framers of the revenue bill to go to help make up the revenue that that bill will fail to raise.

At any rate, if we call it income-tax money, then it represents all that is left of $124,000,000 revenue from incomes, and we have stolen from the remaining months of this fiscal year over $90,000,000 which belonged to those months upon a pro rata basis of $10,400,000 per month. Those months must find their own current revenues.

The Treasury statement for September 5, 1916, shows disbursements of $23,689,935.93 in excess of receipts for this fiscal year to date:

The disbursements to Sept. 5, 1916, were	$156,585,593.20
Receipts to same date	132,895,657.27
Deficit this fiscal year	23,689,935.93

At this rate of loss—about $10,000,000 per month—with every prospect of growing worse instead of better on account of the enormous drain entailed by extravagant and useless appropriations made at this session of Congress, exclusive of the preparedness program, a deficit of at least $125,000,000 for the current fiscal year stares the country in the face, which even the additional burdensome taxes imposed in the revenue bill upon a people already overtaxed in time of peace can not meet adequately.

I will insert in the RECORD the following statement of Hon. Jonathan Bourne criticizing the change in the form of the Treasury statement, in which Mr. Harvey S. Chase, certified public accountant and former Treasury Department clerk, is quoted:

BOURNE POINTS OUT UNITED STATES FISCAL PLIGHT—DECLARES THAT SECRETARY M'ADOO HAS JUGGLED DAILY TREASURY STATEMENT—SAYS REPUBLICANS LEFT A BIG SUPPLY OF CASH—CITES REPORT OF BOSTON EXPERT ACCOUNTANT IN SUPPORT OF CRITICISMS OF ADMINISTRATION.

The Republican Publicity Association, through its president, Jonathan Bourne, jr., to-day gave out a statement at its Washington headquarters, which says in part:

When Congress assembles there will be no "free and available balance" in the Federal Treasury—using those words in the sense which used to be given to them in the days before Mr. McAdoo became Secretary of the Treasury.

Following the changing form of the daily Treasury statement is almost as exciting a sport as the hunting of big game. At the close of business March 5, 1913, the first day of Democratic control of national affairs, the daily Treasury statement was issued in a form to which the public had become accustomed, and it showed, to employ its own language, a "working balance in Treasury officer" of $82,210,619.97. This represented the surplus which the Republicans turned over to the Democrats. July 1, 1913, the daily statement was issued with a changed face.

CHANGE IN THE FIGURES.

In this form the daily statement affected to show the "free and available balance in Treasury and banks" and the "free balance" was given as being $114,735,746.97. These are impressive figures; but, adding to the psychologic effect which nine digits always produce upon the ordinary mind, the statement went on to give the "total cash assets in the general fund," including Philippines, balances in Treasury offices, "limited tender or unavailable." These included silver bullion, subsidiary silver coin, fractional currency, minor coin, and all other chicken feed, scraps of paper, and junk which the vaults contained—and they rolled up the eye-satisfying total of $303,250,006.96.

With those figures the Democratic bookkeepers struck their zenith of paper manifestations of national thrift. From that moment a rapid and steady decline was recorded; and September 1, 1913, only two months after the old form of daily statement had been discarded, another change was made; and the daily statement for that date made no mention of a "free and available balance," but contented itself with the more elastic and elusive presentation of "assets" and "liabilities." The "net balance in the general fund" was then given as $127,336,337.04.

ANOTHER CHANGE MADE.

For a little more than two years this form of statement was adhered to, and September 30, 1915, the daily Treasury statement announced the "net balance in general fund" as being $40,808,894.97.

The following day the daily statement appeared with a long and somewhat involved preface, intended to be explanatory, and in a strikingly metamorphosed form, so far as its figures were concerned. Without the addition of a single dollar to the funds of the Nation, with no new sources of revenue pouring into the Treasury, with no proceeds from a bond issue, and without other means of replenishing its dwindling funds, the Treasury boasted a net balance of $128,063,545.23.

By a stroke of the pen Mr. McAdoo, overnight, had converted more than sixty-one millions of disbursing officers' balances into an available balance for general governmental purposes and had also added to the assets column funds which are distinctly ear-marked for specific purposes, and which are in no sense to be used for any object except the fiduciary ends for which they were given in the first place into the custody of the Treasury.

EXPERT MAKES AN AUDIT.

Mr. Harvey S. Chase, of Boston, a certified public accountant, has made an examination of the figures relating to the daily Treasury statement for two dates, the first, August 4, 1913 being under the form originally designed by Mr. McAdoo for the purpose, and the second, October 23, 1915, being under the latest—I dare not say the last—of the Secretary's ingenious efforts to lift himself by his financial boot straps.

On August 4, 1913, according to Mr. Chase, the "free available balance" in the Treasury office and in banks was $105,793,571.44. On that date Mr. Chase was at work in the Treasury, and the form of daily statement from July 1, 1913, until some time later than August 4 was prepared under his personal supervision. In the balance thus stated neither "subsidiary silver coin" nor "silver bullion" nor "minor coin" was included, whereas in the statement of October 23, 1915, these items are listed in a total sum of more than $30,000,000, which sum, Mr. Chase says, should be deducted from the balance which Mr. McAdoo said he had.

BALANCE "BOOSTED" AGAIN.

In August, 1913, the balances of disbursing officers and the "national-bank notes' redemption fund" were included as liabilities; and, as Mr. Chase points out, they were so included up to October 1, 1915, when Mr. McAdoo decided to exclude them from this classification and thus boosted his apparent balance by some $80,000,000. As a convenient means for maintaining solvency I commend the McAdoo system of bookkeeping to the merchants and manufacturers of the country who have found it difficult to do business with profit since Mr. McAdoo's party came into power. The only trouble with a general application of this method is that banks and other creditors, to say nothing of the courts, do not look with kindly eyes upon the falsification of accounts for the purpose of obtaining credit. And I beg to observe that the force of this suggestion is not diminished by the fact that it is political credit that Mr. McAdoo is seeking.

Mr. Chase's conclusion is couched in solemn words. "I hereby certify," he writes, using his title of certified public accountant, "that if the daily statement of the United States Treasury of October 23, 1915, had been made up on the same basis as that of August 4, 1913, the available balance in the Treasury would now be exhibited as $3,517,027.21."

I therefore conclude and assert that the Federal Treasury, when Congress meets, will be found practically bankrupt for the first time since James Buchanan turned over to Abraham Lincoln the empty coffers of the Nation.

Mr. F. L. Gilbert, certified public accountant, writing for the Annalist on the subject of the changes made by the Secretary of the Treasury in the form of the Treasury statement, believes some of the changes to have been justified, but considers the national-bank notes redemption fund a current liability. I quote from Mr. Gilbert's article as follows:

One other important change made in the statement on July 2, 1913, was the including as a liability the national bank notes redemption fund, amounting to $22,060,756. This, of course, reduced the net balance in the general fund by that amount. The plan of carrying this fund among the liabilities was continued to September 30, 1915, when it amounted to $23,096,069.50. This liability was eliminated in the new statement beginning October 1, 1915. This fund represents money deposited for the redemption of circulating national bank notes by national banks which have discontinued or decreased their circulation. It is entirely separate from the 5 per cent redemption fund. Under the act of July 14, 1890, such deposits must be carried as a part of the public debt and not as a liability of the Treasury Department. It would certainly not be proper to carry the fund as a liability in both places. If strict accounting practice were followed without regard for the law we believe this fund would continue to be carried as a current liability. The law says it must be treated otherwise, and this appears to be the reason for dropping it in the new statement of October 1, 1915. The Secretary in his "announcement" forming the foreword to his latest revised statement frankly states that it was an error on his part to place this fund on the liability side of the general fund commencing with the statement of July 2, 1913.

In answer to any criticism which might be made as to dropping this liability for the purpose of increasing the balance of the general fund, it should be said that a footnote appears on the statement of October 1, 1915, stating that the outstanding national bank notes for which deposits have been made and which must be paid out of the general fund amount to $23,096,069.50. Anyone who so desires can, therefore, deduct the amount from the net balance in the fund.

On September 1, 1913, a change was made in the asset side of the statement by eliminating the expression "free and available balance in Treasury and banks." By this omission the silver bullion, subsidiary silver coin, fractional currency, and minor coin which were formerly among the assets as "balances in Treasury offices, limited tender or unavailable," were moved up as part of the cash "in Treasury offices." Inasmuch as it is clearly stated just what each item represents, we believe the change is fully justified.

The Commercial and Financial Chronicle, of New York, dated November 20, 1915, justified carrying the national-bank notes redemption fund in the general balance as a technical law requirement, "though not in consonance with sound accounting practice." As to disbursing officers' balances, the Chronicle said they "have all of the characteristics of a current liability." On this phase of the new Treasury statement, I quote from the Chronicle as follows:

The Treasury Department really went outside the pale of the law when two years ago it began to enter the item in its true character as a current liability. The Secretary says frankly now that this was an error. The act of July 14, 1890, prescribes that such deposits shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts and that the notes thus rendered, subject to retirement by the United States, shall be carried as part of the public debt—that is, that the item shall be exhibited each month on the printed statement of the public debt under the heading "Debt of the United States bearing no interest." As directed by the act of July 14, 1890, the amount to the credit of this fund was mingled with the general cash and carried there continuously until the early part of the present administration, when the form of the Treasury statement was changed. The item has now been restored to the general fund in accordance with the requirement of the law. The change made in that particular, therefore, is good law, though not in consonance with sound accounting practice.

In the case, however, of the item of disbursing officers' balances, which is of much larger magnitude, it aggregating September 30 $60,409,181, the Secretary makes a departure entirely on his own responsibility. He points out that these disbursing officers' balances consist of amounts placed by the Secretary of the Treasury to the credit of disbursing officers against which they are authorized to draw checks in payment of public obligations. In the past, whenever the Secretary has placed an amount to the credit of a disbursing officer it has been the custom to carry that on the Treasury statement as a disbursement. The Secretary states that as a matter of fact the money in many instances is not spent for months, and sometimes not at all, being returned to the Secretary's account.

Mr. President, in my remarks on the revenue bill some days ago, I pointed out the desirability of prescribing by law the form of the Treasury statement, and in this connection I desire also to quote from the Chronicle article the following excerpt sustaining that suggestion:

When all has been said that can be said, it remains true nevertheless that these repeated changes by one administration after another in the form and character of the debt and Treasury statements are disturbing and highly objectionable, if for no other reason that they render difficult comparisons with the past on an identical basis. The lesson which the experience teaches would seem to be that the character and contents of these statements ought to be prescribed by law so as to render it impossible for each new head of the Treasury Department to impose on the form of the statement his own ideas as to what it should be.

Mr. President, the items set forth by me in the table showing the Treasury condition on September 5 as deductions from the net balance in the general fund are not a proper part of that balance, according to the authorities above quoted. They include funds or moneys which are current liabilities or disbursements, and moneys not available for Treasury obligations, and therefore have no rightful place in the balance of the general fund, which balance is or was intended to show clearly the actual available money in the Treasury at the end of each day's transactions.

The Secretary of the Treasury undertook to justify the changes made in the Treasury statement October 1, 1915, and in all fairness I will insert here his statement, to wit:

DAILY STATEMENT OF THE UNITED STATES TREASURY.

[Oct. 1, 1915.]

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The daily statement of the United States Treasury and the monthly public-debt statement of the Government have been revised by a committee appointed by order of Secretary McAdoo so as to make them more intelligible and clear to the public. The new daily statement will represent the actual condition of the Treasury, so far as it is possible to present it, at the close of business each day. The new public-debt statement will show the actual condition of the Treasury and the state of the public debt at the close of business each month. The new form for the daily Treasury statement becomes effective October 1, 1915, and that for the public-debt statement October 31, 1915.

The most important points in which the new form of daily statement differs from the old are the following:

The assets and liabilities of the Government have heretofore been published under two general classifications, viz: (1) The general fund, and (2) the currency trust funds, the general fund, and the gold-reserve fund.

The new form shows the assets and liabilities divided into three classes, viz: (1) Gold, (2) silver dollars, and (3) the general fund. This gives at a glance the amount of gold and the amount of silver dollars in the Treasury, the liabilities against such coin and bullion, and the actual condition of the general fund.

In the new form the item "Disbursing officers' balances" is excluded from the liability side of the general fund and included in the net balance. These disbursing officers' balances consist of amounts placed by the Secretary of the Treasury to the credit of disbursing officers, against which they are authorized to draw checks in payment of public obligations. These amounts are funds of the United States in the same sense that the balance remaining, subject to the warrant of the Secretary alone, is money of the United States. In the past, whenever the Secretary has placed an amount to the credit of a disbursing officer, it has been the custom to carry that on the Treasury statement as a disbursement. As a matter of fact, the money in many instances is not spent for months, and sometimes not at all, being returned to the Secretary's account. Funds are placed to the credit of disbursing officers practically as a bookkeeping arrangement, and they are as much a part of the working balance of the Treasury as the money which is subject to the warrant of the Secretary. As the net balance should represent the funds in the Treasury available for paying the current obligations of the Government, the amount placed on the books to the credit of disbursing officers should be included therein.

The amount deposited by national banks for the retirement of national-bank notes but not yet paid out for that purpose is also included in the net balance. In the old statement this amount was carried on the liability side of the general fund. This was an error, because by law deposits for the retirement of national-bank notes are a part of the public debt. The act of July 14, 1890, prescribes that such deposits shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, and that the notes thus rendered subject to retirement by the United States shall be carried as a part of the public debt. This fund is not the 5 per cent fund provided for the redemption of the current circulation of national banks, but is a fund for the redemption of the notes of national banks which have ceased to circulate notes or which have reduced their circulation. As directed by the act of July 14, 1890, the amount to the credit of this fund was placed in the general-fund balance, where it was carried continuously until the early part of this administration (1913), when the form of daily Treasury statement was changed. The item is now restored to the general-fund balance, where it belongs, and will appear as a liability on what was previously known as the monthly public-debt statement.

Following the general-fund statement appears the daily trial balance of the general fund, entitled "Receipts and disbursements this day." This is a simple statement of the day's transactions. One important change contained in this table, as well as in the "Comparative analysis of receipts and disbursements," on page 3, is the segregation of Panama Canal receipts.

In the past it has been customary to set forth Panama Canal disbursements separately as extraordinary expenditures, but receipts from tolls, profits from the sales of material on account of the canal, etc., have been included in the ordinary miscellaneous receipts. In future these Panama Canal receipts, like the disbursements on account of the Panama Canal, will appear separately.

The new daily statement is on a cash basis. Receipts have been reported on a cash basis, while disbursements have been on a mixed basis. This has proved confusing. Under the new form disbursements, like receipts, represent cash transactions.

It will be impossible to state outstanding checks in the column of liabilities in the daily statement, because it is not practicable to get the information daily from disbursing officers. Outstanding checks and warrants are offset in large measure, however, by receipts which are in transit to the Treasury. All outstanding warrants and checks will be shown monthly in what previously was known as the public-debt statement.

Several tables that appeared on the fourth page of the old statement are either omitted entirely as unimportant or uninforming, or are included in the new items on page 4—"Federal reserve notes and national-bank notes outstanding" and "Transactions affecting Federal reserve and national bank-note circulation." "Bonds held in trust for national banks" still appears, but the table of "Pay warrants drawn" has been omitted. It is believed that a daily statement of these warrants is of no value, and it will hereafter appear in the form of "Pay warrants issued," monthly, in what previously was known as the public-debt statement.

The new statement will give an accurate idea of the actual condition of the Treasury as far as it is ascertainable from day to day. The old statement, with its cumbersome notations of purely bookkeeping transactions within the Treasury Department, which had little bearing upon actual expenditures, has been very confusing and has led to much misconception as to the actual condition of the Treasury.

The public-debt statement in the new form is changed to "Financial statement of the United States Government."

Instead of reproducing the daily statement for the last day of each month on the public-debt statement the new statement will include a table of cash available to pay maturing obligations, or, in other words, the working balance of the Treasury, with the liabilities against it. On the asset side of this table will be the net balance in the Treasury. On the liability side of this statement will be set up outstanding warrants, checks, and matured coupons. While it will not be practicable, as stated above, to get daily from disbursing officers a statement of their outstanding checks, it will be possible to get this information once a month.

The monthly statement will also include a table of warrants and checks issued by departments which will show the expenditures according to this classification.

It will be necessary to get information from disbursing officers all over the country for the monthly statement, but it is believed that this can be so expedited that the department will be able to issue the statement on the 15th of each month.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. President, that under this peculiar system of bookkeeping, which if practiced in a bank or corporation would render the person guilty of such practice liable to criminal indictment, we discover in a great many of the statements of the Treasury Department, after proper analysis and making deductions such as would be made in any private financial institution, that the Treasury account frequently has shown an actual deficit. I do not intend to pursue this subject in detail, as it is sufficient for the present purpose to call attention to the methods of making up the account and to show how small a balance is to be counted on at the beginning of the present fiscal year. It might be interesting, however, to note, going back during the winter and taking up one or two statements as examples, that the outstanding obligations of the Treasury Department, together with unavailable assets, were over $11,300,000 greater than the so-called net balance reported by the Treasury Department on February 29, 1916, taking into consideration the monthly financial statement for February, appearing March 15. This statement gives the amount of Treasury warrants outstanding February 29:

The reported net balance Feb. 29 was		$117,170,215.25
On that date there were outstanding obligations and unavailable assets as follows:
(1) Balance to credit of disbursing officers (representing outstanding valid claims against the Government)	$56,065,335.98
(2) National-bank notes redemption fund (payable from the general cash)	39,933,755.50
(3) Limited tender or unavailable assets (subsidiary silver coin, fractional currency, minor coin, silver bullion)	28,332,199.74
(4) Deposits in Philippine treasury, always before Oct. 1, 1915, considered unavailable	2,585,323.59
(5) Treasury warrants outstanding (reported in "Financial Statement" issued Mar. 15)	1,583,202.98
Total amount of deductions		128,499,817.79
Total deficiency		11,329,602.54

Then, again, outstanding obligations of the Treasury Department, together with unavailable assets, were over $13,500,000 greater than the so-called net balance reported by Secretary McAdoo on May 31, 1916, after checking up the monthly financial statement for May, appearing June 15:

Net balance reported May 31, 1916		$133,557,321.07
May receipts subsequently reported		2,841,923.23
Revised balance for May, 1916		136,399,244.30
On that date there were outstanding obligations and unavailable assets as follows:
(1) Balance to credit of disbursing officers (representing outstanding valid claims against the Government)	$64,352,633.40
(2) National-bank notes redemption fund (payable from the general cash)	55,092,915.00
(3) Limited tender or unavailable assets (subsidiary silver coin, minor coin, silver bullion)	25,804,202.81
(4) Deposits in Philippine treasury	2,193,172.70
(5) Treasury warrants outstanding, matured coupons, and interest checks (reported in "Financial Statement" issued June 15)	2,512,930.20
Total amount of deductions		149,955,854.11
Total deficiency		13,556,609.81

THE DEMOCRATIC TARIFF OF 1913.

Mr. President, the Democratic Party, through its tariff policy, promised four important things:

First. To reduce the high cost of living.

Second. To equalize the distribution of taxation throughout the United States.

Third. To raise enough revenue from its tariff to run the Government, economically administered.

Fourth. To expand the export trade and capture foreign markets.

The Underwood Democratic tariff became a law October 3, 1913, and for the period up to June 30, 1916, it has been in operation three fiscal years, with the exception of the first three months of that period. According to this three-year record the Democratic tariff has failed to redeem a single one of the promises made for that measure.

The most important thing, in addition to lowering the rates of duty, was the placing of a large number of competitive products on the free list by the Underwood tariff, thereby depriving the Federal Treasury of revenue and at the same time displacing the sale of domestic products in the markets of the United States, which displacement amounted to $262,709,239 during the fiscal year 1915, as will be seen from the following official statistics:

ARTICLES FREE-LISTED BY THE UNDERWOOD TARIFF.

There was imported into the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, a total of $1,032,863,558 of foreign merchandise free of duty; $262,709,239, or about 26 per cent of this total, represents the value of articles that were transferred from the Payne dutiable list to the free list by the Underwood tariff.

This $262,709,239 of free imports during the fiscal year 1915 compares with $157,306,393 of the same character of imports during the fiscal year 1913 which were dutiable under the Payne-Aldrich tariff, and from which $32,536,199 of revenue was collected.

In other words, there was an increase in the imports of those articles that were transferred to the free list by the Underwood tariff from $157,306,393 during the fiscal year 1913 to $262,709,239 during the fiscal year 1915, with a consequent loss of $32,536,199 in revenues.

The average rate on all dutiable imports under the Underwood tariff, during the fiscal year 1915, was 33.43 per cent. If these free imports of $262,709,239, during the fiscal year 1915, of articles transferred to the free list had been subject to a rate of 33 per cent, the revenue received would have been $86,694,049; if subject to a 30 per cent rate, $78,812,772; if subject to a 25 per cent rate, $65,677,309; or if subject to a 20 per cent rate, $52,541,848.

The following tables give a list of the articles that were transferred from the Payne dutiable list to the free list of the Underwood tariff, with the imports of those articles during the fiscal year 1915—which was under war conditions, with the exception of the first month—compared with imports during the fiscal year 1913 of the corresponding character of goods which were dutiable under the Payne tariff, together with the amount of revenue collected; also a table showing the total imports, revenues, and average rates of duty for the fiscal year 1913 under the Payne tariff and the fiscal year 1915 under the Underwood tariff during European war conditions:

Imports during the fiscal year 1915 of articles placed on the free list by the Underwood tariff, compared with imports during the fiscal year 1913 of the corresponding articles which were dutiable under the Payne-Aldrich tariff, and amount of revenue collected during 1913.

Article.	Fiscal year 1913.		Fiscal year 1915.
	Imports.	Duties.	Imports.
Abrasives, crude artificial	$190,057	$19,005.70	$255,474
Agricultural implements, plows, etc	16,992	2,548.75	777,022
Animals:
Cattle	6,318,468	1,764,650.58	17,546,085
Sheep	77,075	13,909.50	533,967
Swine	15,215	2,313.00	2,269,795
All other live (for human food)	108,882	21,773.34	76,649
Total animals	6,519,640	1,802,655.42	20,426,496
Antimony ore and stibnite	84,167	24,275.19	98,339
Asphaltum and bitumen	931,530	335,906.96	465,717
Limestone-rock asphalt	19,486	2,372.50	23,860
Blood, dried	339	96.19	227,648
Breadstuffs:
Bread, biscuit, and wafers (unsweetened)	101,122	20,223.70	173,937
Buckwheat	38,829	9,446.85	174,821
Buckwheat flour	951	237.68	11,373
Corn	470,176	129,768.67	6,083,390
Corn meal	278	27.32	1,137
Rye and rye flour	949	139.25	141,718
Wheat, and products of	1,345,647	297,299.55	10,536
Total breadstuffs	1,957,952	457,143.52	6,596,912
Broom corn	14,720	559.04	15,912
Cement, Roman, Portland, and other hydraulic	124,395	25,047.40	132,864
Chemicals, drugs, dyes, and medicines:
Acids—
Acetic or pyroligneous	$3,036	$780.77	$16,419
Chromic	1,682	170.44	1,394
Sulphuric, or oil of vitriol	512	86.57	44,608
Total acids	5,230	1,037.78	62,411
Albumen (except egg)	27,847	5,333.85	48,941
Alcohol, methyl or wood	387	77.40	11,880
Ammonia, perchlorate of			6,515
Antitoxins, etc			12,826
Blood char	333	66.60	1,196
Bone char or bone black, not pigment	12,484	2,496.80	129,715
Calcium, acetate of, brown and gray, chloride of, crude, and carbide and nitrate of			1,208,394
Chromium, hydroxide of, crude			12,444
Anthracene and anthracene oil			49,949
Copper, sulphate of, or blue vitriol	728	27.65	2,156
Extracts for tanning:
Hemlock bark	29,708	7,288.58	173,998
Oak bark			2,628
Quebracho	1,672,314	470,442.70	3,676,749
Total tanning extracts	1,702,022	477,731.28	3,853,375
Indigo, dyes obtained from	53,493	3,455.39	76,258
Iodine, resublimed	96	8.00	7
Iron, sulphate of, or copperas	174	9.29	95
Milk, sugar of	2,582	451.30	28,154
Paris green and London purple	7,692	1,153.80	2,975
Phosphorus	270	117.00	251
Potash, cyanide of	137,535	17,191.89	143,331
Potash, hydrate of (not more than 15 per cent)	11,919	1,128.21	225,002
Santonine and its combinations with acids	44,358	990.75	25,558
Soda—
Arsenate of	55,941	12,679.98	3,188
Cyanide of			955,907
Silicate of	9,400	3,870.41	16,292
Soda ash	35,461	7,752.00	29,022
Sulphate of, crude, or niter cake	4,771	189.09	3,566
Total soda	105,573	24,491.48	1,007,975
Strychnia and its combinations with acids	377	79.80	11,449
Sulphur, refined	41,626	6,969.10	36,275
Sulphur, sublimed, or flowers of	122,093	24,415.54	31,202
Sumac, ground	289,255	42,336.35	294,434
Total chemicals, drugs, etc	2,565,984	609,569.26	7,273,778
Bauxite, crude, not advanced	119,848	30,863.07	50,557
Coal, charcoal, and coke:
Coal, bituminous, and shale	3,560,893	526,278.55	3,731,947
Coal compositions used for fuel	4,061	812.20	220
Coal, slack, or culm of coal	807,474	61,231.46	432,848
Charcoal	25,557	5,111.10	39,978
Coke	462,721	92,544.38	394,505
Total coal, charcoal, and coke	4,860,706	685,977.69	4,599,498
Cork waste, shavings, and refuse			1,334,262
Eggs of poultry	191,714	63,588.28	449,067
Explosives:
Fulminates, fulminating powders, and like articles—
Suitable for miners' use	33,569	6,713.80	35,827
All other	137	41.10	110,000
Gunpowder and all explosive substances, n. s. p. f., for mining, blasting, and artillery purposes	59,845	4,706.22	88,276
Fibers, vegetable, and manufactures of:
Flax—
Not hackled or dressed	2,234,934	170,559.44	303,123
Hackled, known as "dressed line"	1,073,073	117,600.37	1,422,701
Straw	21,146	2,049.69	6,202
Tow of	397,721	38,584.02	131,384
Flax noils			12,309
Total flax	3,726,874	328,793.52	1,875,719
Hemp—
Not hackled or dressed	1,160,763	136,590.84	1,030,767
Hackled, known as "line of hemp"	60,075	9,421.29	130,970
Tow of	160,197	18,615.34	16,992
Total hemp	1,381,035	164,597.47	1,178,729
Bagging for cotton	431,164	32,901.59	720,207
Burlaps, not bleached, etc	35,811,465	7,676,477.29	27,955,561

Imports during the fiscal year 1915 of articles placed on the free list by the Underwood tariff, etc.—Continued.

Article.	Fiscal year 1913.		Fiscal year 1915.
	Imports.	Duties.	Imports.
Fish:
Cod, haddock, hake, and pollock—
Fresh, frozen, or packed in ice	$8,652	$2,293.75	$154,938
Dried, smoked, salted, or pickled	1,573,173	219,271.55	2,202,968
Halibut—
Fresh, frozen, or packed in ice	73,609	15,168.71	581,220
Dried or smoked			60
Pickled or salted	3,110	311.00	2,419
Herring—
Fresh, frozen, or packed in ice	37,718	3,319.31	98,940
Dried or smoked	470,171	35,809.25	125,532
Pickled or salted	2,686,762	346,083.12	2,803,930
Mackerel—
Fresh, frozen, or packed in ice	146,658	28,820.36	146,102
Pickled or salted	1,271,386	250,876.89	1,528,597
Salmon—
Fresh, frozen, or packed in ice	180,513	15,900.68	383,697
Dried or smoked			584
Pickled or salted	28,650	3,445.30	104,451
Smelts, fresh or frozen	467,011	59,047.11	293,647
Eels, fresh or frozen	18,515	2,753.26	24,376
Other fish, n. s. p. f.—
Fresh, frozen, or packed in ice	74,283	8,815.38	1,266,621
Fresh-water fish	1,326,521	86,200.03	975,335
Dried or smoked	247,646	25,040.42	512,813
Pickled or salted	79,138	8,591.13	154,787
Total fish	8,693,516	1,111,747.30	11,361,017
Iron and steel:
Iron ore	7,035,185	292,058.79	3,505,734
Iron in pigs—
Ferromanganese	5,484,829	320,341.44	3,386,584
Spiegeleisen	22,072	1,987.50	34,396
All other (except ferrosilicon)	337,187	44,275.57	432,458
Total pig iron	5,844,088	366,604.51	3,853,438
Scrap iron and steel, waste or refuse, fit only to be remanufactured	461,490	41,468.12	281,710
Slabs, brooms, loops or other forms less finished than iron in bars and more advanced than pig iron (except castings)	120,173	25,487.89	76,004
Steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms and slabs, die blocks or blanks and billets, if made by the Bessemer, Siemens-Martin, open-hearth, or similar processes, not containing alloys			44,871
Horseshoe-nail rods (wire rods)			129,114
Wire—
Baling, for hay or other commodities			223
Barbed wire			361
Galvanized, etc., used for fencing			78
Galvanized wire fencing, etc			8,315
Bars or rails for railways	125,642	19,788.09	1,563,616
Engraved steel plates, dies, and rolls, for engraving or printing bonds, etc., and steel engraved forms for bonds, etc			8,858
Ties for baling cotton or any other commodity (hoop or band iron or steel)	5,195	834.70	32,506
Horse, mule, or ox shoes	19,337	4,074.12	4,226
Machines and machinery—
Cash registers	183	54.90	3,013
Cream separators			333,867
Sand-blast machines			4,183
Sewing machines	108,947	32,684.10	516,997
Shoe machines			38,867
Typesetting machines (linotype, etc.)			2,255
Typewriters	643	192.90	4,622
Total machines and machinery	109,773	32,931.90	903,804
Nails, spikes, and tacks	4,732	897.40	31,146
Needles, shoe-machine			3,217
Staples, wire			107
Total iron and steel (except ore)	6,690,430	492,986.73	6,941,596
Leather, and manufactures of:
Leather and tanned skins (except chamois skin, enameled upholstery leather, glove leather, pianoforte and pianoforte action leather)	6,334,314	627,375.76	10,050,870
Boots, shoes, and slippers (leather)	176,452	17,645.04	468,141
Gloves, rawhide			219
Harness, saddles, and saddlery	99,271	24,695.59	227,858
Shoe laces, finished or unfinished	7,722	1,857.54	5,958
Total manufactures of	283,445	44,198.17	702,176
Total leather, and manufactures of	6,617,759	671,573.93	10,753,046

Imports during the fiscal year 1915 of articles placed on the free list by the Underwood tariff, etc.—Continued.

Article.	Fiscal year 1913.		Fiscal year 1915.
	Imports.	Duties.	Imports.
Meat and dairy products:
Meat and meat products—
Fresh meats—
Beef	$303,934	$59,365.54	$16,772,258
Lamb	6,370	567.57	805,513
Mutton	16,406	3,192.69	679,321
Pork	38,682	3,918.78	2,010,111
Veal	7,193	1,179.29	171,405
Total fresh meats	372,585	68,223.97	20,429,608
Bacon and hams	156,933	25,122.93	1,161,263
Meats, prepared or preserved	426,809	106,701.39	1,184,947
Livers, sweetbreads, etc., of beef, etc	10,294	1,029.40	1,165,389
Lard, lard compounds, and substitutes	496	61.78	79,672
Tallow	41,563	2,443.05	823,958
Total meat and meat products	1,008,680	203,584.52	24,845,307
Dairy products—
Cream, fresh	1,068,109	62,367.55	1,809,196
Cream, preserved or condensed			2,088
Milk, fresh	6,933	918.70	232,997
Milk, preserved or condensed	131,086	35,560.87	2,325,149
Total dairy products	1,206,128	98,847.12	4,369,430
Total meat and dairy products	2,214,808	302,431.64	29,205,827
Oils:
Cod oil	135,949	37,319.52	433,142
Cod-liver oil	137,872	39,377.40	157,093
Paraffin oil	664	166.00	11,679
Birch tar oil			571
Perilla oil			5,485
Total oils	274,505	76,862.92	607,897
Paper stock, crude: Rag pulp			27,540
Paper, and manufactures of:
Bibles			150,905
Textbooks used in schools, etc			116,172
Decalcomania paper, not printed			70,333
Print paper, not over 2½ cents per pound	1,167,109	172,870.41	12,883,452
Total paper and manufactures of	1,167,109	172,870.41	13,220,862
Photographic goods: Films, sensitized, but not exposed or developed	27,230	6,807.44	1,006,335
Plants, etc., bulbs, mature mother flowering, for propagation only			8,988
Radium, and salts of, and radioactive subs			29,983
Salt	288,689	145,100.99	386,564
Seeds:
Celery seed	20,018	2,294.46	117,475
Soya beans			87,306
Selenium and salts of			43
Stone: Burrstones, manufactured or bound up into millstones	3,810	571.50	703
Tungsten-bearing ores	386,629	38,662.90	215,152
Vegetables: Potatoes	341,110	307,481.72	219,856
Wood, and manufactures of:
Sawdust			10,911
Timber, hewn or sawed, squared or sided	13,890	172.74	2,722
Lumber—
Boards, planks, deals, and other sawed—
Whitewood, sycamore, and basswood	834,649	49,603.55	21,042
Sawed lumber, n. s. p. f	17,764,293	1,374,279.04	17,486,506
Broom handles			20,963
Clapboards	131,919	4,942.75	104,008
Hubs for wheels, etc., rough hewn, etc	13,876	2,775.20	20,219
Laths	1,901,606	142,329.26	1,916,248
Pickets and palings	189,911	18,991.08	137,651
Shingles	1,379,767	275,428.59	3,104,698
Staves	21,816	2,181.60	55,445
Total lumber	22,237,837	1,870,531.07	22,866,870
Wood flour	62,447	21,856.45	60,131
Wood pulp—
Mechanically ground	317,503	33,228.69	3,109,246
Chemical, unbleached	8,416,316	902,556.20	11,559,422
Chemical, bleached	3,408,944	378,843.86	5,212,532
Total wood pulp	12,142,763	1,314,628.84	19,881,200
Total wood and manufactures of	34,456,937	3,207,189.10	42,823,354

Imports during the fiscal year 1915 of articles placed on the free list by the Underwood tariff, etc.—Continued.

Article.	Fiscal year 1913.		Fiscal year 1915.
	Imports.	Duties.	Imports.
Wool, and manufactures of:
Unmanufactured wool and hair (except hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals)	$29,884,197	$13,376,575.40	$66,581,908
Rags, mungo, flocks, noils, shoddy, and wastes	162,848	58,045.70	847,694
Press cloth of camel's hair, for oil milling purposes			79,005
Total wool, and manufactures of	30,047,045	13,434,621.10	67,508,697
Total transfers to free list by Underwood tariff (fiscal year 1915)	157,306,393	32,536,198.80	262,709,239

Total imports, revenues, and average rates of duty, fiscal years 1913 and 1915.

Total United States.	Fiscal year 1913 (Payne tariff).	Fiscal year 1915 (Underwood tariff).
Imports for consumption:
Free of duty	$986,972,333	$1,032,863,558
Dutiable	779,717,078	615,522,722
Total imports	1,766,689,411	1,648,386,280
Per cent of free imports	55.87	62.66
Duties collected:
On dutiable	$312,252,215	$205,755,073
On total imports	$312,509,946	$205,946,842
Average rate of duty:
On dutiable imports—per cent	40.05	33.43
On total imports—do	17.69	12.49

Mr. President, in considering the Democratic tariff of 1913 from a revenue standpoint, it is interesting to note the effect of its operation as compared with that of its predecessor—the protective tariff of 1909. The following review is a three-year comparative analysis of revenues and expenditures under the Taft and Wilson administrations.

REVENUES UNDER TAFT AND WILSON ADMINISTRATIONS.

The ordinary revenues of the Government, not including the Panama Canal, public debt, and Postal Service, as reported by the Secretary of the United States Treasury July 1, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, were as follows:

From customs, $211,866,223; from ordinary internal revenue—whisky, beer, tobacco, and so forth—$304,000,000; from so-called "war taxes," $83,873,339; from income tax on corporations, $56,909,942; from income tax on individuals, $67,957,488, or a total from the income tax of $124,867,430; and miscellaneous receipts, $52,873,496. This makes a total in the ordinary receipts of the Government of $777,480,488 for the fiscal year 1916.

For the fiscal year 1911 the total ordinary receipts of the Government amounted to $701,372,375; for the fiscal year 1912, $691,778,465; for the fiscal year 1913, $724,111,230; for the fiscal year 1914, $734,673,167; and for the fiscal year 1915, $697,910,828.

With the figures now complete for these six fiscal years, a comparison of revenues under Republican and Democratic administrations can be made, and for this purpose the fiscal years 1911, 1912, and 1913 are those under the Republican Party, while the fiscal years 1914, 1915, and 1916 constitute the Democratic record, with the exception of the first three months of the fiscal year 1914—July 1 to October 3, 1913—and the period from October 4, 1913, to March 1, 1914, as the Payne-Aldrich tariff was in effect, so far as customs receipts were concerned, on all merchandise during the former period and on wool for two months, woolens for three months, and sugar for the whole of the latter period.

Before an analysis is made of the last three fiscal years of the Taft Republican administration and the first three fiscal years of the Wilson Democratic administration a word should be said in explanation of what happened to the revenue during the fiscal year 1914, which is being credited by the Democrats.

From July 1 to October 3, 1913, there was $88,617,096 of customs receipts collected from the Payne-Aldrich tariff, and from October 3, 1913, to March 1, 1914, there was a revenue of $14,741,197 collected from the Payne-Aldrich rates on wool, woolens, molasses, and sugar, making a total of $103,358,293 in customs revenue collected from the Payne-Aldrich tariff during the fiscal year 1914. There also was collected $10,671,077 from the Payne corporation excise tax during the fiscal year 1914. There also was credited to the fiscal year 1914 $3,800,000 of surplus from the postal revenues for the fiscal year 1913. These items make a total of $117,829,370 in revenues received from Republican legislation during the fiscal year 1914 which was an aid to and credited by the Democratic administration to their revenues. During the fiscal year 1915 the Democratic revenues were benefited by the addition of $12,535,276 from the sale of two old battleships of the United States to Greece.

Now, for the comparison of the first three fiscal years—1914, 1915, and 1916—of the Democratic administration with the last three fiscal years—1911, 1912, and 1913—of the Republican administration. These are the ordinary receipts of the United States, and do not include the Panama Canal, public debt, and Postal Service.

Customs receipts during the first three fiscal years of the Democratic administration amounted to $713,972,910. Of that amount $103,358,293 was customs receipts received from Republican tariff rates during the fiscal year 1914. Customs receipts during the last three fiscal years of the Republican administration amounted to $944,710,139. This makes a decrease of $230,737,229 in customs receipts during the first three fiscal years of the Democratic administration.

Ordinary internal revenue—that is, receipts from whisky, beer, tobacco, and so forth—amounted to $896,058,494 during the first three fiscal years of the Democratic administration, as compared with $891,451,786 received from the same source during the last three fiscal years of the Republican administration. This is an increase of $4,606,708 by the Democratic administration. There was no change in taxes on these items by the Democratic Party. The Democratic Party in a time of peace enacted a so-called "war-tax" law, on October 22, 1914. From this measure there have been collected from the people of the United States taxes amounting to $135,942,465 since its passage. The Republican administration had no so-called "war-tax" law.

Taxes collected from the incomes of corporations during the first three fiscal years of the Democratic administration amounted to $139,193,279, as compared with $97,106,581 collected during the last three fiscal years of the Republican administration. This is an increase of $42,086,698 in taxes collected from the incomes of corporations by the Democratic administration. Taxes collected from the incomes of individuals during the first three fiscal years of the Democratic administration amounted to $137,257,184. This is an additional tax upon the thrift and energy of the people of the United States by the Democratic Party. The total receipts from the income-tax law during the first three fiscal years of the Democratic administration amounted to $276,450,463, as compared with $97,106,581 during the last three fiscal years of the Republican administration. This is an increase of $179,343,882 in taxes collected from the incomes of corporations and indivduals by the Democrate Party.

Total receipts from internal-revenue taxation during the first three fiscal years of the Democratic administration amounted to $1,308,451,422, as compared with $988,558,367 collected from internal-revenue taxation during the last three fiscal years of the Republican administration. This is an increase of $319,893,055 in direct taxes levied upon the people of the United States by the Democratic Party. Of this $319,893,055 increase in direct taxation, $273,199,649 came from the additional tax on incomes of individuals and from "war taxes" levied upon the people of the United States by the Democratic Party.

Receipts from miscellaneous sources—that is, from the sale of public lands and various other items—amounted to $187,640,151 during the first three fiscal years of the Democratic administration, as compared with $183,993,564 during the last three fiscal years of the Republican administration. In the Democratic receipts is the item of $12,535,276 from the sale of the two old battleships Idaho and Mississippi.

Total ordinary receipts (not including the Panama Canal, public debt, and Postal Service) of the Government during the first three fiscal years of the Democratic administration amounted to $2,210,064,483. Of this amount $117,829,370 was collected from Republican legislation (as indicated in the above items) and which is credited by the Democrats to the revenues during their administration. Total ordinary receipts of the Government during the last three fiscal years of the Republican administration amounted to $2,117,262,070. This makes an increase of only $92,802,413 in the total ordinary receipts of the Government during the first three fiscal years of the Democratic administration, but this increase was obtained only by the aid of $117,829,370 of revenues collected from Republican laws carried over into the Democratic administration, and also $135,942,465 collected from the Democratic "war taxes" and $137,257,184 collected from the income tax on individuals, or a total of $273,199,649 from additional taxation by the Democratic Party in their efforts to get revenues enough to equal those that were collected under the policy of a protective tariff.

Without the support of "war taxes" or an increase in other sources of direct taxes, the Democratic policy of a low tariff and income tax would be an utter failure as a producer of revenue to support the Government. Their own official record proves it.

REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES OF THE UNITED STATES, FISCAL YEARS ENDED JUNE 30, 1911 TO 1916.

Ordinary receipts and disbursements of the Government during the last three fiscal years of Republican administration and the first three fiscal years of the present Democratic administration, with footnotes showing the Republican items that benefited the revenues during the fiscal year 1914.

[Source: Reports of the Secretary of the United States Treasury.]

REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION.

Revenues and expenditures (excluding Panama Canal, public debt, and Postal Service).	Fiscal year 1911.	Fiscal year 1912.	Fiscal year 1913.
Ordinary receipts:
Customs	$314,497,071	$311,321,672	$318,891,396
Internal revenue—
Ordinary	289,012,224	293,028,896	309,410,666
Corporation excise tax	33,516,977	28,583,304	35,006,300
Total internal revenue	322,529,201	321,612,200	344,416,966
Miscellaneous receipts	64,346,103	58,844,593	60,802,868
Total ordinary receipts	701,372,375	691,778,465	724,111,230
Ordinary disbursements (total)	654,137,998	654,553,963	682,770,706
Surplus in Treasury	47,234,377	37,224,502	41,340,524

DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATION.

Revenues and expenditures (excluding Panama Canal, public debt, and Postal Service).	Fiscal year 1914.	Fiscal year 1915.	Fiscal year 1916.
Ordinary receipts:
Customs	[1] $292,320,015	$209,786,672	$211,999,223
Internal revenue—
Ordinary	308,659,733	283,398,701	304,000,000
Emergency (war taxes)		[2] 52,069,126	83,873,339
Income tax—
Corporations	[3] 43,127,740	39,155,597	56,909,942
Individuals	[4] 28,253,534	41,045,162	67,957,488
Total income tax	[5] 71,381,274	80,201,759	124,867,430
Total internal revenue	380,041,007	415,669,646	512,740,769
Miscellaneous receipts	[6] 62,312,145	[4] 72,454,510	82,873,496
Total ordinary receipts	[7] 734,673,167	[8] 697,910,828	[9] 777,480,488
Ordinary disbursements (total)	700,254,490	731,309,759	716,367,674
Surplus in Treasury	34,418,677		61,112,814
Deficit in Treasury		33,488,931

NOTE.—Figures for the fiscal year 1916 are those made public in a statement issued July 1, 1916, by the Secretary of the Treasury.

[1] Includes $88,617,096 from Payne customs tariff for 3 months (July 1 to Oct. 3, 1913).
[2] For 8 months (Oct. 22, 1914, to June 30, 1915).
[3] Includes $10,671,077 from Payne corporation tax.
[4] For 10 months only.
[5] Includes $3,800,000 surplus of posta revenue for fiscal year 1914.
[6] Includes $12,535,276 from sale of old battleships Idaho and Mississippi: $3,500,000 surplus of postal revenue for fiscal year 1914, and $3,822,085 from Panama Canal tolls, making a total of $19,857,361 from unusual sources in the ordinary receipts for the fiscal year 1915.
[7] Includes $103,088,173 from Payne customs and corporation tax and postal surplus for fiscal year 1913.
[8] Not including $2,554,576.63 from Panama Canal tolls, etc.

Ordinary receipts and disbursements of the Government during the last three fiscal years of Republican administration, etc.—Continued.

COMPARATIVE EFFECT OF DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATION.

Revenues and expenditures (excluding Panama Canal, public debt, and Postal Service).	Last three fiscal years under Republican administration (1911, 1912, 1913).	First three fiscal years under Democratic administration (1914, 1915, 1916).	Increase by Democratic.	Decrease by Democratic.
Ordinary receipts:
Customs	$944,710,139	[1] $713,972,910		$230,737,229
Internal revenue—
Ordinary	891,451,786	896,058,494	$4,606,708
Emergency (war taxes)		135,942,465	135,942,465
Income tax—
Corporations	97,106,581	[2] 139,193,279	42,086,698
Individuals		137,257,184	137,257,184
Total income tax	97,106,581	[3] 276,450,463	179,343,882
Total internal revenue	988,558,367	[3] 1,308,451,422	319,893,055
Miscellaneous receipts	183,993,564	[4] 187,640,151	3,646,587
Total ordinary receipts	2,117,262,070	[5] 2,210,064,483	92,802,413
Ordinary disbursements:
Total disbursements	1,991,462,667	2,148,021,923	156,559,256
Surplus of ordinary receipts	125,799,403	62,042,560		63,756,843

[1] Includes $88,617,096 of customs receipts collected by Payne tariff for 3 months (from July 1 to Oct. 3, 1913) before the passage of the Underwood tariff.
[2] Includes $10,671,077 collected from the Payne corporation excise tax during the fiscal year 1914.
[3] Includes $3,800,000 surplus of postal revenue for the fiscal year 1913; $12,535,276 from sale of old battleships Idaho and Mississippi to Greece on July 10, 1914; and $3,822,085 from Panama Canal tolls during the fiscal year 1915.
[4] Includes $88,617,096 from Payne customs tariff for 3 months (July 1 to Oct. 3, 1913); $10,671,077 from Payne corporation excise tax during the fiscal year 1914; and $3,800,000 surplus of postal revenue for the fiscal year 1913; making a total of $103,088,173 collected from Republican legislation and credited by the Democrats during their administration.

INCREASING IMPORTS—DECREASING CUSTOMS REVENUE.

Now comes the proposition for additional revenue for the purpose of meeting the demand for "preparedness." The first Democratic cry for additional revenue was when the European war came on the horizon—August 1, 1914. Then it was the cry of "falling revenues due to the stoppage of importations on account of the European war." We hear no more of decreased importations. On the contrary, there has been a progressive increase in importations since January, 1915, and a progressive falling off of customs revenue, as is seen by the following official figures:

During the last quarter of the Payne-Aldrich tariff—July 1 to October 3, 1913—imports amounted to $441,507,323; duties collected, $88,380,457, at an average rate of 20 per cent.

During the first quarter of the Underwood Democratic tariff, under peace conditions—October 4 to December 31, 1913—with Payne tariff on wool and sugar in effect, imports amounted to $497,871,162; duties collected, $65,274,599, at an average rate of 13.11 per cent.

During the first quarter of the Underwood tariff, under European war conditions—July 1 to September 30, 1914—imports amounted to $428,061,797; duties collected, $58,437,264, at an average rate of 13.65 per cent.

31, 1915, imports amounted to $401,475,701; duties collected, 31, 1915, imports amounted to $401,475,701; duties collected, $51,017,977, at an average rate of 12.71 per cent.

During the quarter, April to June, 1915, imports amounted to $442,441,452; duties collected, $48,955,743, at a rate of 11.07 per cent.

During the quarter, July to September, 1915, imports amounted to $444,589,961; duties collected, $46,107,276, at a rate of 10.37 per cent.

During the quarter, October to December, 1915, imports amounted to $490,111,911; duties collected, $49,750,044, at a rate of 10.15 per cent.

During the quarter from January 1 to March 31, 1916, imports amounted to $585,562,106; duties collected, $56,102,006, at an average rate of 9.58 per cent.

Thus we have a record of increased importations and decreased customs revenues due to the low rates of the Democratic tariff and not on account of the European war.

REVENUE TARIFF POLICIES COMPARED.

It was the intention of the Democratic Party to slash the revenues at the customhouse and transfer the burden of taxation directly upon the people of the United States by the enactment of an income-tax law. As explained by the exponents of this school of economic thought it would equalize the burden of taxation. Here is how the Democratic theory of a low tariff and direct taxes works out.

During the fiscal years 1914, 1915, and 1916, the first three years of the Democratic administration, customs receipts amounted to $713,972,910, as compared with $944,710,139 of customs receipts collected during the fiscal years 1911, 1912, and 1913 under Republican administration. This is a decrease of $230,737,229 in customs receipts by the Democratic tariff law.

During the fiscal years 1914, 1915, and 1916 the Democratic income-tax law brought in $276,450,463 of revenue, as compared with $97,106,581 during the fiscal years 1911, 1912, and 1913, the last three years of the Republican administration. This is an increase of $179,343,882 from income taxes by the Democratic law. Of the total income tax collected by the Democratic Party, $137,257,184 was received from the incomes of individuals.

Therefore, we have a total of $990,423,373 of revenue collected from customs and the income tax during the first three fiscal years—1914, 1915, and 1916—of the Democratic administration, as compared with $1,041,816,720 of revenues collected from customs and the corporation excise tax during the last three fiscal years—1911, 1912, and 1913—of the Republican administration. This is a decrease of $51,393,347 in the revenues from these two sources by the Democratic tariff and income-tax law of October 3, 1913, notwithstanding the aid they had from the Republican protective tariff during the fiscal year 1914.

The difference between the policy of a protective tariff and that of a Democratic tariff for revenue only supplemented by an income tax is as follows:

The Democratic tariff of 1913 caused a decrease of $230,737,229 in customs receipts and the Government received only $179,343,882 as an increase from their income-tax law to offset this decrease in customs receipts. Therefore the Democratic tariff of October 3, 1913, is a failure as a producer of revenue to support the Government.

TRADE BEFORE THE EUROPEAN WAR.

Before the European war began, on August 1, 1914, the Democratic tariff had been in operation for 10 months, and during that period the record of trade and customs revenues of the United States was as follows:

Imports of merchandise into the United States before the European war increased $101,977,779, or 6.78 per cent; exports of merchandise from the United States decreased $158,888,343, or 7.53 per cent, resulting in a loss of $260,866,122, or 42.90 per cent, in our export balance of trade, while customs receipts fell off $30,670,070, or 11.80 per cent, during this 10 months' period before the war. This increase of imports and decrease in customs receipts was brought about by a 17.40 per cent reduction in rates by the Underwood Democratic tariff.

TRADE 10 MONTHS BEFORE THE EUROPEAN WAR.

Monthly and total effect of the Underwood Democratic tariff upon imports, exports, trade balances, and customs receipts before the European war began.

TOTAL IMPORTS.

Month.	Payne-Aldrich tariff (10 months).	Underwood-Simmons tariff before the war (10 months).	Effect of Underwood-Simmons tariff before the war.
			Increase.	Decrease.
	1912.	1913.	1913.	1913.
October	$177,987,986	$132,949,302		$45,038,684
November	153,004,808	148,236,536		4,858,362
December	184,005,444	194,025,571	$29,930,127
	1913.	1914.	1914.	1914.
January	$163,033,438	$154,742,923		$8,320,515
February	149,913,048	148,044,776		1,869,112
March	155,445,498	182,555,304	$27,109,806
April	146,104,461	173,762,114	27,367,653
May	133,723,713	164,281,515	30,557,802
June	131,245,877	157,529,450	26,283,573
July	139,093,779	159,677,291	20,615,021
Total 10 months	1,503,827,093	1,605,804,782	[1] 101,977,779

TOTAL EXPORTS.

	1912.	1913.	1913.	1913.
October	$254,933,504	$271,861,464	$17,227,960
November	278,244,191	245,539,042		$32,705,149
December	250,315,837	233,195,658		17,120,179
	1913.	1914.	1914.	1914.
January	227,032,930	204,066,603		22,966,327
February	193,996,942	173,920,145		20,076,797
March	187,425,711	187,498,234	72,523
April	199,813,438	162,552,579		37,260,858
May	194,607,422	161,732,619		32,874,803
June	163,404,916	157,072,044		6,332,872
July	160,990,778	154,138,947		6,851,831
Total 10 months	2,110,466,639	1,951,578,296		[2] 158,888,343

EXCESS OF EXPORTS (BALANCE OF TRADE).

	1912.	1913.	1913.	1913.
October	$76,645,518	$138,912,162	$62,266,644
November	125,149,283	97,302,496		$27,846,787
December	96,229,363	49,170,057		47,059,306
	1913.	1914.	1914.	1914.
January	63,969,492	49,323,680		14,645,812
February	44,083,024	25,875,369		18,207,655
March	31,981,213	4,943,930		27,037,283
April	53,618,977	[3] 11,209,544		64,828,521
May	60,883,709	[3] 2,548,896		63,432,605
June	32,158,039	[3] 457,406		32,616,445
July	21,929,608	[3] 5,538,344		27,467,952
Total 10 months	606,639,636	345,773,514		[4] 260,866,122

CUSTOMS RECEIPTS.

	1912.	1913.	1913.	1913.
October	$30,216,824	$30,138,049		$78,775
November	25,660,353	21,173,628		4,492,725
December	24,248,161	21,510,140		2,738,021
	1913.	1914.	1914.	1914.
January	29,334,124	23,528,080		5,806,044
February	27,605,116	17,699,604		9,905,512
March	27,457,489	25,927,213		1,530,276
April	23,693,967	22,232,767		1,461,200
May	20,434,749	20,830,573	$395,824
June	22,668,599	23,553,448		115,151
July	27,806,655	22,988,495		4,818,160
Total 10 months	260,132,037	229,461,967		[5] 30,670,070

[1] Or an increase of 6.78 per cent by the Underwood tariff.
[2] Or a decrease of 7.53 per cent by the Underwood tariff.
[3] Excess of imports.
[4] Or a decrease of 42.90 per cent by the Underwood tariff.
[5] Or a decrease of 11.80 per cent by the Underwood tariff.

SUMMARY—EFFECT OF UNDERWOOD TARIFF UPON TRADE BEFORE THE EUROPEAN WAR.

Total United States.	10 months ended July 31—		Effect of Underwood-Simmons tariff before the war.
	1913, Payne-Aldrich tariff.	1914, Underwood-Simmons tariff before war.	Increase.		Decrease.
			Amount.	Per cent.	Amount.	Per cent.
Imports of merchandise	$1,503,827,093	$1,605,804,782	$101,977,779	6.78
Exports of merchandise	2,110,466,639	1,951,578,296			$158,888,343	7.53
Excess of exports	606,639,636	345,773,514			260,866,122	42.90
Total imports and exports	3,614,293,642	3,557,383,078			56,910,564	1.57
Customs receipts	260,132,037	229,461,967			30,670,070	11.80
Average rate of duty on imports, per cent	17.30	14.29				17.40

REVENUES BEFORE THE EUROPEAN WAR.

It has been asserted time and again by the Democrats that the Underwood tariff produced more revenue during the 10 months' period before the European war than the Payne-Aldrich tariff during the corresponding period of the previous year.

About the only comfort the Democratic Party can get out of its tariff is the alleged increase of $20,000,000 in the total ordinary receipts for the Underwood period before the European war over the receipts during the previous period under the Payne-Aldrich tariff.

An analysis of the receipts during this 10 months' period before the war does not show any such results. On the contrary, if proper and due credit were given to the respective taxing power of the two laws, there would have been a falling off in the total ordinary receipts of $6,125,024 by the Underwood tariff during this 10 months' period before the European war.

Here are the figures taken from official statements issued by the United States Treasury, showing the respective items making up these receipts and the benefit and aid they had by reason of Republican legislation and from an unusual source of revenue by the sale of two old battleships:

From October 1, 1913, to July 31, 1914, the 10 months' period of Underwood tariff before the European war, customs receipts amounted to $229,461,967; of this amount $3,080,995 was collected from the Payne tariff during the first three days of October, 1913, and $14,741,197 from Payne tariff on wool, woolens, and sugar after October 3, 1913. Ordinary internal-revenue receipts amounted to $255,921,094; income-tax receipts amounted to $76,170,440; of this amount $8,207,864 was collected from the Payne corporation excise tax. Miscellaneous receipts amounted to $67,209,294; of this amount $3,800,000 was surplus of postal revenues for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913, and $12,535,276 was obtained from the sale of the two old battleships Idaho and Mississippi.

The above items make a total of $628,762,795 of ordinary receipts received by the United States Treasury during the 10 months of the Underwood tariff before the war, as compared with $608,590,553 of ordinary receipts during the corresponding 10 months of Payne-Aldrich tariff period of the previous year, or an increase of $20,172,242 in the total ordinary receipts, and credited by the Democrats as brought about by their tariff law.

As a matter of fact, by crediting the Payne receipts with the $3,080,995 that was collected by that law during the first three days of October, 1913, and also crediting the Payne period with the $3,800,000 of postal surplus receipts for the fiscal year 1913, and eliminating the $12,535,276 received from the sale of the two old battleships Idaho and Mississippi, but allowing the $8,207,864 collected from the Payne corporation excise tax and the $14,741,197 collected after October 3, 1913, from the Payne wool, woolens, and sugar rates to remain credited to the Underwood receipts, this would have been the result for the total ordinary receipts of the Government during the first 10 months of the Underwood tariff period before the European war began:

Tariffs.	Ordinary receipts.
Payne period (10 months)	$615,471,548
Underwood (10 months) before the war	609,346,524
Decrease by Underwood before the war	6,125,024

Even from another angle the Democratic tariff is not as good a revenue producer as the Republican tariff. The Democratic tariff policy was to cut the receipts at the customhouse and levy an income tax which fell directly upon the people of the United States. The combination is the substitute offered by the Democrats for a protective tariff upon which to raise revenue to support the Government. Even before the European war began this combination failed.

During the first 10 months of the Underwood tariff—from October 1, 1913, to July 31, 1914—the combined revenue collected from the Democratic customs and income tax amounted to $305,632,407, as against $295,124,356 collected under the Payne-Aldrich law during the corresponding 10 months of the previous year. Again, we find the Payne customs and corporation excise tax aiding the Underwood receipts during its first 10 months' period, and yet the Democrats are making a claim of an increase over the Payne revenues of $10,000,000 from customs and income tax during the first 10 months or the period before the European war. During this Underwood 10 months' period there was collected $3,080,995 from the Payne tariff for the first three days of October, 1913, and $14,741,197 from Payne tariff on wool, woolens, and sugar after October 3, 1913, and also $8,207,864 from the Payne corporation excise tax, making a total of $26,030,056 collected by Republican legislation during the first 10 months' period of the Underwood tariff. If it had not been for this aid from the Payne-Aldrich customs and corporation tax, there would not have been an increase in the receipts from customs and income tax during the first 10 months of the Underwood tariff or the period before the European war.

Ordinary receipts and disbursements of the United States, not including the Panama Canal, public debt, and the Postal Service, during the first 10 months of the Democratic tariff, October, 1913, to July, 1914, inclusive, or the period before the European war, compared with the corresponding period of the previous year under the Republican tariff, with footnotes showing the items that aided the Democratic increase of revenues which resulted in maintaining a Treasury surplus before the European war began.

[From monthly statements of the United States Treasury.]

Receipts and expenditures.	10 months ended July 31—		Increase by Underwood.[1]	Decrease by Underwood.
	1913, Payne-Aldrich tariff period.	1914, Underwood tariff before the war.
Ordinary receipts:
Customs	$260,132,037	[2]$229,461,967		$30,670,070
Internal revenue—
Ordinary	260,211,928	255,921,094		4,290,834
Income tax	34,992,319	[3] 76,170,440	$41,178,121
Total internal revenue	295,204,247	[3] 332,091,534	36,887,287
Total customs and internal revenue	555,336,284	[4] 561,553,501	6,217,217
Miscellaneous receipts	53,254,269	[5] 67,209,294	13,955,025
Total ordinary receipts	608,590,553	[6] 628,762,795	20,172,242
Ordinary disbursements (total)	571,572,473	581,596,669	10,024,196
Surplus in Treasury	37,018,080	47,166,126	10,148,046

[1] See the footnotes in the 1914 Underwood column for the cause of these increases.
[2] Includes $3,080,995 from Payne tariff (Oct. 1–3, 1913) and aid from Payne rates on sugar for 5 months (Oct. 4, 1913, to Mar. 1, 1914), on wool for 2 months (October and November, 1913), and on woolens for 3 months (October, November, and December, 1913).
[3] Includes $8,207,864 from Payne corporation tax.
[4] Includes $11,288,859 from Payne tariff and corporation tax ($3,080,995 from customs and $8,207,864 from corporation tax).
[5] Includes $3,800,000 surplus of postal revenues for fiscal year 1913 and $12,535,276 from sale of old battleships Idaho and Mississippi to Greece on July 10, 1914.
[6] Includes $27,624,135, made up as follows: $11,288,859 from Payne tariff and corporation excise tax, $12,535,276 from sale of old battleships Idaho and Mississippi to Greece on July 10, 1914, and $3,800,000 from surplus of postal revenues for the fiscal year 1913.

General note to above table.—By crediting the Payne period with the $3,800,000 postal surplus for the fiscal year 1913 and the $3,080,995 from Payne tariff the first three days of October, 1913; eliminate the $12,535,276 for old battleships from Underwood receipts, and allow the $8,207,864 from Payne corporation tax to remain credited to the Underwood receipts, and also the aid the Payne rates on wool, woolens, and sugar gave to the Underwood customs receipts after Oct. 4, 1913; the effect of the Underwood tariff before the war would have been as follows:

Receipts and expenditures.	Payne-Aldrich tariff period (10 months).	Underwood tariff before the war (10 months).	Increase by Underwood.	Decrease by Underwood.
Total ordinary receipts	$615,471,548	$609,346,524		$6,125,024
Total ordinary disbursements	571,572,473	581,596,669	$10,024,196
Surplus in Treasury	43,899,075	27,749,855		16,149,220

IMPORTS AND REVENUES—FIRST TWO YEARS OF UNDERWOOD.

During the first 12 months of the Underwood tariff—October 4, 1913, to September 30, 1914—two months of which were under European war conditions (August and September, 1914), there were imported and consumed in the United States foreign goods amounting to $1,892,954,868, as compared with $1,759,500,954 during the corresponding 12 months of the previous year under the Payne-Aldrich tariff. This is an increase of $133,453,914 in imports during the first year of the Underwood tariff.

Duties collected from these imports during the first 12 months by the Underwood tariff amounted to $253,775,881—$14,741,197 of which was collected after October 3, 1913, from Payne rates on wool, woolens, and sugar—as compared with $315,672,673 of duties collected by the Payne-Aldrich tariff during the corresponding 12 months of the previous year. This is a decrease of $61,896,792 in revenue from customs by the Underwood tariff during its first year. The average rate of duty on total imports during the first 12 months of the Underwood tariff was 13.41 per cent, as compared with 17.94 per cent by the Payne-Aldrich tariff for the corresponding period of the previous year.

During the second year of the Underwood tariff, from October 1, 1914, to September 30, 1915, the entire period being under European war conditions, the total value of foreign goods imported and consumed in the United States amounted to $1,664,914,444, from which a revenue of $193,616,855 was collected.

For the first two years of the Underwood tariff, from October 4, 1913, to September 30, 1915, of which 10 months were under peace conditions and 14 months under European war conditions, there were imported and consumed in the United States foreign goods amounting to $3,557,869,312, as compared with $3,473,993,937 during the corresponding last two years under the Payne-Aldrich tariff. Notwithstanding this 14 months' restriction of imports by reason of European war conditions, there was an increase of $83,875,375 of imported merchandise by the Underwood tariff.

For the first two years of the Underwood tariff, October 4, 1913, to September 30, 1915, the revenue collected from imports amounted to $447,392,736, as compared with $631,228,542 of revenue collected by the Payne-Aldrich tariff during the corresponding last two years; or a decrease of $183,835,806 in the revenues from imports by the Underwood tariff during the first two years of its operation.

For the first two years of the Underwood tariff the average ad valorem rate of duty upon all imports was 12.57 per cent, as compared with 18.17 per cent during the last two years of the Payne-Aldrich tariff, or a reduction of 30.82 per cent in the average ad valorem rate of duty by the Underwood tariff on total imports.

IMPORTS FOR CONSUMPTION AND REVENUE COLLECTED.

Imports for consumption in the United States and duties collected thereon, with average ad valorem rates of duty, during the last two years of the Payne-Aldrich tariff (Oct. 1, 1911, to Oct. 3, 1913) and the first two years of the Underwood-Simmons tariff (Oct. 4, 1913, to Sept. 30, 1915).

Years ended Sept. 30, 1912, to 1915.

Imports and duties.	Payne-Aldrich tariff.		Underwood-Simmons tariff.
	Oct. 1, 1911, to Sept. 30, 1912 (peace period).	Oct. 1, 1912, to Oct. 3, 1913 (peace period).	Oct. 4, 1913, to Sept. 30, 1914 (peace period).[1]	Oct. 1, 1914, to Sept. 30, 1915 (war period).
Imports for consumption:
Free of duty	$925,994,433	$993,453,637	$1,178,247,719	$1,070,618,531
Dutiable	788,498,550	776,047,317	714,707,149	594,296,913
Total imports	1,714,492,983	1,769,500,954	1,892,954,868	1,664,914,444
Duties collected on:
Free imports	146,056	113,059	92,480	50,463
Dutiable imports	315,263,690	315,422,667	253,571,852	193,419,001
Articles undervalued	146,123	136,947	111,549	147,391
Total duties collected	315,555,869	315,672,673	253,775,881	193,616,855
Average rate of duty on:
Dutiable imports (per cent)	39.98	40.64	35.48	32.55
Total imports (per cent)	18.40	17.94	13.41	11.63

[1] Includes 2 months of European war period (August and September, 1914).

Comparative effect of the first two years of Underwood tariff.

Imports and duties.	Last 2 years of Payne-Aldrich tariff, Oct. 1, 1911, to Oct. 3, 1913.	First 2 years of Underwood-Simmons tariff,[1] Oct. 4, 1913, to Sept. 30, 1915.	2-year effect of Underwood tariff.
			Increase.	Decrease.
Imports for consumption:
Free of duty	$1,909,448,070	$2,248,866,250	$339,418,180
Dutiable	1,564,545,867	1,309,003,062		$255,542,805
Total imports	3,473,993,937	3,557,869,312	83,875,375
Duties collected on:
Dutiable imports	630,686,357	446,990,853		183,695,504
Total imports [2]	631,228,542	447,392,736		183,835,806
Average rate of duty on:
Dutiable imports (per cent)	40.33	34.15		[3] 15.32
Total imports (per cent)	18.17	12.57		[3] 30.82

[1] Includes 10 months of peace period (October, 1913, to July, 1914, inclusive) and 14 months of the European war period (August, 1914, to September, 1915, inclusive).
[2] Includes duties collected on free imports returned and on articles undervalued.
[3] Per cent of reduction in average rate of duty by Underwood tariff.

IMPORTS AND REVENUES—FIRST 30 MONTHS OF UNDERWOOD.

It has been asserted by the Democratic administration that falling revenues were due to the decrease in imports brought about by the European war. The official figures furnished by the Democratic administration do not confirm this contention. The real test of this issue is shown from the actual record of foreign merchandise imported and consumed in the United States. The periods considered are by quarters, or a three-month period of the year. Here are the official figures:

During the first quarter, October to December, 1913, of the Underwood tariff, under peace conditions, imports for consumption amounted to $498,000,000; during the second quarter, January to March, 1914, imports amounted to $485,000,000; during the third quarter, April to June, 1914, imports amounted to $483,000,000; making a total of $1,466,000,000 of foreign goods imported and consumed in the United States during the first nine months of the Underwood tariff, under peace conditions or the period before the European war, as compared with $1,277,000,000 of imports during the last nine months of the Payne-Aldrich tariff.

During the first quarter (July to September, 1914) of the European war period, the first month (July) being under peace conditions, imports for consumption amounted to $428,000,000. During the second war quarter (October to December, 1914) imports amounted to $376,000,000. During the third war quarter (January to March, 1915) imports amounted to $401,000,000, making a total of $1,205,000,000 of imports for consumption during the first nine months of the Underwood tariff under European war conditions.

For the second nine-month period under European war conditions imports for consumption were as follows:

During the fourth war quarter (April to June, 1915) imports amounted to $442,000,000; during the fifth war quarter (July to September, 1915) imports amounted to $445,000,000; during the sixth war quarter (October to December, 1915) imports amounted to $490,000,000; making a total of $1,377,000,000 in imports during the second nine-month period of European war conditions.

For the third nine-month period of European war conditions the official figures are available only for the seventh war quarter (from January to March, 1916), when imports for consumption amounted to $586,000,000. This quarter (January to March, 1916) establishes a record for the highest volume of imports coming into the United States, as compared with any previous quarter, in the history of the United States—and under European war conditions at that.

For the first 30 months of the Underwood tariff (from October 4, 1913, to March, 1916) imports for consumption amounted to $4,633,543,428, as compared with $4,209,711,297 of imports for the last 30 months of the Payne-Aldrich tariff (from April 1, 1911, to October 3, 1914). This is an increase of $423,832,131 in imports of foreign merchandise entered and consumed in the United States during the first 30 months of the Underwood tariff, 10 months of which were under peace conditions and 20 months under European war conditions.

The monthly average of imports during the first 30 months of the Underwood tariff was $154,450,000, as compared with a monthly average of $140,324,000 of imports during the last 30 months of the Payne-Aldrich tariff. In other words, there has been an average monthly increase of $14,126,000 of imports since the passage of the Underwood tariff 30 months ago.

DUTIES.

Revenue collected from imports during the first 30 months of the Underwood tariff amounted to $553,244,785, or a monthly average of $18,430,000, as compared with $777,981,365 of revenue collected during the last 30 months of the Payne-Aldrich tariff, or a monthly average of $25,932,712. This makes a decrease of $224,736,580 in the revenues from imports during the first 30 months of the Underwood tariff, or a monthly decrease of $7,500,000.

The average ad valorem rate of duty on total imports during the first 30 months of the Underwood tariff was 11.92 per cent, as compared with 18.46 per cent during the last 30 months of the Payne-Aldrich tariff. This is a reduction of 35.43 per cent in the average ad valorem rate of duty by the Underwood tariff.

REVENUE POWER OF UNDERWOOD TARIFF.

The nonrevenue-producing power of the Underwood tariff is better shown in the following comparisons:

During the first quarter—October to December, 1913—of the Underwood tariff imports amounted to $497,871,162; duties collected, $65,274,599, at an average rate of 13.11 per cent. For the quarter April to June, 1911, which was the low record of imports under the Payne-Aldrich tariff, imports amounted to $360,791,662; duties collected, $72,191,596, at an average rate of 20.01 per cent.

The low record of imports during the European war period was for the quarter October to December, 1914, when imports amounted to $376,407,330; duties collected, $47,535,858, at an average rate of 12.63 per cent. The high record of imports under the Underwood tariff was during the war period January to March, 1916, when imports amounted to $585,562,106; duties collected, $56,102,006, at an average rate of 9.58 per cent.

Thus it will be seen that the trouble with the Democratic tariff from a revenue standpoint is on account of the low rates of duty, as at no time during the high record of imports under that tariff has the revenue collected been anywhere near equal to the revenue collected by the protective rates of the Payne-Aldrich tariff during the low record of imports under that tariff.

Imports into the United States for consumption and duties collected thereon during the first 30 months of the Underwood tariff and the last 30 months of the Payne-Aldrich tariff.

BY QUARTERS.

Tariffs and periods.	Total imports for consumption.	Total duties collected.	Average rate of duty.
			Per cent.
Payne-Aldrich tariff:
April to June, 1911	$360,791,662	$72,191,596	20.01
July to September, 1911	374,925,699	74,561,227	19.89
October to December, 1911	398,115,546	72,834,125	18.30
January to March, 1912	429,744,036	80,820,390	18.81
April to June, 1912	437,937,621	76,683,625	17.51
July to September, 1912	448,695,780	85,217,730	19.00
October to December, 1912	482,259,236	78,286,607	16.23
January to March, 1913	455,803,411	84,150,435	18.46
April to June, 1913	379,930,983	64,855,173	17.07
July to September, 1913	441,507,323	88,380,457	20.00
Underwood-Simmons tariff:
Peace period—
October to December, 1913 [1]	497,871,162	65,274,599	13.11
January to March, 1914 [2]	484,505,591	66,457,102	13.72
April to June, 1914 [3]	482,516,317	63,606,916	13.18
European war period—
July to September, 1914 [4]	428,061,797	58,437,264	13.65
October to December, 1914	376,407,330	47,335,858	12.63
January to March, 1915	401,475,701	51,017,977	12.71
April to June, 1915	442,441,452	48,955,743	11.07
July to September, 1915	444,589,961	46,107,276	10.37
October to December, 1915	490,111,911	49,750,044	10.15
January to March, 1916	585,562,106	56,102,006	9.58

[1] During this period the Payne-Aldrich rates were in effect as follows: On wool for 2 months (October and November), and on manufactures of wool, sugar, and molasses for the full 3 months (October to December).
[2] During this period the Payne-Aldrich rates were in effect on sugar and molasses for 2 months (January and February).
[3] During this period the Underwood Democratic rates were in full effect on all merchandise.
[4] July, 1914, was under peace conditions, as the European war began Aug. 1, 1914.

THIRTY MONTHS' SUMMARY.

Imports and duties.	Last 30 months of Payne tariff.	First 30 months Underwood tariff.	Effect of Underwood tariff.
			Increase.	Decrease.
Imports for consumption:
Total for period	$4,209,711,297	$4,633,543,428	$423,832,131
Monthly average	140,324,000	154,450,000	14,126,000
Duties collected:
Total for period	777,981,365	553,244,785		$225,070,827
Monthly average	25,932,712	18,430,000		7,502,712
Average rate of duty, per cent	18.46	11.92		35.43

EMERGENCY OR "WAR TAXES."

The Democrats were getting alarmed at the condition of the Federal Treasury as a result of their tariff—that is, the failure of the customs and income-tax provisions of their law of October 3, 1913, to produce revenue. As a pretext for the falling off of revenue due to decreased importations on account of the European war, they decided upon the so-called "war-tax" measure of October 22, 1914, to make up the deficiency in the revenues that was caused by the low rates of the Underwood tariff.

During the 20 months from October 22, 1914, to June 30, 1916, that the so-called "war-tax" law has been in operation the people of the United States have paid into the Federal Treasury $136,347,428, or a monthly average of $7,000,000, in order to compensate the leak at the customhouse. Here is where the taxes fell:

Emergency revenue, or "war taxes," under Democratic law of Oct. 22, 1914, collected during the fiscal years ended June 30, 1915 and 1916.

Items.	Tax collected.
	Fiscal year 1915.[1]	Fiscal year 1916.[2]
Fermented liquors (additional 50 cents tax)	$18,713,679.88	$29,311,164.50
Wines, champagnes, liqueurs, cordials, etc	2,307,301.97	2,631,529.98
Grape brandy used in fortification of sweet wines	138,383.56	491,202.91
SPECIAL TAXES.
Tobacco:
Manufacturers of cigars	299,028.75	300,403.80
Manufacturers of cigarettes	38,011.00	42,071.25
Manufacturers of tobacco	34,621.50	39,633.50
Dealers in leaf tobacco	56,335.71	60,019.49
Dealers in tobacco, not provided for	2,058,619.40	2,297,705.01
Total special taxes (tobacco)	2,486,616.36	2,739,853.05
Bankers, brokers, etc.:
Bankers	2,828,747.02	4,226,342.37
Brokers—
Stock brokers	161,485.03	224,074.62
Pawnbrokers	112,686.83	121,781.69
Commercial brokers	133,470.89	166,479.61
Customhouse brokers	7,781.98	8,458.85
Commission merchants	123,626.12	153,770.02
Theaters, museums, and concert halls	789,997.07	1,014,911.28
Circuses	2,555.14	7,896.16
Exhibitions not otherwise specified	15,414.36	32,380.55
Bowling alleys and billiard rooms	791,414.74	952,013.06
Total special taxes (bankers, etc.)	4,967,179.18	6,908,108.21
Total of all special taxes	7,453,795.54	9,647,961.26
STAMP TAXES.
Schedule A. Documentary, etc	20,494,474.75	38,110,282.49
Schedule B. Perfumery, cosmetics, etc	2,961,490.59	4,086,160.99
Total stamp taxes	23,455,965.34	42,196,443.48
Total war taxes (act of Oct. 22, 1914)	52,009,126.29	84,278,302.13

[1] From Oct. 22, 1914, to June 30, 1915 (8 months 9 days).
[2] Report of Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Aug. 1, 1916.

INCOME TAXES.

It is interesting to know how the income-tax law is working. The following table shows the number of individuals and the amount of tax they have paid under the Democratic law of October 3, 1913:

PERSONAL INCOME TAX.

Individual income-tax receipts, number of taxpayers, and rate of tax under provisions of the Democratic law of Oct. 3, 1913, during the fiscal years ended June 30, 1914, 1915, and 1916.

[Receipts for the fiscal years are based on the returns made during the calendar years 1913, 1914, and 1915.]

Classification.	Rate of tax.	Fiscal year 1914.[1]		Fiscal year 1915.		Fiscal year 1916.[2]
		Number who paid tax.	Tax collected.	Number who paid tax.	Tax collected.	Tax collected.
	Per cent.
Normal tax	1	357,598	$12,728,038.02	357,515	$16,559,492.93	$23,995,777.28
Additional tax (or surtax) on net incomes of—
$20,001 to $50,000	1	17,961	2,934,754.40	23,348	4,106,673.36	6,091,775.71
$50,001 to $75,000	2	2,618	1,645,639.30	3,660	2,500,899.33	4,071,361.94
$75,001 to $100,000	3	998	1,323,022.61	1,501	2,102,927.01	3,623,472.62
$100,001 to $250,000	4	1,241	3,835,948.45	1,828	5,945,104.55	10,936,326.15
$250,001 to $500,000	5	222	2,334,582.95	346	3,328,423.78	6,393,858.64
$500,001 and over	6	135	3,437,850.23	174	6,439,004.54	12,647,862.91
Total additional or surtax		23,175	15,511,797.94	30,857	24,423,023.57	43,764,657.97
Accepted offers in compromise, etc			13,698.89		63,645.59	183,159.38
Total individual income tax		357,598	28,253,534.85	357,515	41,046,162.09	67,943,594.63

[1] This column is for 10 months only.
[2] Report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Aug. 1, 1916.

INCOME TAX.

Income tax receipts collected during the last three fiscal years of Republican administration and the first three fiscal years of the present Democratic administration.

[Source: Reports of U. S. Commissioner of Internal Revenue.]

Income tax.	Republican administration.		Democratic administration.
	Fiscal year.	Tax collected.	Fiscal year.	Tax collected.
Corporations[1]	1911	$33,511,525.00	1914	[2] $43,127,739.89
	1912	28,583,259.81	1915	39,144,531.71
	1913	35,006,299.84	[3] 1916	56,972,720.88
Individuals	1911	.....	1914	28,253,534.85
	1912	.....	1915	41,046,162.09
	1913	.....	[3] 1916	67,943,594.63
Total income tax	1911	33,511,525.00	1914	[2] 71,381,274.74
	1912	28,583,259.81	1915	80,190,693.80
	1913	35,006,299.84	[3] 1916	124,916,315.51

[1] Does not include income tax collected from railroads in Alaska (under law of July 18, 1914) during the fiscal years 1915 and 1916. The amounts collected during those years were as follows: $11,065.06 for 1915, and $20,937.10 for 1916. The receipts from this source are treated as a special fund and are paid over to the treasurer of the Territory of Alaska.

[2] Includes $10,671,077.22 collected from the Republican corporation excise tax.

[3] Report of Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Aug. 1, 1916.

WATCHES.

The imports of watches into the United States under the Republican and Democratic tariffs were as follows:

Imports of watch movements, cases and parts of watches (less dials) under Payne law, watches complete, movements, cases and parts of watches (less dials) under Underwood law, during quarters ending as follows:

	Payne-Aldrich law, 1912.		Payne-Aldrich law, 1913.		Underwood law, 1914		Underwood law, 1915.		Underwood law, 1916.
	Imports.	Revenue.	Imports.	Revenue.	Imports.	Revenue.	Imports.	Revenue.	Imports.	Revenue.
March	$303,638.00	$134,203.65	$423,594.45	$183,637.58	$588,028.68	$176,408.60	$575,555.00	$172,666.50	$712,665.00	$213,799.50
June	394,235.00	168,658.50	444,373.39	184,627.33	653,655.00	196,096.50	530,969.00	159,290.70	.....	.....
September	466,264.50	198,107.65	488,842.50	194,647.57	416,308.00	124,892.40	618,717.00	185,615.10	.....	.....
December	617,324.00	263,039.50	[1] 910,459.98	273,137.99	751,380.00	225,414.00	797,288.00	239,186.40	.....	.....
Total	1,781,461.50	764,009.30	2,267,270.32	836,050.47	2,409,371.68	722,811.50	2,522,529.00	756,758.70	712,665.00	213,799.50

[1] First quarter in 1913 under Underwood law.

IMPORTS OF WATCHES AND PARTS, CASES AND PARTS (LESS DIALS), BY MONTHS.

	Payne-Aldrich law, 1912.	Payne-Aldrich law, 1913.	Underwood law, 1914.	Underwood law, 1915.	Underwood law, 1916.
January	$162,936.00	$192,853.00	$227,223.00	$266,675.00	$278,262.00
February	164,358.00	182,237.00	250,018.00	263,065.00	248,162.00
March	154,824.00	205,280.00	317,329.00	261,080.00	304,669.00
April	177,396.00	225,165.00	289,185.00	224,202.00	302,587.00
May	179,561.00	204,705.00	272,193.00	266,244.00	286,650.00
June	177,022.00	215,343.00	286,487.00	243,561.00	328,374.00
July	191,877.00	217,757.00	278,921.00	.....	.....
August	226,239.00	210,846.00	160,694.00	.....	.....
September	238,746.00	300,685.00	129,281.00	.....	.....
October	253,691.00	346,342.00	246,339..0	.....	.....
November	242,546.00	314,258.00	252,238.00	.....	.....
December	237,062.00	354,415.00	447,351,00	.....	.....
Total	2,406,258.00	2,969,886.00	3,157,259.00	1,524,827.00	1,748,701.00

DUMPING.

We must not underrate the dangers to which we are likely to be exposed at most any time. I quote a Stockholm correspondent's letter printed in the London Times:

From reliable persons recently back from Germany I have received further facts as to the great dumping plan under which Germany, by exporting vast quantities of cheap goods now ready, is to pay for raw materials and to regain at a bound her lost markets.

The dumping organizations are not complete, and the question is being considered of quickly buying up tonnage when peace comes. In Westphalia, Saxony, and Bavaria are being formed manufacturers' associations of a new kind, which will aim at common action and prevent excessive production of some products or insufficient production of others. They will also rule certain technical questions and questions of salability arising out of the changing public taste.

The south German toy manufacturers expect an enormous demand for toys after the war. The Nuremburg wood-pulp toy makers are making "British soldiers," and they are also preparing to invade the Russian market with Russian pulp soldiers, flags, sentry boxes, and even "Ilya Mourometz" aeroplanes. The manufacturers declare that Russia, in order to restore her credit, must resume selling wheat to Germany, and that she must take in return whatever goods Germany chooses to sell her.

Some banks (really acting for the State) question the salability of certain goods specially produced for dumping. The manufacturers replied that the price, not the public taste, dictates the fashion, and that if things are available at specially low dump prices they will automatically become popular.

Makers of optical, surgical instruments, electrical machinery, and machine tools are all working together. The amount of dump goods which is considered necessary is distributed for production among different factories on lines which insure economy and division of labor. The production price has been cut so low that the 90 per cent of sale value, advanced by the State to enable production to be carried on, has been reduced. In the campaign for economy factories and workshops are being standardized and specialized. Where two shops in a given area formerly produced indiscriminately two classes of goods, one factory has now taken over altogether one class and the other factory the other class. Sometimes machinery has been exchanged. The Berlin ready-made clothing and underclothing manufacturers are also preparing. West Russia is the proposed dumping ground for men's ready-made clothes.

In general, the dump preparations work efficiently, and there is no doubt that neutral States and, if they allow it, enemy States will be badly hit by German competition, especially if, as Germans themselves predict, a period of industrial depression follows the war.

I quote from the Economist:

It will be seen that price cutting and underselling other countries in their own markets, and in world markets as well, is the chief foundation of the German plan. This means that prices will be cut to the bone in the domestic market and alike for export purposes. It means that no American antidumping law will meet the case. No antidumping law can prevent the invoicing of exports at the same values that prevail in the country of production. When a foreign country sells for export at prices no lower than those which prevail in the wholesale market at home, that is not "dumping," and no law that the United States Congress can pass will make it "dumping." To reduce prices in the domestic market and sell to outsiders at the same prices is a perfectly legitimate transaction. Beyond question cut prices will be the policy, not alone in Germany, but of all the industrial nations after the war is ended. Every one of them can and will mark down their domestic prices to a point where the Underwood free-trade tariff will be powerless to prevent the flooding of this country with goods so low in price as to take the American markets away from American labor and industry. In the face of such a prospect the antidumping legislation contemplated by the free-trade administration and Congress would be rendered futile and worthless.

The London Times comments upon the report from Stockholm as follows:

"Though there is nothing new in this, for intelligent people everywhere ought to have known how Germany is preparing to flood all markets with manufactured goods at less than cost in order to get quick cash and to break down new industries in the United States and elsewhere, it is worth repeating in order that this warning may arouse our country to the need of immediate tariff action to prevent our industries from being swamped in this way."

Higher tariffs in the enemy countries of Europe, protective tariffs that will operate as a shield against a wholesale cutting down of prices that will undersell their own producers, will certainly come at the close of the war. Already the allied powers are considering this question and preparing for protective tariffs. Free-trade Great Britain is morally certain to adopt the protective policy. But of all the countries in the world none is so vitally in need of a protective shield as the United States. Our labor is higher priced and our production cost far greater than those of any of the European countries which are turning toward protective duties to save their own markets. Of all others our Nation stands most in need of an adequate protective tariff to take the place of the existing low tariff and no tariff.

Another illustration of the way in which American trade is likely to be hemmed in on every side, and how our manufacturers are apt to suffer severely from the action of foreign Governments, is found in a list of articles the importation of which into Great Britain, except under special license, has been entirely prohibited. I have already referred to the Lufkin Rule Co., but American manufacturers are continually encountering a similar condition of exclusion whenever they attempt to export certain articles.

The following rather comprehensive list of articles the importation of which into Great Britain, except under the restrictions cited, has been prohibited is most illuminating:

ARTICLES THE IMPORTATION OF WHICH INTO GREAT BRITAIN, EXCEPT UNDER SPECIAL LICENSE, HAS BEEN PROHIBITED.

Acids: Fatty (unless en route for the United Kingdom or actually purchased on or before Mar. 24, 1916).

Bladders, casings, and sausage skins.

Brooms and brushes.

Cement (unless en route for the United Kingdom or actually purchased on or before Mar. 24, 1916).

China, earthenware, and pottery, excluding cloisonne ware (unless en route for the United Kingdom or actually purchased on or before Mar. 24, 1916).

Cotton: Yarn, piece goods, all cotton manufactures, excepting hosiery and lace (unless en route for the United Kingdom or actually purchased on or before Mar. 24, 1916).

Note (a). Knitted cotton underwear not prohibited importation into the United Kingdom.

Note (b). Binding cloth, if it is in the form of cotton piece goods, is prohibited.

Flowers: Bulbs, flower roots, plants, trees, and shrubs.

Fruits: Bottled, canned, dried, and preserved (except currants).

Note (a). Prohibition not applicable to fruits the product of any British dominion, colony, possession, or protectorate.

Note (b). Fresh fruit not included in prohibition.

Note (c). One-half quantities received in 1915 may be exported, and there will be no objection to the landing of fruit en route or paid for on March 4.

Note (d). Beginning October 31 licenses will be granted for importation 50 per cent canned, bottled, dried, and preserved fruit imported in 1915.

Hardware: Hollow ware, cutlery (unless en route for the United Kingdom or actually purchased on or before Mar. 24, 1916).

Note (a). Board of trade announces that prohibition to import hardware does not apply to awl blades, bayonets, bullet molds, caps or cartridge making, cartridges, cases, hammers, horse clippers, jacks, small and screw percussion-cap shells, pliers, pulleys and blocks, scythes and sickles, shears, spanners, tools for carpenters, coopers, masons, and shipwrights, trenching struts, brass or copper tubes.

Horns and hoofs.

Ice.

Ivory.

Motor cars: Automobiles and automobile chassis, motorcycles, and parts and accessories of automobiles and motorcycles other than tires (with the exception of automoolles, chassis, and parts and accessories of automobiles which are at present exempt from import duty).

Note (a). The following motor vehicles are exempt from duty under the law of December 23, 1915: Motor cars which are proved to the satisfaction of the commissioners of customs and excise to be constructed and adapted for use and intended to be used solely as motor omnibuses or motor ambulances or in connection with the conveyance of goods or burden in the course of trade or husbandry or by local authority, as fire engines or otherwise, for the purpose of their fire-brigade service, and chassis, component parts and accessories which are so proved to be intended to be used solely for any such motor cars.

Note (a–1). Motor cars, chassis, parts and accessories, except tires, such as were exempted from previous prohibition.

Licenses to import will be granted where goods were en route or paid for on date of proclamation, June 27.

Licenses for importation of automobiles will be issued where national interest apparent or where commercial motor cars are required for fire departments, conveyance of wounded or sick, or police or local government authorities, agricultural purposes, or conveyance of essential goods. Spare automobile parts may be imported under licenses for imported commercial vehicles already in United Kingdom.

Musical instruments: Musical instruments, including gramophones, pianolas, and other similar instruments, and accessories, component parts, and records therefor.

Oil cloth (unless en route for the United Kingdom or actually purchased on or before Mar. 24, 1916).

Paper: All materials for the manufacture of paper and to paper for printing or writing, on reels or not on reels, printed paper hangings, printed or coated paper, paper for packing and wrapping, strawboard, millboard, and wood-pulp board, "unenumerated and articles of paper, including boxes and cartons of paper or cardboard."

Note (a). Special committee appointed to license proposed importations of paper and paper-making materials—secretary, John Singleton Clemons, Central House, Kingsway, London. Committee will give or withhold licenses in such manner as to reduce imports by one-third, attaching to licenses such conditions "as they may think desirable with object of securing two-thirds of supplies and that the price charged to consumers shall be a fair one."

Note (b). Consignments of paper actually shipped before March 1, 1916, will be admitted without formality but not consignments then en route to seaboard or waiting at port of shipment.

Note (c). Royal commission on paper has given positive assurances to shipping companies in London that no delay whatever will arise in discharging any such material that arrives in boats from the United States, even where no license has been granted by the commission. This ruling indicates the intention not to apply restriction order for the present to American consignments.

Note (d). Limited quantities of paper may be imported under special license after October 31, 1916.

Note (e). Any paper arriving in the United Kingdom on or after March 1, 1916, requires a license before it can be cleared by the customs and delivered to the consignees. Licenses will, as a rule, be granted on the basis of two-thirds of last year's importation, but no definite guarantee can be given.

Periodicals: All periodical publications exceeding 16 pages in length imported otherwise than in single copies through the post.

Note (a). Paper commission for restricting importations has issued rules providing that from March 1, 1916, licenses may be granted to paper makers to import two-thirds of weight of imported materials that they consumed in standard year 1914; to importers of paper to import two-thirds of weight of paper which they imported in 1914. Where any paper maker has on March 1, 1916, large stock of materials, commission may treat such stock as part of the two-thirds supply.

Note (b). Books bound and unbound, including printed sheets intended to be bound, are exempt from prohibition.

Salt.

Soap (unless en route for the United Kingdom or actually purchased on or before Mar. 24, 1916).

Spirits: Spirits and strong water of all kinds except brandy and rum.

(Starch, dextrine, farina, and potato flour.)

Note (a). Starch, dextrine, farina, and potato flour may be imported by the issuance of general license permitting their importation.

Stones and slates.

Tobacco: Manufactured and unmanufactured (including cigars and cigarettes).

Note (a). Tobacco licensing committee gives notice that consignments manufactured or unmanufactured dispatched from place of origin on or before February 15, 1916, may be imported on production of bills of lading or railroad receipts showing date of dispatch. Habana cigars shipped on or before March 18, 1916, from Cuba may be imported.

Note (b). Board of trade withdraws proposal to grant licenses for importation tobacco purchased before February 15, but prepared to grant licenses for importation between June 1, 1916, and May 31, 1917, of tobacco for home consumption not exceeding one-third of quantity imported for home consumption in calendar year 1915. Quantity imported for home consumption in 1915 was 124,458,173 pounds. Stock in bond here on April 13 was 251,829,000 pounds.

Toys, games, playing cards (unless en route for the United Kingdom or actually purchased on or before March 24, 1916).

Vegetables and pickles: Canned, bottled, dried, and preserved vegetables and pickles.

Vegetable moss litter.

Wood: Furniture, furniture wood, beech, birch, elm, and oak woods, hardwood and veneers (except pine, fir, spruce, teak, ash, or wainscot, pit props or pitwood, sleepers or staves), manufactured joinery and other wood manufactures except lacquered wares; baskets and basket ware, excluding bamboo.

The following are permitted importation: Beefwood, boxwood, dogwood, greenheart, hickory, lancewood, lignum vitæ, padouk, sabicu, and sandalwood.

The following are regarded as prohibited: Acacia or locust tree, alerce, amboyna, base, blackwood, blackbutt, cedar, cocobole, cocus, cochinella, ebony (not being green ebony, gaulcum gum, ironwood or iron bark, jarrah, juniper, karri, kingwood, letterwood, mahogany, maple, maracauba, New Zealand, olive, partridge, plane, purple, rose, Santa Maria, satinwood, snake, speckled, sweet, tulip, walnut, white (American), zebra, and sanders (white or yellow).

NOTE A.—Consignments of furniture wood, hardwoods, and veneers dispatched on or before February 15, 1916, may be imported on production of bills of lading or railroad receipts showing date of dispatch.

NOTE B.—Licenses will be granted for the importation of furniture, manufactured joinery and other wood manufactures, baskets and basket ware, beech, birch, elm, and oak woods which were en route to the United Kingdom or actually purchased on or before March 24, 1916.

Woolen and worsted manufactures of all kinds, except yarns. (Unless en route for the United Kingdom or actually purchased on or before March 24, 1916.)

Machine tools: All machine tools and parts thereof, including small tools.

Beer.

Hops.

Leather manufactured goods (other than belting, boots, and shoes and gloves).

Matches.

Manufactures of aluminum.

Baths of metal.

Carpet sweepers.

Cash registers.

Lawn mowers.

Sewing machines.

Stoves and ranges.

Toilet articles containing glycerin.

Wringers and mangles.

Yeast: Licenses to import will be granted where goods were en route or paid for on date of proclamation—June 27. Licenses to import yeast up to half amount imported 1915 will be granted.

Vacuum cleaners: Licenses to import will be granted where goods were en route or paid for on date of proclamation—June 27.

Cocaine: All preparations, salts, derivatives, or admixtures prepared therefrom containing one-tenth per cent cocaine.

Opium: Raw or granulated or prepared for smoking, including any solid or semisolid mixture containing opium.

Airguns and rifles, sporting guns, carbines, and rifles.

Oranges not produce of British Empire, except under license.

NECESSITY FOR AN AMERICAN WOOL SUPPLY.

Free wool has been a time-honored Democratic doctrine. During the campaign the Democratic orators talked themselves hoarse for free wool; but when the party happens to get into power and the responsibility of legislation is placed upon them, they realize the fallacy of the doctrine, but are driven to put wool upon the free list because they have gone so far afield in clamoring for free wool. And yet now more than ever it begins to look as if we would have to rely upon ourselves for our supply of wool.

The Philadelphia Wool and Textile Association, in view of the danger of a shortage in the wool supply, has actively urged the raising of sheep in the Eastern States. Literature has been sent out to the wool manufacturers demonstrating the needs of the situation and calling upon them for cooperation in promoting the movement, which promises to assume a national aspect, as interest in the subject has been awakened on all sides. The material being distributed to manufacturers and trade organizations includes the following table showing the decline of the production of wool in the United States:

Production of wool in the United States.	Pounds.
1909	328,000,000
1910	321,000,000
1911	318,000,000
1912	304,000,000
1913	296,000,000
1914	290,000,000
1915	288,000,000

Men prominent in the wool-manufacturing business have approved the suggestion of the Philadelphia Wool and Textile Association. An American wool supply is recognized as an essential to national security.

William M. Wood, president of the American Woolen Co., points out in a letter to the Philadelphia Wool and Textile Association that the supply of wool has fallen over 12 per cent in the seven years since 1909 and that the wool production of the world is decreasing.

National prudence—

He says—

demands an immediate increase in the flock of the United States. The American people need more sheep for food and clothing. In spite of the rapidity with which the cheap lands of the West have been taken up, there are still great areas in this country where sheep can be grown with a profit by the exercise of intelligence and perseverance. Sheep can be grown again in large numbers on the abandoned pastures of the New England and other Eastern States. All this is an essential part of any patriotic national movement for preparedness.

The letter from Mr. Wood to the Philadelphia Wool and Textile Association has been sent also to Members of Congress, of State legislatures, and the Department of Agriculture. The letter in full is as follows:

DEAR SIR: I would most earnestly commend to your attention the campaign of the Philadelphia Wool and Textile Association for "more sheep and more wool." Though the population of the United States is rapidly increasing, the number of sheep and the amount of wool produced here are falling off. In 1909, 328,000,000 pounds of wool were grown in this country; in 1915 only 288,000,000 pounds, a loss of 12 per cent in seven years. In the last fiscal year, out of a total of 591,015,495 pounds of wool available for consumption in the United States, foreign wools represented 300,000,000 pounds or more than one-half.

Nor can we depend upon wool supplied from abroad, for the wool production of the whole world is decreasing. This world supply in 1915 was estimated at 2,836,000,000 pounds. In 1914 the estimate was 2,872,000,000 pounds; in 1913, 2,880,000,000; in 1912, 2,971,000,000. The great war has wholly cut off certain sources of supply, and made reliance on others most uncertain. Large numbers of sheep have undoubtedly been destroyed in the course of warfare.

So critical is the situation that Great Britain, which controls nearly two-thirds of the world's wool, is contemplating the imposition of an export duty on this indispensable raw material when bought by any but British purchasers.

National produce demands an immediate increase in the flock of the United States. The American people need more sheep for food and clothing In spite of the rapidity with which the cheap lands of the West have been taken up there are still great areas in this country where sheep can be grown with a profit, by the exercise of intelligence and perseverence. Sheep can be grown again in large numbers on the abandoned pastures of the New England and other Eastern States.

Australasia produces nearly three times as much wool as our own country, chiefly because in Australasia woolgrowing is a modern, systematized business and because all laws are made to favor it and worthless dogs are not allowed to harry and murder valuable flocks. National and State governments with us have done much to encourage their proper due. There is urgent need of a searching investigation of the whole question by National and State authorities. May I not ask you to take up the subject and do your share, to the end that there may be more food and more wool for the American people?

All this is an essential part of any patriotic national movement for preparedness, for the position in which this country would find itself in war—dependent on foreign sources for more than half its wool—is appalling to contemplate.

Very truly yours, WM. M. WOOD, President.

We learned from London on August 4 that the wool committee of the British War Department had decided to allow no exports of wool to the United States, neither merino, crossbred, nor English fleeces. It is true that we have still South America from which to draw the supplies which we must always import to patch out our inadequate raw wool production in order to take care of our wool industry, even in a normal manufacturing period, but with the English embargo in force we will be seriously crippled in our supply of raw wool in quantity as well as in character.

The Indian government has put an embargo upon the exportation of raw wool, except to England, for six months from April 1, 1916.

It is interesting to note some of the articles subject to embargo as printed from time to time in the commerce reports. We note that the British War Department has issued the following memorandum containing the regulations regarding the exportation of wool, manufactures of wool, and so forth, at present in force in the United Kingdom. The exportation of khaki woolen or worsted cloth, or a mixture thereof with any other fiber, except under license, is prohibited to all destinations. The exportation of the following goods, except under license, is prohibited to all destinations abroad other than British possessions and protectorates. Wool and hair of all kinds, pure and mixed, or mixed with any other fiber or in the form of tops, noils, wastes, rags, shoddy, and mungo applicable to other uses than manure, pulled or not, yarns, jerseys, cardigan jackets, gloves, socks, and men's underwear of all kinds.

We further learn that at the so-called "off season" wool sales which were held in Sydney during the week ending June 17 and in Melbourne during the week ending June 24 an export embargo was enforced against shipment to countries other than Great Britain and its allies. We are informed that local representatives of the Textile Alliance and local wool firms which sell to American buyers are hopeful that the embargo against neutral countries will be relaxed when the demands of the allied countries are somewhat satisfied. American buyers are always welcomed in Australia because their competition holds up prices. No official prediction concerning the duration of the embargo is possible in Australia because the policy is largely determined by instructions from the imperial Government.

It is very desirable from the viewpoint of the United States that this embargo be raised before the principal wool sales start in September. This is of concern to American purchasers of raw wool. It also is an important factor in the shipping situation, because an absence of return freights to the United States would either increase freight rates to Australia or cause vessels to be taken off the route. It is finally important in reference to the exchange situation, particularly if we desire to inaugurate more satisfactory dollar exchange. Since there is an embargo against the export of gold from Australia, a fairly even balance of imports and exports between the United States and Australia is necessary if settlements are to be arranged without constant dependence upon London.

Then we have the Russian embargo and export regulations. A Russian decree of May 4 codifies all embargo lists and restrictions on export issued before that date. By decrees of May 23, June 5, June 6, and June 12 additional articles have been placed under complete or partial embargo. Among the articles to which the embargo applies and the exportation of which by way of all frontiers of the Empire is prohibited are wheat, rye, oats, barley, lentils, buckwheat, millet, peas, beans, kidney beans, rice, tomatoes, onions, potatoes, cabbages, beets, dried vegetables, flour and grits, macaroni, tea, sugar, pepper, salt, butter, animal fat, meats of all kinds (except bacon), canned goods, cattle and hogs, hay and straw, tobacco (except cigars and cigarettes), sailcloth and khaki, dressed and undressed hides and skins—namely, ox, bull, cow, camel, buffalo, horse, and ass hides, and calf and pig skins—platinum, copper, and brass in the form of metal, scrap, or manufactures. And so on with a list of other articles, together with stringent export regulations concerning applications for authorization to export products placed upon the embargo list. It is to be noted that among the other articles the exportation of which is prohibited is wool.

By decree of August 24, 1915, the exportation of the following products from Spain has been prohibited: Hemp of various kinds, wool and cotton waste, ammoniac, refined plumbago, tungsten, superphosphates of lime and other mineral fertilizers, charcoal, and beet seeds.

And so I could go on and mention many other instances of articles subject to partial or complete embargo, restricted by the most stringent regulations concerning their importations to neutral countries. The American consulates are continually sending information to our State Department of additional articles of exportation the exportation of which to all destinations is prohibited, such as the information contained in the telegram from the American consul general at London, November 4, 1915, stating that the exportation of aluminum and its alloys and manufactures thereof has been prohibited, cinchona bark, quinine and its salts, metal cylinders, such as those for compressed oxygen or hydrogen.

From the same consulate, on November 26, 1915, we are informed that the exportation of cotton wadding, cotton wool, and iron ore of all descriptions to all destinations has been prohibited.

On December 14, 1915, from the same consulate a telegram was received stating that the exportation of magnesite, caustic or lightly calcined, and dead-burnt magnesite has been prohibited to all destinations and the exportation of beeswax to all destinations except British possessions. Coal of all kinds and coke come under a similar prohibition.

On December 22 from the same consulate the information was telegraphed that the exportation of hematite pig iron and of iron and steel smelting scrap had been prohibited to all destinations and the exportation of the following products to all destinations other than British possessions had been forbidden: Bichromate of soda, bladders, casings and sausage skin, colchicum and its preparations, solid-drawn steel tubes, and wireless telegraph apparatus.

Of course these embargoes and the notices of contraband are subject to change from time to time, but the general tendency is toward a restriction.

Denmark has placed an embargo prohibiting the exportation of lard and clover seed. France prohibits the exportation of flax, raw, stripped, and combed, tow and thread; hemp, hackled or stripped and combed, tow and thread; seeds for sowing and other seeds, an embargo of vital interest to American seed growers.

A further French decree places on the embargo list lenses for eyeglasses and optical instruments for observation, surveying, and optional purposes.

Germany has placed an embargo upon dyestuffs and colors, which has recently been relaxed in favor of a prominent German firm, to which has been granted permission to resume the shipment of enamel colors to the United States, the usual guaranties against reexportation being required.

Italy has modified its embargo in some respects. Norway has placed an embargo on copper and brass plates, bars, bolts, spikes, nails, pipes, and foundry pieces. Also upon instruments and material for medical, surgical, dental, and veterinary use; imported oil of turpentine.

Sweden has forbidden the exportation of wool. The British Government has prohibited the exportation of tin to other than British ports.

And not only is the embargo placed upon exportations, but even upon importations, as in the instance cited by Hon. JOSEPH W. FORDNEY of the case of the Lufkin Rule Co., manufacturing tapes and rules. It appears that the English manufacturers can supply all of the tapes and rules that are needed in the country, consequently the American manufacturer is shut out of the market.

All these conditions and complications persuade us as never before in the history of the country of the necessity of adequate protective duties to render us industrially independent, and above all industrially prepared. Where would we be to-day if we had not under a succession of protective tariffs built up our diversified industries throughout the country, so that we have been to a very large extent and in a substantial way independent of Europe during the European war?

RAILROAD POLITICAL CAMPAIGN ADVERTISING.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, a matter came to my notice a day or two ago which I think is most flagrant, and I feel that the Senate of the United States and the people of this country should be apprised of it. The railroads of this country are common carriers, and they run across our country by right of charters which have been granted to them by the people of the land.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me to present a privileged report?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I shall not take three minutes. I prefer that the Senator should wait.

The railroads of this country are in no sense private corporations, but they are permitted to carry on their traffic and business through the grace of the people. I believe the railroads have no right to use their roads or any of their belongings in behalf of any particular political party.

Mr. President, while traveling on the Pennsylvania Railroad from Newark to the Capital a day or two ago I went into the dining car. There I was handed the menu card which I hold in my hand. This card was by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., authorized to be printed. Let me read it:

Restaurant car service, Pennsylvania Railroad—Dinner—

Then it goes on—

Little neck clams, 25 cents; braised ox joints with noodles, 50 cents—

And so forth.

Then upon the card, conspicuously displayed, appears the following:

REGULATE THE RAILROADS CONSTRUCTIVELY.

We must rescue our instrumentalities of interstate and foreign commerce, our transportation facilities, from uncertainty and confusion. We must show that we know how to protect the public without destroying or crippling our productive energies.—Hon. Charles E. Hughes.

I insist that this is a most infamous abuse. As I have said, the railroads are public carriers, and they have no right to use their service, either in the dining car, in the parlor car, or in any other car, for the purpose of pressing any particular propaganda. This makes, to my mind, as it must to that of every other Senator, a complete connection between the railroads—particularly the Pennsylvania Railroad—and the Republican Party. It is using its great highways for partisan purposes. To my mind it is a crying wrong. I want to make such a system of insidious advertising a crime against the laws of the land.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. For what purpose?

Mr. NELSON. Merely for a question.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. May not the language on the menu card, which the Senator from New Jersey has read, be placed there for the purpose of giving their customers better appetites for their dinners?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not think it gives their customers any better appetites. It might make sharper and more acute the appetite of the Senator from Minnesota, but I think as to the average man it would be more apt to retard digestion or cause acute indigestion to read this miserable little effusion which is printed on the menu card.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator from New Jersey permit an inquiry?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. I am acquainted with a number of the officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and I really feel considerable confidence that I might get them to print an extract from one of the Senator's speeches on their menu card. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will never ask the Senator to try to do that.

Mr. President, I say this is a most abominable and atrocious abuse. These railroads are prostituting to political and partisan purposes the privileges which they have. This is clearly a case of a contribution to the Republican campaign fund. It costs something, and somebody must pay for it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey permit me to ask a question right there?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Is that the same railroad as to which I am informed in the recent investigation it was shown that it does its own printing, and that the head of the printing department was allowed the small sum of $150,000 a year for that service?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is doubtless true; I do not know anything about it; but I do say that this is a grave abuse. I can not imagine a great corporation prostituting the great privileges it has for running across the country, ramifying its roads in every direction, and being granted a thousand privileges, utilizing a menu card, that must stare in the face every man who wants to get a mouthful to eat on their trains in order to present their own political dogmas. It is really ridiculous and contemptible.

They should put on their menu card more of the effusions of Mr. Hughes, such as—

We are traveling through a fool's paradise.—Hon. Charles E. Hughes.
Peeled muscat grapes, 25 cents.

What a miserable farce and contemptible humbug and burning wrong and outrage it is!

Mr. President, it was my hope that the proposition which was embodied in the bill of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], which was recently before the Senate, might be passed and that we might in some way frame some feature or amendment of the bill which would make a repetition of this miserable and contemptible method of campaigning utterly impossible, or put it under a very severe penalty.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey permit me one word?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. As I am informed, the president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., Mr. Rea, is a Democrat.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not care what he is.

Mr. PENROSE. And that he voted for Woodrow Wilson.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not care what he is.

Mr. PENROSE. I am also informed that three-fourths of the officials and employees of that road are Democrats.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not believe that, for a great part of them come from Pennsylvania.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I report from the Committee on Appropriations without amendment the House concurrent resolution (No. 60) which I send to the desk. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution reported by the Senator from Florida will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session of the Congress by adjourning their respective Houses on the 8th day of September, 1916, at 10 o'clock antemeridian.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. STERLING. I move to amend the resolution by changing the hour of final adjournment from 10 o'clock to 11.30 o'clock.

Mr. BRYAN. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the resolution.

The resolution was concurred in.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. KERN. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Indiana will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 274) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered, and that the order heretofore made fixing hours for daily meetings and adjournments be vacated.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KERN submitted a resolution (S. Res. 275), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join a similar committee appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses, having completed the business of the present session, are ready to adjourn, unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. KERN and Mr. SMOOT the committee on the part of the Senate.

LANDS IN MONTANA.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 742, Senate bill 6670. It permits the State of Montana to select other land in lieu of land in the Huntley irrigation project. The bill is recommended by the Interior Department, and there is no objection to it, I think, from any quarter.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the request of the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. I ask for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 6670, permitting Montana to select lieu lands for a section of land which is in the Huntley irrigation project. There is no objection to it, I take it, and the Secretary of the Interior recommends it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. One moment. I want to see what the bill is [A pause.] I have no objection to it, although I thought the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] did not want to pass any bills at this session of Congress and did not want any help from any other Senator.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 6670) authorizing the State of Montana to select other lands in lieu of lands in section 16, township 2 north, range 30 east, within the limits of the Huntley irrigation project and the ceded portion of Crow Indian Reservation in said State. It authorizes the State of Montana to select, in lieu of lands in section 16, township 2 north, range 30 east, within the limits of the lands withdrawn for the Huntley irrigation project and formerly within the ceded portion of the Crow Indian Reservation in said State, other unappropriated surveyed nonmineral public lands of equal area situated within the limits of that State in the manner provided in the act approved February 28, 1891 (26 U. S. Stat. L., 796), entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated for other purposes"; but such selection of lands by the State shall be a waiver of its rights to the lands in section 16, and the homestead entries heretofore erroneously allowed for a portion of section 16 shall become valid, subject to future compliance with the law applicable thereto.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUDGE W. H. SAWTELLE.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, on the day before yesterday there appeared in the Evening Star, of this city, some animadversions made in another body on the character of the judge of the United States district court for Arizona. The paper stated that the judge had been appointed through the instrumentality of the Phelps-Dodge Co. Knowing as well as any living man knows how that judge was appointed, I want here to denounce the statement as absolutely untrue.

Further than that, the insinuation was attempted to be made that that judge, acting under the influence that had appointed him, proceeded to dismiss certain indictments against agents and salesmen of the Phelps-Dodge Co. Anyone who has ever read or will read the indictment in that case and who will not come to the conclusion that Judge Sawtelle had to sustain the demurrer to the indictment, if he be a lawyer, had better quit early in his career and cease the effort to learn anything of the intricacies of the legal profession. The indictment ought to have been set aside, as it was set aside.

I want here to say, although the character of Judge Sawtelle needs no defense at my hands or at the hands of any other man, that in all the United States and among all its judges, as high as they stand, there stands not one of cleaner mind, of purer heart, of greater courage, or with better knowledge of the law than does W. H. Sawtelle, who now presides over the United States district court in my State. He is a man without reproach; and this is the first time in his life, probably, when anywhere, under any circumstances, in private or in public, there has been a whisper against his name or an assault on his reputation. No man stands higher anywhere, and I could not sit silent and allow such statements to go by without at least saying this much based on my personal knowledge and my long acquaintance with that splendid gentleman. I can not, however, forbear expression of the general regret that any political party should find its condition so desperate that the purest life, the highest motives, the most honorable conduct, will not avail to protect from calumny and slander when the use of these degrading weapons are deemed necessary to political success. These slanders were not, in fact, so much aimed at the judge, but were used, regardless of his reputation, to cast blame on the administration by falsely challenging the motives which led to the appointment. If all this miserable stuff is as false as the insinuations cast against my neighbor and friend, the man who gave it circulation is beneath our further notice. I repeat here what I said to the President when presenting Judge Sawtelle's name for the position; that his integrity and courage were of such fiber that all the money in the State could not buy a decision of his, nor could any mob assemble large enough to scare him from the performance of his duty as God gave him to see it.

TRANSFER OF ARMY OFFICERS TO ACTIVE LIST.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 729, being the bill (S. 6850) authorizing the transfer of certain retired Army officers to the active list.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Texas to explain briefly just how far this bill goes and how many retired officers are affected by it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill makes four Army officers, who were retired under the Panama Canal act, eligible for restoration to the active list, provided they comply with the same requirements that are usually enforced as to other officers of the Army.

Mr. SMOOT. And it affects only four retired officers?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; and only makes them eligible for restoration to the active list provided they comply with the usual requirements.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not had an opportunity to read the bill, and so I inquire what rank under the bill do the officers take? Are they promoted when they are transferred to the active list?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Or do they go back to the active list with the rank which they would have had if there had been no promotions?

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I want to know.

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is a short statement in the report from the Secretary of War which I think will explain the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the statement be read, because if the bill involves promotions, I certainly shall object to it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Two things ought to attach to it. The officers should go back to their former status and they should not be given again the right to retire with a promotion.

Mr. SMOOT. If the bill provides those two things, I have no objection to its consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If those two suggestions are met in the bill, I shall be able to vote for it, because it will give to the Government the services of these men as active officers with very little additional compensation. For a few hundred dollars we will transfer them from the list of retired officers to the list of active officers serving the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. I think in this instance only $750 a year is involved.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will ask the Secretary to read the letter from the Secretary of War.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the letter read.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The report might also be read, as it is very short.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Secretary would read the bill, we would understand it.

Mr. SMOOT. It would be better to read the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 17, 1916.

HON. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

SIR: Referring to bill S. 6850, which has been referred to the department for its views, I beg to inform you that I carefully examined the provisions of the bill, and there appears to be one objection, namely, that as the benefits of the Panama Canal act are continuing that the provisions of this bill would permit the officers therein named to return to the active list, and in this way secure all the benefits incident to the recent national defense act, and upon gaining another promotion would then demand the retirement under the Panama defense act, which would result in giving the officers an additional grade on the retired list. If this defect be corrected, I can see no objection to the passage of this act. I therefore suggest that the bill be amended by adding the following proviso:

"And provided further, That any officer transferred to the active list under this act shall not again be entitled to the benefits of the Panama Canal act, described above, except when retired for age or for physical disability incurred in the line of duty."

With this proviso added I recommend approval of the act.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 12, after the word "law," to insert:

And provided further, That any officer transferred to the active list under this act shall not again be entitled to the benefits of the Panama Canal act, described above, except when retired for age or for physical disability incurred in the line of duty.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, within one year of the approval of this act, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer to the active list of the Army any officer under 50 years of age who may have been transferred heretofore from the active to the retired list of the Army under the act to provide for recognizing the services of certain officers of the Army, Navy, and Public Health Service for their services in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1915: Provided, That such officer shall be transferred to the rank and place on the active list which he would have had if he had not been retired, shall be carried as an additional number in the grade to which he may be transferred or at any time thereafter promoted, and shall be promoted on the same date as the officer next above him in rank, and shall be commissioned in the arm or department of the Army from which he was retired: Provided, further, That such officer shall stand a satisfactory medical examination, and when promoted shall stand the medical and professional examinations provided for by law: And provided further, That any officer transferred to the active list under this act shall not again be entitled to the benefits of the Panama Canal act described above, except when retired for age or for physical disability incurred in the line of duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is an amendment which I have heretofore suggested, and I will inquire if that amendment has been acted upon? If not, I offer it at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, after the words "to transfer," it is proposed to insert the words "upon application."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The purpose of the amendment is to permit only those officers to be restored to the active list who desire to be restored. There are some officers who are quite young whose services can be utilized and who will make application.

Mr. BRADY. And with the amendment to the bill which has been agreed to, it complies with the recommendation of the Secretary of War.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. J. O'KEEFE, POSTMASTER.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to make a very short statement in relation to nominations for postmasters during this session of Congress and the action taken thereon. I think it will be interesting.

There have been 2,965 nominations for postmasters referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads during the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, all of which have been acted upon except 21, which have been held up under certain circumstances. Mr. President, in order to complete the list, I ask unanimous consent, as in open session, to confirm the nomination I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. A. J. O'Keefe, to be postmaster at Beach, N. Dak., in place of John M. Baer, resigned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nomination is confirmed. The President will be notified.

WATER SUPPLY OF BLACKHAWK, COLO.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent to take up House bill No. 11472, being Order of Business 778, to reserve certain lands and make them a part of the Pike National Forest. It is a bill proposing simply to add 800 acres of land to the Pike Forest Reserve to protect the water supply of Blackhawk, Colo. The people are very much interested in having it passed.

Mr. BRADY. Has the bill met with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. PENROSE. Let the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all lands in the State of Colorado described as follows, to wit: Section 19 and section 30 in township 2 south, range 72 west, sixth principal base and meridian, be, and the same are hereby, reserved, subject to all prior valid adverse rights, and made a part of and included in the Pike National Forest.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES DUFFY.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of order of business 768 (S. 4667), for the relief of James Duffy. It is a private bill and a wholly meritorious one. It has been delayed a long time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was in line 5, after the word "soldiers," to insert "their widows and dependent relatives," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows and dependent relatives, James Duffy, late of Company A Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of the above organization on the 6th day of October, 1862: Provided, That no pay, pension, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLATHEAD INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I have one more request to trespass on the generosity of the Senate. I ask for the immediate consideration of Order of Business 725, being Senate bill 6716, to provide for stock-watering privileges on certain unallotted lands on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont. It is purely a local bill, approved by the Interior Department, and is intended to remedy a very bad situation of affairs in Montana.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. MYERS. It was unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware of that, I will say to the Senator, but I have been asked by a Senator not to allow the bill to be considered in his absence.

Mr. MYERS. Very well. Then I make a request for the indefinite postponement of two bills. This is purely formal, in order to clear the calendar.

I move that Order of Business 677, Senate joint resolution 147, extending the provisions of the act approved June 16, 1898, be indefinitely postponed. It is one of my resolutions which was supplanted by a House bill, and it has no place on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the joint resolution will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MYERS. I also move that Order of Business No. 473, House bill 10791, for the relief of the occupants of the Tuttle town site, be indefinitely postponed. It is in the same position.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that course will be taken.

VESSEL "GOLDEN GATE."

Mr. PHELAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 704, House bill 8816, authorizing the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the sailing vessel Golden Gate to be registered as a vessel of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ILLINOIS CENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beg to tender a resolution on behalf of my colleague as to Order of Business 781, H. J. Res. 282, authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster at Springfield, Ill., with a special canceling die for the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Federal Union. The object of the resolution is to have made a special post-office stamp in connection with the commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Illinois into the Union. It refers to a stamp for the post office at Springfield, Ill. I respectfully ask concurrence in the resolution. It is similar to the resolution passed for the postmaster at Newark, N. J.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recollects that this resolution has already been passed, but if the Senator makes the request it can be passed again.

There being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time and passed.

SIR ROGER CASEMENT.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to call up Senate resolution 264. This resolution went over, I think, the other day on the request of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. It is the resolution referring to the execution of Sir Roger Casement. I should like to call it up.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 264) as follows:

Resolved, That the State Department of the United States is hereby requested to convey to the Senate the exact date and hour that the Senate resolution regarding Sir Roger Casement's sentence of death was placed in the hands of the British authorities.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to say with reference to that resolution, as I stated before, that it is currently rumored and generally believed that the resolution that was passed by this body with reference to the kindly intervention of the President of the United States urging a stay or a reprieve in the execution of Sir Roger Casement, through somebody's negligence or fault—I know not where or by whom—did not reach the British authorities until after this martyr to the cause of liberty had been placed in his coffin and well sprinkled with quicklime. I feel, if that is true, that the public should know who is responsible and upon whom the blame rests. It seems impossible and almost unparalleled, after the advertisement and notoriety that was given, and the marvelous interest all over the United States and the world in this case, that after the United States Senate had passed the resolution anybody could have been so negligent and so slothful as to fail to present this resolution to the proper authorities until after the execution of this poor man.

I should like to have this resolution adopted, in order that the public may know the real facts of the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I believe I am the only member of the Foreign Relations Committee who is present in the Senate Chamber. Was not that resolution referred a day or two ago to that committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it went over under the rule.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. We are now in the closing hours of the session. Is it in order to move to refer it to that committee?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I thought it went over for the day, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It certainly did. It is in order to move to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Well, it ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I hope the Senator will not press it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. When will we get an opportunity to have it acted upon?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It can not be done now, for the Senate will adjourn in 10 minutes, and it is impossible to get its consideration in that time. I move its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is more reason than any other reason why it should be passed.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I move its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations, because it should naturally go there.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That will mean its death, of course.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It may not. It can come up just as quickly in that way as in any other. It could not be reported to this body now, anyway.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It was reported a week ago.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I move its reference.

Mr. HUGHES. I suppose what the Senator wants is information as to what really happened?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Just what the resolution says.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator that I made an investigation of my own with reference to what happened, and the conclusion at which I arrived, based on that information, was that, regardless of the time when any resolution physically arrived at any particular place, all the dispatch that could possibly be used by the officials of the Government was used in that case. The State Department was notified, not by the physical presentation of the resolution or a piece of paper, but it was notified by telephone from the office.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It was in the air.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not understand what my colleague means by being "in the air."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Why, everybody knew that the Senate resolution had passed.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; and the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, through its secretary, notified the State Department and telephoned it a copy of the resolution, and in order to facilitate the presentation of the resolution the same means were adopted by the State Department. Long before it would have been physically possible to transport the actual paper upon which the resolution was written, the substance and form of the resolution was in the possession of the proper authorities at the other end of the line. If the Senator only wants information, I am glad to be able to give it to him.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. What I want is that the world shall know it, and that we shall have it known by the authority of the State Department of the United States.

Mr. HUGHES. I think the world knows it now.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is another pleasant method of death for the resolution.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I have been not a little interested in this matter and have investigated it. I desire to inform the Senate and the country that the resolution adopted by the Senate, while it may not have been as promptly transmitted as we would have desired, was nevertheless—and this I know as a fact—officially received in London on the Monday following the Saturday on which the resolution was adopted by the Senate, and therefore—which is the essential thing, and which the Senators doubtless would like to know—the action of the Senate, whatever its value might have been was in the possession of the British foreign office at least two days before the execution, and well within the time necessary to exercise executive clemency.

So I make the point that the action of the American Senate, whatever it was worth, was not lost by reason of failure of transmission of the resolution through the channels of our State Department and through our ambassador in London to the foreign office of Great Britain; and the only regret is that the Government of Great Britain held in such little regard the opinion of this body, which reflected I believe the public opinion of the world.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the reference of the resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it seems, then, that the State Department did receive the information in ample time, and communicated it to London in ample time; and all the disturbance we have had on this subject is utterly without foundation.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from New Jersey will withdraw his resolution, in view of the statements that have been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KERN and Mr. SMOOT appeared, and Mr. KERN said:

Mr. President, the joint committee of the two Houses of Congress appointed to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the business of the present session of Congress has been finished, and ascertain if he had any further communications to make to Congress, have performed that duty, and now report that the President of the United States has informed us that he has no further communication to make.

THANKS TO THE VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES in the chair). The Senator from Minnesota offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 276), as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are hereby tendered to Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL, Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate, for the dignified, impartial, and courteous manner in which he has presided over its deliberations during the present session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

THANKS TO THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 277), as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are hereby tendered to Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE, President pro tempore of the Senate, for the dignified, impartial, and courteous manner in which he has presided over its deliberations during the present session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators, the resolution just passed for the regular Presiding Officer of this body came upon me so suddenly that I am not prepared fittingly to respond.

When I assumed the duties of this office, I thought it would be a terrible thing to keep silence. The longer I stay here, the more sure I am that it is a wise thing sometimes to keep silence.

I thank you for this resolution. I am going to assume that you mean it. We are about to leave here to "point with pride" and to "view with alarm." I hope, when we get through that ceremony, we shall all come back here forgetting the animosities of the campaign and remembering that we are not strangers nor aliens, but that we are friends under the American flag. [Applause.]

The hour of 10 o'clock a. m. this 8th day of September, 1916, having arrived, in accordance with the concurrent resolution of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, the Senate of the United States is now adjourned without day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, September 8, 1916.

The House met at 8.30 a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, we thank Thee that amid the changing circumstances and shifting scenes of this life and its environments Thou art the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, and that, whatever comes to us, we may be assured that Thou art with us to uphold, sustain, and guide us, and though Thou art inscrutable and Thy plans and purposes hidden from us, Thou wilt work them out in accordance with Thy holy purpose, and at last they shall be to the final good of all. We thank Thee for the sweet consolation that follows in the wake of duty well done, and we pray that that consolation may come to all who are connected with this House. And now, O Father, as we shall separate for a short time, we pray that Thy blessing may be over us and about us. Bring us together again at the appointed time without the loss of any. "The Lord bless you and keep you, the Lord make His face shine upon you and be gracious to you, the Lord lift up His countenance upon you and give you peace, that peace which passeth understanding." In Christ Jesus, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 407. An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments joint resolution (H. J. Res. 91) authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 15287. An act authorizing the addition of certain lands to the Colorado and Piko National Forests, Colo.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 12 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the House for 12 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman begins I ask unanimous consent that if there be opportunity I may have time to address the House before we adjourn upon appropriations made by this Congress, or to extend my remarks upon the same in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to address the House or to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for not more than five minutes, following the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for not to exceed five minutes at the conclusion of the remarks of Mr. HARRISON. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 12 minutes.

SHIPMENT OF ARMS INTO MEXICO.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, during this session of Congress, on the 4th of August, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] made a very characteristic Republican speech, full of criticism and vituperation, preferring certain charges against the Department of State. Among other things in that speech, the gentleman from Illinois, in substance, alleged that after the Parral incident the State Department had permitted the shipment of arms and ammunition into Mexico, and that a few days prior to that Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge, who was alleged to be interested in the shipment, was in the city of Washington and had called upon the Secretary of State. At that time these sensational charges were printed in the public press, but when the facts became known it was found that the charges were grossly unwarranted and misleading. It was shown by the record that not only was no shipment of arms or ammunition permitted to be sent into Mexico after the Parral incident but that the shipment in question had been made some days before and had landed in Mexico at least a week before.

Furthermore, the charge that Cleveland H. Dodge had visited with Mr. Lansing was refuted by a statement of the Secretary of State that not only had he not visited with Mr. Dodge, but that he did not know Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge. The Rodenberg charges of August 4 having been utterly destroyed, he makes another speech on day before yesterday—a speech that may be taken as a plea of "confession and avoidance," confessing that he was wrong in the statement that he had made touching the State Department, confessing that those remarks were based merely on a newspaper clipping, and were not borne out by the fact, and avoidance in that he attempts to excuse himself from misrepresentation by bringing new charges, not against the State Department, but against the Department of Justice. In that speech Mr. RODENBERG employs this language:

> The Hon. William H. Sawtelle was appointed Federal judge for Arizona on August 18, 1913, by President Wilson. His principal backer and the man who was primarily responsible for his appointment was Mr. Everett E. Ellinwood, general attorney for the Phelps, Dodge & Co. interests in Arizona, and who appears as attorney for the defendants in this case. I have no doubt that Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge joined in the recommendation of his general attorney. [Applause on the Republican side.]
>
> At the time this indictment was returned the Hon. Joseph E. Morrison, of Bisbee, Ariz., was the United States district attorney. Mr. Morrison, who is a highly reputable gentleman, states that he received specific instructions from the Department of Justice in Washington to prevent the indictment at the same time of the Winchester Arms Co., in which Marcellus Dodge, a relative of Cleveland H. Dodge, is heavily interested, and which concern was also involved in the shipment of munitions to Mexico in violation of the neutrality resolution. [Applause on the Republican side.]
>
> Later on Mr. Morrison received a request from A. B. Bielaski, Chief of the Division of Investigation, asking him to suppress the instructions issued by the Department of Justice and under no circumstances to permit them to be made public. [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. Morrison is no longer United States district attorney, having been supplanted by a "deserving Democrat."

Mr. Speaker, these charges, like the charges before uttered by the gentleman from Illinois, are without foundation. They are misleading and give the wrong impression to the country. The policy pursued by the Department of Justice in the prosecution of these people in Arizona in 1913 was the policy pursued by the Department of Justice during the administration of Mr. Taft. It was but a continuation of that policy. The same gentlemen handled it under both administrations. Papers in the Department of Justice show that as far back as 1912 there was a secret understanding, or I might say a confidential understanding, whereby the Winchester Arms people, whom Mr. RODENBERG charges with having been saved from prosecution by instructions from the Department of Justice, agreed with the Department of Justice that in all shipments of munitions into Mexico they would furnish that department the names of the parties to whom shipments were made. Here is one letter—the first on the subject after the Taft embargo order was passed by Congress. The department, in writing to Mr. Thomas G. Bennett, president of the Winchester Arms Co., on May 6, 1912, when Mr. Taft was President, stated, among other things:

> You are doubtless familiar with the joint resolution of Congress, passed on March 14, 1912, and the proclamation of the President of the same date, which prohibits the exportation of munitions of war to Mexico. The information which you are requested to give is intended solely for the purpose of enabling the Federal authorities to detect and prevent violations of this resolution and proclamation or other provisions of the neutrality statutes.

These people in answering the Department of Justice, among other things, say:

> We shall take pleasure in complying with this request and will report from day to day such shipments as are made.
>
> It must be borne in mind that we have a large regular business in these districts and single shipments of 100 or 200 guns or even more is no unusual condition in the normal business of this concern. We simply bring this to your attention as the volume of the business in these districts is not, we believe, generally understood, and we would not care to have suspicion drawn toward some of our customers.

In another letter from the Department of Justice to the Winchester Arms people on May 8, 1912, they say:

> I desire to take this occasion to assure you that specific instructions will be given to any agents who may act upon information given in these reports to carefully avoid annoying your customers in any way, and I feel sure that your company need have no apprehension that any of them will be disturbed, without substantial evidence having first been obtained indicating their connection with a violation of the neutrality statute.

The letter in response on the following day to the Department of Justice from the Winchester Arms people says:

> We suppose, of course, that you will appreciate that we desire so far as possible to have the information contained in these reports treated as confidential, and that our name be not used in connection therewith.

And the department, in answering the Winchester people the following day, said:

> Replying to your letter of the 9th instant, signed by Winchester Bennett, first vice president, I beg to advise you that the information which you may furnish to Mr. Offley, the division superintendent of this bureau at New York City, will be treated as confidential, and that your name will not be used in connection with it. Special instructions to this effect will be given to our agents to-day.

Mr. COLLIER. What date is that?

Mr. HARRISON. May 10, 1912, when Mr. Taft was President. So these instructions which were given by Mr. Bielaski, head of the Investigation Bureau of the Department of Justice, were merely to keep faith with the preceding administration in its understanding with the Winchester Arms people—namely, that this information be kept confidential. Now, I desire to read the telegram that the gentleman from Illinois says was instructions to the district attorney not to indict this corporation. First I read the telegram from Morrison to the Department of Justice, dated October 21, 1913:

> Phelps-Dodge Mercantile Company and two of its officers Douglas Hardware Co. and its general manager and Mexican purchasers indicted this afternoon conspiracy to export munitions of war; two counts shipment with intent to export two counts; extremely probable grand jury will to-morrow indict conspiracy Winchester Arms Company and officers New Haven, Connecticut, Shelton Payne Arms Co., and other large arms dealers, El Paso, and many others along Arizona border.

Here is the response, dated October 22, 1913:

> Telegram received. Department very doubtful as to propriety indicting Winchester Arms Co. or any of its officers. This company has for some time voluntarily furnished this department with information as to shipments arms and ammunition to States on Mexican border. Furthermore, prior to August 28 last numerous exceptions were made by President permitting such shipments into Mexico, and department doubts whether this company or its officers have wilfully violated the law. Grand jury should be advised as to contents this telegram.
>
> McREYNOLDS.

On the same day, October 22, 1913, Mr. Morrison wired the department:

> In view of your suggestion, contained in your telegram of October 28, 1913, to-day the grand jury will probably not indict Winchester Arms Co. nor any of its officers. Other parties mentioned my telegram yesterday indicted to-day.

Then following this telegram was sent the telegram that Mr. RODENBERG stated was instructions from the Department of Justice to the district attorney to suppress the instructions issued by the Department of Justice, and "under no circumstances to permit them to be made public." It is dated November 8, 1913, and reads:

> Winchester Arms Co. advises me on long-distance telephone that they will send Assistant General Sales Manager Henry Hultz with all records and papers. Desires subpœna served immediately on arrival. Dickerson not employed Winchester Co., but will send suitable witness with records. Please keep confidentially fact that Winchester Co. has furnished department information on border shipment, as knowledge this fact might seriously injure business through loss customers.
>
> BIELASKI.

No instructions to suppress the fact that no indictment was returned, but merely, "Keep confidentially fact that Winchester Company has furnished Department information." What information? Why, the names of these customers to whom they had shipped munitions in Mexico. Is there anything wrong in that telegram? Is there anything unusual in the whole incident? I submit not. Can you blame these people for not wanting the names of their customers published, and their business destroyed? Certainly not. Merely another "grasping for a straw" on which to obtain an issue. The whole correspondence shows that the Department of Justice, in October, 1913, was keeping faith with the agreement entered into between the Department of Justice during a Republican administration with the Winchester Arms Co.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I have not very much time.

Mr. DENISON. I was going to ask the gentleman if he is right sure this is the telegram to which Mr. RODENBERG referred?

Mr. HARRISON. It is absolutely the telegram.

Mr. MORRISON. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. HARRISON. The records of the Department of Justice, containing all the correspondence, conclusively show it. I defy the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] to produce any other telegram. I challenge any other gentleman to show anything to the contrary. There can be no question about it.

Mr. DENISON. Of course, the gentleman knows it will only be an hour before Congress adjourns, and Mr. RODENBERG is not here.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that, and I am sorry I was not in the House the other day when he made his speech, and I regret he is not here now. Another remarkable fact connected with this controversy is that it was handled in the Department of Justice through Mr. Bielaski, as head of the Investigation Bureau, and Mr. Atkins, Assistant Attorney General, both of whom are reputable Republicans. The only other person in the Department of Justice directly connected with the correspondence was Mr. Herron, Assistant Attorney General, who is a brother-in-law of your former President, W. H. Taft. [Applause on Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask for an additional eight minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for eight minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, desiring to answer the gentleman from Mississippi, I asked for 5 minutes, but if his time shall be extended I shall ask unanimous consent for 15 minutes rather than 5. If there be no objection to that, of course I will not object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I want some little time here, and I do not think the gentleman ought to do that.

Mr. HARRISON. I will ask then for only five minutes' additional time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I shall not object, but in due course I shall ask for at least 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. There can not possibly be any politics in the matter. The whole question, as I have stated before, is one of this administration trying to keep faith with the Winchester Arms Co. about an understanding that was entered into by a former administration. It was absolutely proper and right.

But Mr. RODENBERG says that a relative of Cleveland H. Dodge is interested in the Winchester Arms Co. and is vice president of Phelps-Dodge & Co. Is it not remarkable that if the present administration desired to manifest partiality toward Cleveland H. Dodge for his campaign contributions they should have prosecuted the Phelps-Dodge Co., in which concern Mr. Dodge was greatly interested and vice president of, and protect the Winchester Arms Co., a corporation, in which he was not a stockholder and in which he had no direct interest? Here is an instruction from the Department of Justice to Morrison, dated October 23, 1913. It reads:

The department, of course, desires the vigorous prosecution of all persons, without regard to their stations in life or other similar considerations, who may be guilty of any violation of Federal law.

Does that look like they are trying to shield some one? Does that look like partiality? As to the Federal judge sitting in these cases, and whose integrity the gentleman from Illinois assails, I am reliably informed that he is one of the very best lawyers in Arizona, a man of the highest character, and whose reputation has never before been questioned. When he was appointed to the bench, Judge Sawtelle was indorsed by Republicans as well as Democrats, and the district attorney, Mr. Morrison, in his report to the Department of Justice on these cases, employs this language about the man whose official integrity the gentleman from Illinois questions. This report, dated December 14, 1913, says:

In conclusion, I desire to say that the relations existing between this office and Judge Sawtelle are of the most pleasant character, and we entertain the highest regard for him. While certain portions of this letter are couched in strong language, nevertheless the difference between us is merely one of opinion.

Now gentlemen, let me suggest that even if these alleged instructions were true, that it would not—it could not raise this man Morrison in the estimate of any fair-minded man to reveal matters pertaining to his official duties, and this would be true if he were acting from intense partisanship, or piqueness over the loss of his political head.

The alleged utterances attributed to him are quite enough to damn him before self-respecting people everywhere.

Now, there is one other matter that I desire to call to the attention of the House. Gentlemen on that side of the aisle have criticised the President on his Mexican policy. Some have said that troops should have been sent into Mexico; others have found fault when troops were sent into Mexico. You have certainly been hard to please. But it is the same old system of fault finding, no matter what is good. You are hungry for an issue. I want to read you a telegram that was sent to the Governor of Arizona on April 18, 1911, by Mr. Taft, your President, in answer to a request from the Governor of Arizona to send troops across the border to put down uprisings at that time—to revenge the killing of Americans, if you please. This letter followed the remarkable speech of a distinguished Senator at the other end of the Capitol, when he spoke of the outrages at that time being perpetrated in Mexico. Perpetrated, mind you, during a Republican administration. What was done? Here is the telegram which your President at that time sent to the Governor of Arizona, under date of April 18, 1911:

Your dispatch received. Have made urgent demand upon Mexican Government to issue instructions to prevent firing across border by Mexican Federal troops and am awaiting reply. Meantime, I have sent direct warning to the Mexican and insurgent forces near Douglas. I infer from your dispatch that both parties attempt to heed the warning, but that in the strain and exigency of the contest wild bullets still find their way into Douglas. The situation might justify me in ordering our troops to cross the border and attempt to stop the fighting or to fire upon both combatants from the American side. But if I take this step I must face the possibility of resistance and greater bloodshed and also the danger of having our motive misconstrued and misrepresented and of thus inflaming Mexican popular indignation against many thousands of Americans now in Mexico and jeopardizing their lives and property. The pressure for general intervention under such conditions it might not be practicable to resist. It is impossible to foresee or reckon the consequences of such a course, and we must use the greatest self-constraint to avoid it. Pending my urgent representation to the Mexican Government can not therefore order the troops at Douglas to cross the border, but I must ask you and the local authorities, in case the same danger recurs, to direct the people of Douglas to place themselves where bullets can not reach them, and thus avoid casualty.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Listen to it, gentlemen:

In case the same danger recurs, to direct the people of Douglas to place themselves where bullets can not reach them and thus avoid casualty.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

That was the expression used by your President in 1911. Let me read to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] that last statement again, and then I will answer his question. Says Mr. Taft:

But I must ask you and the local authorities, in case the same danger recurs, to direct the people of Douglas to place themselves where bullets can not reach them and thus avoid casualty.

Then he proceeds further:

I am loath to endanger Americans in Mexico, where they are necessarily exposed, by taking radical steps to prevent injury to Americans on our side of the border who can avoid it by temporary inconvenience.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. I want to ask the gentleman if he approves that sentiment of President Taft?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I approve that sentiment of President Taft, and President Wilson has followed the same policy all the time. Now I will ask the gentleman, Do you approve that policy of Mr. Taft?

Mr. DENISON. I want to ask you another question.

Mr. HARRISON. I want you first to answer that. Does the gentleman approve that?

Mr. DENISON. I approve that. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HARRISON. Then do you not approve the President's policy in Mexico of following out the policy of Mr. Taft?

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman will notice that Mr. Taft says that policy is only temporary. Your President has made a permanent policy of President Taft's temporary policy. That is the difference between the two Presidents. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARRISON. Ah, but the same conditions confronted Mr. Wilson that confronted Mr. Taft, and Mr. Wilson has followed the same policy in the matter that President Taft followed. The gentleman states that he approves President Taft's policy, but that he disapproves President Wilson's policy. How does the gentleman reconcile those statements?

Mr. DENISON. At that time the conditions were entirely new, and President Taft's policy was only temporary. President Wilson has made that a permanent policy.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, President Taft was President for two years after that, and he followed the same kind of a policy during the following two years. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 16763. An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes;

H. R. 17645. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15287. An act authorizing the addition of certain lands to the Colorado and Pike National Forests, Colo.; and

H. R. 11472. An act to reserve certain lands and make them a part of the Pike National Forest.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 5886. An act extending the time for the completion of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., authorized by an act entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled 'An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River,'" approved August 23, 1912;

S. 136. An act for the relief of Eva M. Bowman; and

S. J. Res. 169. Joint resolution interpreting section 50 of the act of June 3, 1916, for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills and joint resolutions:

H. R. 1636. An act for the relief of Karen S. Sorenson and James Lyle;

H. R. 1963. An act for the relief of John E. Keys;

H. R. 11707. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War," approved April 19, 1908, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13046. An act to consolidate certain forest lands in the Oregon National Forest, in the State of Oregon;

H. R. 12889. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell the unsold and unappropriated portions of lands within the town site of Newell, S. Dak., and for other purposes;

H. R. 2208. An act for the relief of James L. Yokum;

H. R. 6034. An act to make available a portion of the appropriation for the immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for such counters, booths, screens, railings, seats, bunks, kitchen and laundry equipment, etc., as necessary in connection with said station;

H. R. 10989. An act making appropriation for the preservation, improvement, and perpetual care of Huron Cemetery, a burial place of the Wyandotte Indians, in the city of Kansas City, Kans.;

H. R. 14533. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee simple to the district school board No. 112, of White Earth village, Becker County, Minn., for a certain tract of land upon payment therefor to the United States in trust for the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota;

H. R. 14824. An act to prevent fraud at public auctions in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 15807. An act to provide for holding sessions of the United States district court in the district of Maine and for dividing said district into divisions, and providing for offices of the clerk and marshal of said district to be maintained in each of said divisions, and for the appointment of a field deputy marshal in the division in which the marshal does not reside;

H. R. 16532. An act authorizing an adjustment of the boundaries of the Whitman National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 237. Joint resolution authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster of Gulfport, Miss., with a special canceling die for the Mississippi Centennial Exposition celebration;

H. J. Res. 252. Joint resolution authorizing the transfer of the Government exhibit, or such portion thereof as the President may determine is advisable, now at the Panama-California International Exposition, at San Diego, Cal., to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition, at Gulfport, Miss.;

H. R. 15287. An act authorizing the addition of certain lands to the Colorado and Pike National Forests, Colo.;

H. R. 16763. An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes;

H. R. 17645. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 11472. An act to reserve certain lands and make them a part of the Pike National Forest.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who informed the House of Representatives that the President approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On August 23, 1916:

H. R. 11416. An act to repeal an act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled 'An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States,' approved August 1, 1888";

H. R. 13984. An act granting to the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, a right of way through the United States military reservation at Fort Mifflin, Pa.;

H. R. 14299. An act to amend section 33 of an act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911;

H. R. 16914. An act permitting the Needles & Oatman Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Colorado River between the States of California and Arizona; and

H. R. 16995. An act granting the consent of Congress to A. N. Alford to construct a bridge across the Savannah River.

On August 24, 1916:

H. J. Res. 298. Joint resolution providing for the relief of flood sufferers in the State of West Virginia; and

H. R. 4559. An act for the relief of C. Horatio Scott.

On August 25, 1916:

H. R. 17398. An act granting the consent of Congress to the board of county commissioners of the county of Hampden, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River between Springfield and West Springfield, in said county and Commonwealth; and

H. R. 15522. An act to establish a national-park service, and for other purposes.

On August 26, 1916:

H. R. 16709. An act to amend an act relating to the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, approved March 4, 1913;

On August 28, 1916:

H. R. 14338. An act to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes.

On August 29, 1916:

H. R. 15947. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes;

H. R. 17498. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 247. Joint resolution extending the provisions of the act approved June 16, 1898.

On August 30, 1916:

H. R. 17501. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Youngstown, Ohio, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio.

On August 31, 1916:

H. R. 5. An act for erecting a suitable memorial to John Ericsson;

H. R. 11860. An act for the relief of Halvor Nilsen;

H. R. 15575. An act to amend the act of March 22, 1906, entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes";

H. R. 16093. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of drainage assessments on Indian lands in Oklahoma";

H. R. 17058. An act to fix standards for Climax baskets for grapes and other fruits and vegetables, and to fix standards for baskets and other containers for small fruits, berries, and vegetables, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15048. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 15494. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 16290. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

On September 1, 1916:

H. R. 8234. An act to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15774. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 13926. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1915, so as to provide for terms of the district court to be held at Anderson, S. C.

On September 3, 1916:

H. R. 17700. An act to establish an eight-hour day for employees of carriers engaged in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes:

On September 5, 1916:

H. J. Res. 292. Joint resolution proposing to amend section 2971 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

H. R. 600. An act to validate title to the town site of McCabe, in the State of Montana;

H. R. 1528. An act for the relief of Martin Huhn;

H. R. 10251. An act authorizing the Kansas City & Memphis Railway & Bridge Co. to make settlement with Crittenden County, Ark., and for other purposes;

H. R. 13835. An act to authorize the county commissioners of Aitkin County, Minn., and the town board of Logan Township, in said county and said State, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River on the line between sections 26 and 27, township 49 north, range 25 west, fourth principal meridian; and

H. R. 17375. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved June 17, 1910.

On September 6, 1916:

H. R. 6914. An act to amend section 82, chapter 231, of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary;

H. R. 15158. An act to amend the judicial code; to fix the time when the annual term of the Supreme Court shall commence; and further to define the jurisdiction of that court; and

H. R. 16719. An act for the relief of John P. Sutton.

On September 7, 1916:

H. R. 15455. An act to establish a United States shipping board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13391. An act to amend certain sections of the act entitled "Federal reserve act," approved December 23, 1913;

H. R. 14391. An act authorizing the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Madison, Wis., and for other purposes;

H. R. 15316. An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes;

H. R. 17235. An act granting the consent of Congress to W. H. Crosby, W. H. Andrews, E. G. Connette, Daniel Good, Henry May, Robert C. Gaupp, Edward Kener, jr., William F. MacGlashan, Eugene L. Falk, John W. Robinson, John M. Willys, Oliver Cabana, jr., Conrad E. Wettlaufer, H. A. Hurt, George J. Meyer, Myron S. Hall, John Lord O'Brian, Frank S. McGraw, and William A. Morgan to construct a bridge across Niagara River within or near the city limits of Buffalo, and for other purpose;

H. R. 17567. An act to authorize the county of Luzerne, State of Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the North Branch of the Susquehanna River from the city of Wilkes-Barre, county of Luzerne, Pa., to the borough of Dorranceton, county of Luzerne, Pa.;

H. R. 1636. An act for the relief of Karen S. Sorenson and James Lyle;

H. R. 1963. An act for the relief of John E. Keys;

H. R. 2208. An act for the relief of James L. Yokum;

H. R. 6034. An act to make available a portion of the appropriation for the immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for such counters, booths, screens, railings, seats, bunks, kitchen and laundry equipment, etc., as necessary in connection with said station;

H. R. 10989. An act making appropriation for the preservation, improvement, and perpetual care of Huron Cemetery, a burial place of the Wyandotte Indians, in the city of Kansas City, Kans.;

H. R. 11472. An act to reserve certain lands and make them a part of the Pike National Forest.

H. R. 11707. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War," approved April 19, 1908;

H. R. 12889. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell the unsold and unappropriated portion of lands within the town site of Newell, S. Dak., and for other purposes;

H. R. 13046. An act to consolidate certain forest lands in the Oregon National Forest, in the State of Oregon;

H. R. 14533. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee simple to the district school board No. 112, of White Earth Village, Becker County, Minn., for a certain tract of land upon payment therefor to the United States in trust for the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota;

H. R. 14824. An act to prevent fraud at public auctions in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 15287. An act authorizing the addition of certain lands to the Colorado and Pike National Forests, Colo.;

H. R. 15807. An act to provide for holding sessions of the United States district court in the district of Maine and for dividing said district into divisions, and providing for offices of the clerk and marshal of said district to be maintained in each of said divisions, and for the appointment of a field deputy marshal in the division in which the marshal does not reside;

H. R. 16532. An act authorizing an adjustment of the boundaries of the Whitman National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes;

H. R. 16763. An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes;

H. R. 17645. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 237. Joint resolution authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster of Gulfport, Miss., with a special canceling die for the Mississippi Centennial Exposition celebration;

H. J. Res. 252. Joint resolution authorizing the transfer of the Government exhibit, or such portion thereof as the President may determine is advisable, now at the Panama-California International Exposition, at San Diego, Cal., to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition, at Gulfport, Miss.;

S. 5407. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to extend the time of payment of the amount due the Government by the city of Augusta, Ga.;

S. 3268. An act for the relief of John Duggan;

S. 3646. An act to amend the act of February 11, 1915 (38 Stat. L., p. 807), providing for the opening of the Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation;

S. 5987. An act to amend subsection 11 of section 3244, Revised Statutes;

S. 6561. An act providing for the sale at public auction of all unsold suburban lots not reserved for public purposes in the Government town site of Port Angeles, Wash., and for the issuance of patents for those previously sold under the act of May 2, 1906, on the payment of the price at which the said lots were reappraised under said act without further condition or delay;

S. 6748. An act providing that Indian schools may be maintained without restriction as to annual rate of expenditure per pupil; and

S. 6839. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Juneau, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction and equipment of schools therein, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution 60.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session of the Congress by adjourning their respective Houses on the 8th of September, 1916, at 10 o'clock ante meridian.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 8816. An act authorizing the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the sailing vessel Golden Gate to be registered as a vessel of the United States; and

H. J. Res. 282. Joint resolution authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster of Springfield, Ill., with a special canceling die for the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Federal Union.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 237. Joint resolution authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster of Gulfport, Miss., with a special canceling die for the Mississippi Centennial Exposition celebration;

H. J. Res. 252. Joint resolution authorizing the transfer of the Government exhibit, or such portion thereof as the President may determine is advisable, now at the Panama-California International Exposition at San Diego, Cal., to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition at Gulfport, Miss.;

H. R. 16532. An act authorizing an adjustment of the boundaries of the Whitman National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes;

H. R. 14533. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee simple to the district school board No. 112, of White Earth village, Becker County, Minn., for a certain tract of land upon payment therefor to the United States in trust for the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota;

H. R. 15807. An act to provide for holding sessions of the United States district court in the district of Maine and for dividing said district into divisions, and providing for offices of the clerk and marshal of said district to be maintained in each of said divisions, and for the appointment of a field deputy marshal in the division in which the marshal does not reside;

H. R. 13046. An act to consolidate certain forest lands in the Oregon National Forest, in the State of Oregon;

H. R. 2208. An act for the relief of James L. Yokum;

H. R. 6034. An act to make available a portion of the appropriation for the immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for such counters, booths, screens, railings, seats, bunks, kitchen and laundry equipment, etc., as necessary in connection with said station;

H. R. 10989. An act making appropriation for the preservation, improvement, and perpetual care of Huron Cemetery, a burial place of the Wyandotte Indians, in the city of Kansas City, Kans.

H. R. 1636. An act for the relief of Karen S. Sorenson and James Lyle;

H. R. 1963. An act for the relief of John E. Keys;

H. R. 16763. An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15287. An act authorizing the addition of certain lands to the Colorado and Pike National Forests, Colo.;

H. R. 14824. An act to prevent fraud at public auctions in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 12889. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell the unsold and unappropriated portions of lands within the town site of Newell, S. Dak., and for other purposes;

H. R. 17645. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11707. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War," approved April 19, 1908, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11472. An act to reserve certain lands and make them a part of the Pike National Forest;

S. J. Res. 173. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of September salaries to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the day of adjournment of the present session;

S. 136. An act for the relief of Eva M. Bowman;

S. J. Res. 169. Joint resolution interpreting section 50 of the act of June 3, 1916, for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes;

S. 6625. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls; and

S. 5886. An act extending the time for the completion of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., authorized by an act entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled 'An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River,'" approved August 23, 1912.

THANKS TO THE SPEAKER.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to proceed for a minute or two.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress is about drawing to a close. It is not customary at any but the last session of a Congress to present resolutions thanking the Speaker, but I can not let the occasion go by without expressing a thought or two concerning the House.

We have been blessed in this Congress by the presence, on this side of the aisle, of one of the greatest men and statesmen our country ever produced, former Speaker of the House, my colleague, the Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON. [General applause.] And I have watched with some admiration the growth and development which might naturally have been expected in the character of the majority leader of the House, the Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN [applause], and I congratulate the majority side of the House and the House itself upon the admirable qualities which he has displayed in the leadership of the House. [General applause.] And, Mr. Speaker, it is with a profound sense of the truth that I am glad to congratulate the country and the House upon the great Speaker of this House. [General applause.] The minority side of the House is largely dependent upon the fairness and the courtesy of the Speaker to protect its rights. That you have done, and the Republican membership of the House—aye, the entire membership of the House—thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the way you have presided over the House and so well filled the office, that great office, the Speakership. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. With the consent of the House, the Chair would like to make a remark or two. [Applause.]

I most heartily congratulate all of you on the fact that in a few minutes this long, tedious, and laborious session will be brought to an end. Until about three weeks ago, when the House got so far ahead of the Senate in the transaction of business that we have been kind of marking time ever since, no session of Congress within my recollection remained in session so many days and worked so many hours. It has been a marvelous performance in legislative history.

I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for his very kind remarks and fully reciprocate them, and I rejoice, as I have stated before, that I have the personal friendship of all the Members of the House regardless of difference in political faith. [Applause.] That will be one of the most pleasant recollections of my life whatever the future holds in store.

I am the only man I know of who invariably takes up the cudgels for Congress. [Applause.] No difference whether it is a lecture, a public speech, or a written essay, I always do that. Now, it is a very strange predicament that we are in in this country. Nearly everybody would like to have an office. A great many people run for office. A very few of them get office, and everybody, without any exception that I know of, abuses the people who do get office. [Laughter.] That is a strange thing, but it is true. I think the reason that they hop on Congress so much is because it is a kind of impersonal criticism. To criticize the President is to fire at the individual, and if they took a notion to fire at the Speaker I suppose they would single him out and fire at him, but they can talk about Congress without hurting the feelings of anybody in particular. So they keep it up. If I live much longer and serve here much longer, sometime I am going to take a whole hour to discuss the relations of the American Congress to the American people. [Applause.]

I thank you all and wish that you may make safe return to your homes and have a pleasant summer and get back next December in good shape.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois said that this Congress has been fortunate in some things. It has been extremely fortunate in the fact that only three Members of the House have died. At one time when this House had only 357 Members 17 Members died during one Congress and 3 of them were lying dead here in Washington at the same time. So I feel very much like giving thanks for us all that we are living and in good health. [Applause.]

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 10 minutes to follow the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. I asked for five minutes first, and then the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] got his time extended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is exactly correct. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. I ask unanimous consent to follow the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I have a statement to correspond with that of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the House, to follow the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MINORITY LEADER MANN.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I am not very much at flattery, and I do not know that I am so constituted that I can ever entertain a deeply rooted and intense love for a Republican; but I believe I can honestly say, speaking for the generality of the Democratic membership, that while we are opposed to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] on partisan grounds, every Member on this side of the House has a sincere admiration for his marvelous industry and capacity for legislative work. [Applause.] His peculiar gifts are not only genuinely admired, but everyone appreciates that they are exercised for the welfare and best interests of the country. While I have no particular inclination to mix up in Republican squabbles, I know that all men who have honestly at heart the interests of the American Republic are deeply interested in the contest waged in his absence from his district against the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Regardless of the effect upon his personal political fortunes, he is here as attentive as ever to his public duties. We not only wish him success because of our personal regard for him, but we hope that he will succeed in his party contest, whatever the other contests may have in store, because we believe it to be best for the country. [Applause.]

We congratulate him upon the fidelity with which he has devoted himself to his duties, and we commend his attention and industry to all present and prospective Members of the House as an example to be emulated if their duties are to be properly discharged. [Applause.]

ATLANTIC DEEPER WATERWAYS ASSOCIATION.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HULBERT. To ask unanimous consent for one moment to put a question to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection either on the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania or on the part of the House? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULBERT. In the consideration of the question of politics we have overlooked the consideration of the waterways, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] when the convention of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association will be held?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman from New York for the opportunity. In Philadelphia next week there will be an interesting convention of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, to which every Member of this Congress is invited. I promise those, especially from the South or West, whom we would like to know better, that if they will come to Philadelphia on their way home we will take good care of them for a week, give them a good time, and show them something in waterways worth seeing.

Mr. MANN. We know they will take them in. [Laughter.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. HOPWOOD, Mr. GARLAND, Mr. BOWERS, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. FOCHT, Mr. MCARTHUR, Mr. HILLIARD, Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota, Mr. GLYNN, Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. RAKER, Mr. HARDY, Mr. MANN, Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, Mr. TAGUE, Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS, Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. NORTON, Mr. MONDELL, Mr. HASTINGS, and Mr. OLDFIELD were also granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, world conditions are abnormal. Fifteen of the foremost nations of civilization are involved in the most bloody war in the history of mankind. Modern inventions have so annihilated the inconveniences of communication that no nation longer enjoys isolation, and all are affected by the present disturbance of the heretofore existing amity and peace among civilized men.

The world is ablaze. No one can predict where the sparks will drop nor what other fires may be lighted before the conflagration ends.

Our people have awakened to this fact, and to the belief that even the United States are not so completely isolated from the Old World as to be free from all possibility of entanglement before the conflict stops. With this awakening came a close scrutiny and a careful survey of our facilities and readiness for defense against possible aggressions.

The entire country seemed to have suddenly heard reechoing from the past those significant words of that great Democratic President, the late Grover Cleveland, who, in transmitting the report of the Endicott Board to Congress on May 12, 1885, said:

> • • • We have acquired great riches and apparently dreamed that prosperity should inspire friendship and not envy in less-favored peoples—forgetting that riches are a temptation, and that the plunder of one of our seaports might abundantly reimburse an enemy for the expenses of a war conducted against us.

With this very idea everywhere prevalent a movement was initiated to make our country secure against possible attack, and a Democratic Congress has responded to the demand by making provision for the national defense, as President Wilson said in his speech of acceptance, "upon a scale never before seriously proposed upon the responsibility of an entire political party."

As a result of such action the appropriations made at this session of Congress are necessarily far beyond those heretofore made for the support of the Government. They are unprecedented in amount; they are vitally essential to the security and development of the country; they are not excessive when the imperative needs of the Government are considered.

Although charges have been indiscriminately made for partisan political purposes that the Democratic administration is wasteful and grossly extravagant, a careful analysis of the appropriations made at this session completely refutes such partisan contentions.

TOTAL APPROPRIATIONS AND CONTRACTS.

The specific appropriations made during the session for all objects of expenditure for the Government amount to $1,626,439,209.63. In addition to the direct appropriations contracts are authorized to be entered into obligating Congress to make appropriations hereafter in the sum of $231,945,275.20. These contract obligations include $225,266,325.20 for naval and coast-defense purposes. The remainder, $6,678,950, is for ordinary objects of Government.

During the last year of a Republican administration under Mr. Taft, the contract liabilities authorized for ordinary purposes, exclusive of naval or other national-defense objects, aggregated the sum of $46,758,650, or an excess of $40,079,700 over those of this session. Of the total contracts in excess of appropriations authorized for that year only $21,746,524 were for national defense and $38,347,850 were for public buildings. At this session contracts are authorized in the sum of $225,266,325.20 for national defense and no contracts whatever for new public buildings.

AMOUNTS FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE.

That President Wilson did not exaggerate when he stated that "we have provided for national defense upon a scale never before seriously proposed upon the responsibility of an entire political party" is conclusively established by the mere statement of what this Democratic Congress has done.

The appropriations for military and naval purposes and for additional seacoast defenses alone amount to $685,709,823.09. These appropriations have been provided in the following manner:

Army appropriation act	$267,596,530.10
Naval appropriation act	313,300,555.84
Fortification appropriation act	25,747,550.00
Military Academy act	1,225,043.57
Sundry civil appropriation act:
Armories and arsenals	4,683,495.00
Military posts	1,616,000.00
Military surveys	35,000.00
Panama Canal fortifications	4,535,000.00
Deficiency appropriations, Military and Naval Establishments	46,770,648.58
National Guard camps	200,000,000.00
Nitrate plant	20,000,000.00
Total	685,709,823.09

But these appropriations do not cover all the provisions made for the national defense. Extraordinary as they are in contrast with any provision made in previous years, their significance can be appreciated only by considering the direct appropriations with certain other provisions.

In addition to the foregoing sum for the public defense, expendable before July 1, 1917, contract obligations to be met by appropriation at the next or subsequent sessions of Congress have been authorized amounting to $225,266,325.20, making a grand total of actual appropriations and contract obligations on account of preparedness of $910,976,148.29.

But even those statements do not tell the whole story. In addition to the vast sums thus provided under the Democratic administration the Congress has specifically authorized, and for the first time in our history established, a definite naval building program, involving the construction and armor and armament within the next three years of 90 additional war vessels that will cost $295,000,000 additional when they are completed and in commission. This sum added to the amount actually appropriated and the sum of the contracts authorized to be entered into make a grand total of $1,205,976,148.29 for military and naval purposes, or for preparedness, so called, to meet the recommendations of military experts as to our necessities for national defense.

CLEVELAND AND TILDEN PREPAREDNESS PIONEERS.

Fortunately now, as at another critical period in our history, the Democratic Party is in control of the Government. On December 1, 1885, Samuel J. Tilden, an illustrious Democrat, who put the peace and happiness of his countrymen above his personal ambitions and submitted to a series of acts resulting in his exclusion from the Presidency, to which he had been lawfully chosen, rather than to plunge his country into disastrous civil strife, addressed a memorable letter to John G. Carlisle, the prospective Speaker of the House of Representatives, upon the question of the country's seacoast defenses. In it he laid down the Democratic doctrine that has been revived during this Congress. He said:

The best guaranty against aggression, the best assurance that our diplomacy will be successful and pacific and that our rights and honor will be respected by other nations, is in their knowledge that we are in a situation to vindicate our reputation and interest.

During the first administration of President Cleveland the comprehensive and admirably planned scheme of coast defenses involving expenditures of upward of $150,000,000 was initiated, and our modern steel navy was begun, both of which accomplishments have inseparably linked the names of the Secretaries of War and of the Navy in that administration, Endicott and Whitney, with the defense of the country.

History is now found repeating itself. Again, after a long period of uninterrupted control of the Government by the Republican Party, the country awakens to the fact that our military establishments are inadequate.

It would be futile to attempt to determine whether this condition resulted from the incompetency, the negligence, or the indifference of the Republican Party. It is sufficient to know that twice in the period of 50 years since the Civil War, after long and uninterrupted control by Republicans, the country's defenses were rehabilitated and its military establishments were modernized by legislation of Democratic origin and inception.

REPUBLICAN PARTY NEGLIGENT.

During the 16 years of Republican control just preceding this Democratic administration ample warnings had been given by experts of our military needs. While appropriations were withheld as in that other period preceding the Democratic administration of 1885, appropriations for river and harbor work aggregating $436,121,816.20 and of $178,900,041.18 for public buildings were made, and, in addition, obligations amounting to $38,347,850 were approved by Mr. Taft in the omnibus public-buildings act, all three sums aggregating $653,369,707.38. This sum practically equals the direct amount—$685,709,823.09—appropriated at this session of Congress for the public defense. It is not contended that all of the appropriations for river and harbor improvements and for public buildings were not necessary; but it can not successfully be maintained that a very large percentage of the appropriations made for such purposes might not more appropriately have been made for the public defense to the greater advantage and security of the country, as well as for the benefit of the taxpayers.

SUMS FOR NEW GOVERNMENT ACTIVITIES.

New Government activities of a major character undertaken during this Democratic administration for which appropriations have been necessitated are provided for in the appropriations of this session in the following manner:

To encourage, develop, and create a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine	$50,100,000
Federal aid in the construction of good roads	6,000,000
Establishment of Federal farm-loan banks	6,200,000
Federal Employees' Compensation Commission	550,000
Tariff Commission	300,000
Construction of railroads in Alaska to develop its coal fields	8,247,620
Expenses of collecting the income tax	1,828,000
Federal Trade Commission	444,080
Eight-Hour Day Commission	50,000
Total	73,719,700

A YEAR OF WILSON AND TAFT.

The fiscal year 1914 was the last for which appropriations were made under a Republican administration.

The expenditures for the Postal Service authorized in the appropriations at this session, as compared with the like appropriations for that year, show an increase of $37,561,408. This increase has been due to the improvement of the service and the extension of its benefits to millions of our inhabitants previously excluded from its advantages. The Parcel Post System has been made genuinely efficient, and 10,000 additional rural routes and extensions have been established, thus giving to 3,000,000 additional persons free-delivery service.

For pensions there was appropriated for 1914 $37,335,000 more than the sum required to meet all obligations under pension laws at this session. The $195,400,000 appropriated on this account at that time included, it is estimated, more than $37,500,000 arising under the general service pension act of May 11, 1912, which was initiated and passed by the Democratic House of Representatives of the Sixty-second Congress. The inexorable toll of advancing age has reduced the ranks of the honored veterans of the Civil War, and alone is responsible for the considerable reduction in our annual expenditures for Army and Navy pensions.

In order to arrive at a reasonable basis of comparison of the appropriations made for ordinary expenses of the Government for the third year of Mr. Wilson's administration with those made for the final year of Mr. Taft's administration there should be deducted from the grand total of the appropriations of this session the three sums I have heretofore mentioned, namely:

For national defense and preparedness	$685,709,823.09
For new and progressive activities	73,719,700.00
For increase on account of the Postal Service	37,561,408.00
Total	796,990,931.09

For the purposes of this comparison the total appropriations made for 1914 under Mr. Taft's approval should also be reduced not only by all national-defense appropriations but also by the apparent excess for pensions over the amount appropriated for this session, namely, $37,335,000.

By those eliminations a sound and logical basis for comparison as between the fiscal years 1914 and 1917 is established, and furnishes accurate information as to appropriations under this administration and the preceding Republican administration.

Appropriations made this session for ordinary expenses of Government, after deducting amounts of the national defense, new and progressive activities, and increase for the Postal Service	$829,548,278.54
Appropriations for 1914, less amounts for the national defense and after deducting the excess over the sum appropriated this session for pensions	804,743,125.94
Increase 1917 over 1914	24,805,152.60

The excess in ordinary annual appropriations thus arrived at for which this Congress is responsible and for which it does not shun fair criticism represents an increase of 3.08 per cent.

The estimated population of the country at the beginning of the fiscal year 1914 was 97,337,000, and at the commencement of the fiscal year 1917 it was placed at 102,431,000, an increase of 5,094,000, or 5.23 per cent.

The percentage increase in population in 1917 over 1914 is thus shown to be 5.23 per cent while the percentage increase of appropriations for ordinary expenses of Government under a Democratic administration is only 3.08 per cent, notwithstanding the demands of the public service imposed by three years of the unexampled prosperity which the country has enjoyed. When it is recalled that for the first 111 years of the country's existence the expenditures for the Federal Government increased five times more rapidly than the population it is apparent that the increase in normal expenditures during the past three years is exceedingly small.

Comparing the appropriations for the ordinary operating expenses of the Government for the two years under consideration on the basis of population, the following results are arrived at:

For 1914, per capita, $8.26.

For 1917, per capita, $8.09.

AN EFFICIENT AND PROFITABLE POSTAL SERVICE.

The Postal Service constitutes the one great business activity of the Government. The universal and unprecedented prosperity throughout the country is aptly reflected in the enormous increase in postal revenues and their excess over expenses. It provides a surplus for the last fiscal year of $5,742,445, which supplements the general funds in the Treasury and makes a total surplus of $12,500,000 during this administration. As the Postal Service is purely a business activity it should be, and under this administration is, self-sustaining. It is proper to exclude its revenues and expenditures in comparisons of ordinary expenditures of government. This fact is so well recognized that the daily Treasury statement was revised under the Republican administration for this very purpose.

During the 15 years ending with the fiscal year 1912, when the Republican Party was in complete control of every branch of the Government, only once was there a surplus of postal revenue over postal expenses, and then in a sum scarcely exceeding $200,000. The total excess of postal expenses over the postal receipts during that period amounted to $115,323,897.26.

That sum was obtained from funds collected as taxes in other forms. Proper business management of the service, such as has prevailed during the present administration, would have permitted $115,000,000 to have been utilized for other imperative governmental needs, or taxes to have been reduced in that sum. Failure to administer the service as a business rather than as a political institution constitutes a monument to Republican incapacity and is an unhappy reminder of the days when the Post Office Department was the reward for successful campaign management rather than for demonstrated capacity and efficiency in public office.

Against the record of extravagant and unprofitable postal mismanagement under Republican administration for 15 years the Democratic administration during its brief existence has turned into the Treasury a profit of $12,500,000, at the same time extending the city free-delivery service to hundreds of cities and to more than 5,000,000 additional patrons, and, as heretofore stated, establishing more than 10,000 additional rural free-delivery routes and extensions, increasing the number of persons served on rural routes from 23,278,290 to 26,307,685. More convincing evidence of the superior management of this greatest of all business activities of the Government under Democratic administration than under Republican administration could not be conceived. It is conclusive of the unrivaled and universal prosperity which prevails as a result of Democratic policies and Democratic control.

NORMAL GROWTH IN EXPENDITURES.

Comparing in detail the appropriations for ordinary governmental purposes made this session in the regular annual appropriation acts, in miscellaneous acts, and estimated amounts under permanent appropriations, with the like appropriations made for the fiscal year 1914 under estimates and recommendations of the Taft administration, excluding for both years increases or reductions for pensions, Postal Service, national defense, and certain specified new activities, it will be found that the total increases made amount to $25,731,102.72 and the reductions to $925,950.12, a net increase, as already stated, of $24,805,152.60, or to be more specific the detailed increases and reductions are made as follows:

Increases:
Agricultural Department	$6,961,907.00
Diplomatic and Consular Service	1,624,454.00
District of Columbia government	1,457,968.10
Indian Service	1,480,825.21
Legislative, executive, and judicial expenses, excluding increased amounts for income tax and war tax	925,255.75
Sundry civil expenses, exclusive of Alaskan railroad, Federal Trade Commission, and for national defense purposes for 1917	261,191.23
Deficiencies, excluding Alaskan railroad, collecting war taxes, employees' compensation commission, and national-defense items	10,958,098.55
Miscellaneous, exclusive of national defense sums and certain specified new activities	2,061,402.88
Total	25,731,102.72
Reductions, not considering pensions:
River and harbor acts, not including amounts to meet contracts	474,959.00
Permanent appropriations, excluding the national defense items	450,991.12
Total	925,950.12
A net increase, as stated, of	24,805,152.60

An analysis in brief of the several increases and reductions thus shown by appropriation acts will naturally interest those who care to study the question of Federal expenditures.

AID TO AGRICULTURE.

The increase of $6,961,907 for the Agricultural Department and the advancement of the agricultural industry of the country includes $989,550 increase for the Bureau of Animal Industry; $2,969,680 for the States Relations Service and farmers' cooperative demonstration work; $319,800 for investigation and demonstration work of public roads and rural engineering; and $1,250,000 for eradication of the foot-and-mouth and other diseases of animals. Compared item by item, it is shown that the agricultural act for 1917 carries $7,746,907 more for material work of vast import to farmers than did the act for 1914, and such increases were unavoidable if the department was to continue increasing its highly beneficial activities in the interest of agriculture and those directly engaged in farming.

FOREIGN RELATIONS EXPANDED.

The additional sum of $1,624,454 for the Diplomatic and Consular Service includes increases of $25,000 for clerks at embassies; $43,585 for contingent expenses at embassies; $150,000 for emergencies arising in the service, to be expended by the President; $355,000 for a building in China for consular and other offices of the United States; $100,000 for a legation building in Cuba; $102,000 for additional consular officers; $150,000 for allowances to consular officers on account of increased cost of living in countries engaged in the foreign war; $118,000 for clerical services at consulates; and $125,400 for contingent expenses of consulates. Much of the increase has been due to unavoidable conditions resulting from the present war.

Our Consular Service, now the most extended of any in the world, has been fostered and expanded by this administration until it is the equal of that of any nation, and its growth reflects commensurately the expanding commercial relations of our people with the rest of the world.

THE NATION'S CAPITAL.

The act providing for the expenses of the District of Columbia carries an increase of $1,457,968.10 over its expenses of three years ago. The largest single object of expense is that of the public schools, which is provided for in the sum of $2,915,349 for 1917. The school system of the Capital is recognized as a model for all cities. For improvement of suburban streets in the District and city streets and alleys an increase of $468,510 is given over like purposes in 1914. Other activities, such as the health department, fire department, police department, water service, improvement of the water front, charitable and correctional institutions, are provided for in sums increased proportionately to the growth and advancement of the city that has become in every desirable feature the rival of any capital city in the world. The increases are the result of the natural growth of the city, and are eloquent of the determination of Congress to maintain it in a manner commensurate with the power and dignity of the Nation.

INDIAN SERVICE.

The increase on account of the Indian Service of $1,480,825.21 includes more than $1,000,000 for works of irrigation to reclaim arid lands belonging to Indians and to enable them to become self-supporting through agriculture. The remainder of the increase is chiefly in appropriations for education and civilization.

COLLECTING THE INCOME TAX.

For the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government there is an increase, after deducting the amount of $1,828,000 added since 1914 on account of the Internal-Revenue Service for collecting the income tax and the war revenue tax, of only $925,255.75 over the sum provided for 1914, and is $88,411.75 less than the increase made for the same purposes in 1914 over the amount given for 1911 or three years previously. Included in the increase for 1917 is the sum of $175,000 for promoting commerce with South and Central America and for commercial attachés to study and report industrial conditions abroad. Those new services in behalf of the manufacturing and commercial interests of the country give promise of incalculable benefits, and are the effective methods by which enlarged and new markets are being established abroad for the American manufacturer and for the products of our farms.

When it is recalled that under 16 years of control of the legislative, executive, and judicial services of the Government the Republicans increased the expenses therefor from $21,625,846.65 for 1899 to $35,172,434.50 for 1914, the modest increase of less than $1,000,000 in a period of three years by this Congress seems insignificant indeed at this period of unprecedented governmental activity and unparalleled industrial development throughout the country.

ALASKAN RAILROAD AND PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

The sundry civil act, while it shows a net increase of $261,191.23 after deducting national-defense sums and the amount for the Alaskan railroad for 1917 and all national-defense sums from the act of 1914, carries an increase for 1917 over 1914 for the Public Health Service, including the investigation of diseases of man, of $533,410, and an increase of $150,000 for the regular work of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

REPUBLICAN CRITICISM INSINCERE.

This necessarily brief analysis of the appropriations made at this session of Congress affords some conception of the annual requirements of the complicated machinery of government and the multifarious details for which provision must be made. Five hundred printed pages of law in octavo form are required to express the appropriations at this session. The testimony taken by the Committee on Appropriations alone in the preparation of the five annual bills under its control and the deficiency bills embraces nearly 5,000 printed octavo pages.

The consideration of the bills in the House and Senate has consumed many days and weeks and their discussion in the two Houses fills hundreds of pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. That our Republican associates in the House and Senate have not found fault with many of the countless purposes of these appropriations in the process of their authorization but have made many bitter complaints at alleged inadequacy in many instances should estop them from assailing the total of the appropriations now that the session is ended. They did not object to the appropriation of $685,709,823.09 given for the Army and Navy defense, or to the further sum of $225,266,325.20 for direct contracts and $295,000,000 involved in the three-year naval policy for 90 additional warships. Indeed they were, or pretended to be, dissatisfied that greater appropriations were not provided for those purposes.

The appropriation of $322,937,679 for the Postal Service likewise met no opposition in either House from Republican Members.

The increase of nearly $7,000,000 for the agricultural interests of the country was as popular with the opposition membership as it will be among those who till the soil, and no effort from whatever source to curtail such expenditures would be seriously regarded by the Congress.

Appropriations for river and harbor improvements have been viewed by the country with increasing suspicion. The reasons are well known and it is unnecessary to review them here. At this session appropriations and contract authorizations for river and harbor improvements have been $13,545,804 less than for 1914, and only $7,263,750 has been appropriated for public buildings, and no additional ones have been authorized, while during the last days of Mr. Taft's administration the appropriations and authorizations for new buildings amounted to $54,305,617, and more than $42,000,000 of the latter constituted obligations much of which has fallen on this Congress to meet.

PEACE, PROSPERITY, AND PREPAREDNESS.

Our national expenditures wisely and judiciously provided at this session of Congress represent the cost of a beneficent government of a nation enjoying unrivaled prosperity in every line of human activity, unexampled progress in all of the arts and industries as well as the science of government, peace throughout its own territory and with all other nations, and the preparedness to repel, if need be, any belligerent foe. Contrasting the appropriations, amounting to $1,626,439,209.63, with the enormous sums expended and the colossal indebtedness incurred by the warring nations of the Old World in their mad struggle for supremacy, there is ample cause for rejoicing at our own good fortune. By comparison our national expenditures are insignificant and the service and benefits procured therefrom exceed the power of human intelligence to measure.

Our expenditures signify prosperity, progress, peace, and preparedness. The nations abroad are expending their substance in a mad riot of death and destruction.

AN IMPRACTICABLE PLATFORM.

The Republican Party in its platform pledges its support to a "simple businesslike budget system" as a means of securing economy and efficiency in public expenditures. What is contemplated by such a declaration has not been explained and is difficult to ascertain.

Mr. Taft established an efficiency commission with a chairman at $10,000 a year and four commissioners and a secretary at $6,000 each. The commission labored for three years. It spent $260,000 directly appropriated to them and many other hundreds of thousands of dollars by useless waste of time of highly paid employees of the Government who should have been otherwise engaged, and in the printing of excessive quantities of reports that never were deemed worthy of perusal by anyone outside of their immediate circle. Most of the time of this famous commission was devoted to the construction of a "businesslike budget system." They made two distinct deliverances. The first when launched evidently was not even to their liking, for they with due deliberation produced another, and then Congress put a stop to their activities in this particular direction by forbidding any change in the long-established and comprehensive form of estimates of appropriations required of the Executive which was the result of a century and a quarter of experience and careful observation by men peculiarly fitted for such work. The businesslike budget system contemplated by Mr. Taft's commission involved a material amendment to the Constitution, transferring the control of public expenditures, and incidentally the power of taxation, from the representatives of the people to the President and his Cabinet, the latter composed of officials unknown to the Constitution and chosen by him from among personal and political friends, and accountable practically to no authority other than that of the President.

The whole proposition was so preposterous and intolerable that when a Democratic House of Representatives refused further continuance of appropriations to those who composed what is known to fame as the "Taft Efficiency Commission" not one Representative or Senator of any party raised a voice in its behalf. Their greatest efficiency was displayed in the thorough manner in which they consumed in salaries the last penny of the sums appropriated for their work.

Not only does the Republican platform declare for such a "budget" but its candidate is proclaiming his determination to establish it.

At present the State of New York has a governor who was the leader in the Chicago convention of the forces urging the nomination of Justice Hughes. Gov. Whitman professes to be an admirer of Justice Hughes and a believer in, and practicer of, the same political faith and governmental policies. He initiated a so-called responsible executive budget upon his assumption of the governorship of New York. The result of his efforts to economize and to establish a businesslike budget has been a dismal failure, and resulted in an increase of $14,000,000 in expenditures, practically 30 per cent over the expenditures of his Democratic predecessor.

Such efforts to accomplish reform in public expenditure are doomed at the very outset. Our theory of government and our institutions do not permit the adoption of what many really seek—the British method of preparing a budget. It is a curious anomaly that while many publicists in the United States are so lavish in their praise and so determined in their advocacy of the British budget system, in England it is now, and for some years has been, the subject of severe condemnation. In "British War Finance, 1914–15," Mr. W. R. Lawson, a writer of considerable note on financial matters, discusses extensively and condemns severely in the chapter entitled "The doom of the one-man budget," the system prevalent in Great Britain.

A careful perusal of this chapter would undoubtedly enlighten and effectively silence many who so glibly advocate the adoption in our Government of a plan similar to the British system.

A SENSIBLE PROPOSAL.

The Democratic Party, in its platform adopted at St. Louis in June, announced the only feasible, practical, and effective system of Treasury control. As the House of Representatives under the Constitution is the guardian of the public purse, its control can be effective only under certain conditions.

The essential for such control is the concentration in one body or committee of jurisdiction of expenditures from the public funds. It is the ancient and effective system of our Government. Public opinion will eventually compel such a reform. Undoubtedly there are serious difficulties in the way of its accomplishment. The natural ambitions of Representatives, the fear that excessive power will result to a smaller number of Representatives, a disinclination to surrender power now exercised by other committees, all are potent to prevent the change.

But the best for the country is the real desire of every Member of Congress. They continually subordinate individual views and ambitions in a patriotic desire to serve their country effectively, and that deep-rooted and predominating sentiment among the representatives of the people will be persuasive for the proper reform when the time is opportune.

The extraordinary expenditures authorized at this session have necessarily required additional tax burdens. Our country is rich, its people are prosperous. Compared with the burdens levied under normal conditions in other countries our tax burdens are light. As they increase a keener interest will be awakened among greater numbers in public expenditures and in our national finances. The more extensive such interest the better for our country, for its results will be more efficient administration, more careful scrutiny of governmental expenditures, more thorough consideration of governmental activities, more rigid accountability by public officials for their policies and their conduct.

I ask the Members of the House to examine this statement carefully. I know it will be heartening to men who have confidence in the Democratic Party, and I am certain that it will be helpful to those of our political opponents who may contemplate making reckless and indiscriminate charges against the Democratic administration to revise their views carefully, and instead of condemning, if they decide to say anything, to join in the hearty wave of approval to which this Democratic administration and all its acts are meeting everywhere in the country, regardless of the partisan professions of individuals. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Chronological history of appropriation bills, first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress: estimates and appropriations for the fiscal year 1916–17; and appropriations for the fiscal year 1915–16.

[Prepared by the clerks to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House.]

Title.	Estimates, 1917.	Reported to the House.	Passed the House.	Reported to the Senate.	Passed the Senate.	Law, 1916–17.	Law, 1915–16.
Agriculture	$24,159,089.00	$24,501,093.00	$24,673,393.00	$23,928,820.00	$25,230,527.00	$24,948,852.00	$22,971,782.00
Army	150,931,483.47	(157,223,246.10)	(182,303,356.10)	(330,599,010.10)	(313,970,447.10) [1]	(267,596,530.10) [1]	101,974,195.87
		267,596,530.10	267,596,530.10	267,596,530.10	267,596,530.10	267,596,530.10
Diplomatic and Consular	5,426,698.70	5,483,246.66	5,068,346.66	5,259,096.66	5,301,096.66	5,355,098.66	4,061,280.01
District of Columbia [2]	15,473,676.34	11,894,737.34	11,931,817.34	14,952,002.96	13,827,734.72	12,841,707.10	11,859,584.45
Fortifications	23,305,123.80	21,997,050.00	22,368,050.00	25,120,110.00	26,257,110.00	25,747,550.00	6,060,216.90
Indian	10,175,036.66	9,350,646.66	8,961,437.66	12,077,187.44	11,998,796.44	10,967,644.88	9,771,902.76
Legislative, etc	39,749,377.25	37,601,539.25	37,616,049.25	38,196,762.25	38,210,002.25	37,925,690.25	36,904,799.75
Military Academy	1,422,775.77	1,218,804.57	1,218,804.57	2,239,328.57	2,238,544.57	1,225,043.57	1,039,813.37
Navy	217,652,174.24	241,371,858.59	209,891,961.34	315,720,516.54	316,726,556.54	313,300,555.84	149,661,864.88
Pension	160,565,000.00	158,065,000.00	158,065,000.00	158,065,000.00	158,065,000.00	158,065,000.00	164,100,000.00
Post Office [3]	316,364,879.00	321,352,979.00	321,352,979.00	322,905,679.00	322,915,679.00	322,937,679.00	313,364,667.00
River and Harbor	[4] 44,376,710.00	37,898,410.00	37,898,410.00	40,889,935.00	41,723,935.00	[5] 40,598,135.00	[6] 30,000,000.00
Sundry civil	[7] 141,181,110.93	127,237,221.24	127,540,651.24	128,246,445.24	129,657,186.67	[8] 128,299,285.24	[9] 126,922,750.79
Supplemental estimates	[10] 112,000,000.00
Total regular annual appropriations	1,262,782,135.16	1,265,569,116.41	1,234,230,430.16	1,355,196,413.76	1,359,746,698.95	1,349,808,709.64	978,722,857.78
Urgent deficiency 1916, mail bags, etc		191,444.17	191,444.17	197,684.17	197,684.17	197,684.17
Urgent deficiency 1916, and prior years, general		12,572,304.30	12,572,076.92	13,523,247.17	13,526,247.17	13,442,097.17
Urgent deficiency, Navy, etc	[10] 76,000,000.00	3,260,800.00	3,260,800.00	3,442,800.00	3,609,046.06	3,479,046.06	12,316,243.90
Urgent deficiency, Army		8,611,502.11	8,611,502.11	8,611,502.11	8,611,502.11	8,611,502.11
Urgent deficiency, Army and Navy		25,952,068.83	27,536,068.83	27,536,068.83	27,536,068.83	27,536,068.83
Deficiency, 1916, and prior years		14,326,272.33	14,332,069.11	15,467,968.66	15,741,870.54	[10] 15,288,468.65
Total, regular annual and deficiency appropriations	1,338,783,135.16	1,330,483,508.15	1,360,734,391.30	1,423,975,684.70	1,428,969,117.83	1,418,364,536.63	991,039,201.68
Miscellaneous						[11] 85,000,000.00	2,330,603.34
Total, regular annual, deficiency, and miscellaneous appropriations						1,503,364,536.63	993,369,805.02
Permanent annual and indefinite appropriations	[12] 135,074,673.00					[12] 123,074,673.00	121,567,207.00
Grand total, regular annual, deficiency, miscellaneous, and permanent annual and indefinite appropriations	1,473,857,808.16					[13] 1,626,439,209.63	[14] 1,114,937,012.02

[1] The Army bill for 1917, as originally passed, was vetoed by the President on Aug. 18, 1916. The amounts of the vetoed bill are set forth in parentheses in order to preserve its history, but the amounts are not included in any of the totals stated herein.

[2] One-half of the amounts for the District of Columbia payable by the United States, except amounts for the water service (estimated for 1917 at $130,480), which are payable from the revenues of the water department.

[3] The expenses of the Postal Service are payable from postal revenues to the extent that they are sufficient therefor and the remainder is paid out of the Treasury. For the fiscal year 1917 the sum of $8,000,000 is estimated, under permanent annual and indefinite appropriations, as the amount required from the General Treasury to supplement the postal revenues.

[4] In addition to this amount, the sum of $1,462,800 to meet contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements is included in the sundry civil estimates for 1917.

[5] In addition to this amount, the sum of $1,462,800 is appropriated in the sundry civil act to carry out contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements for 1917.

[6] In addition to this amount, the sum of $3,982,000 was appropriated in the sundry civil act to carry out contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements for 1916.

[7] This amount includes $1,462,800 to carry out contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements, and $27,535,469.13 for construction, maintenance, operation, and fortification of the Panama Canal for 1917.

[8] This amount includes $1,462,800 to carry out contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements, and $21,335,000 for construction, maintenance, operation, and fortification of the Panama Canal for 1917.

[9] This amount includes $12,186,550 for construction of public buildings; $3,982,000 to carry out contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements; $19,579,048.30 for the construction, maintenance, operation, and fortification of the Panama Canal; and $13,530,000 for the Reclamation Service previously provided for under permanent appropriations.

[10] This amount is approximated.

[11] This amount is approximated, and includes $50,100,000 in the shipping act; $20,000,000 in the national-defense act; $6,000,000 in the good-roads act; $6,100,000 in the farm-loan act.

[12] This is the amount submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury in the annual estimates for the fiscal year 1917, reduced in stating the appropriation for 1917 in the sums of $4,000,000 on account of the repeal of the permanent appropriations for the Organized Militia and $8,000,000 for postal deficiency included in amount of annual postal appropriation act. The exact amount appropriated under permanent appropriations is not ascertainable until two years after the close of the fiscal year. This sum includes estimated amount of $90,727,000 to meet sinking-fund obligations for 1917.

[13] In addition to this amount contracts are authorized to be entered into, subject to future appropriations by Congress, as follows: By the District of Columbia act, $700,000; by the fortification act, $13,800,000; by the naval act, $209,459,325.20; by the river and harbor act, $2,287,950; by the sundry civil act, $5,107,000; by the deficiency acts, $500,000, and by the Sandusky, Ohio, public building act, $85,000; in all, $231,945,275.20.

[14] In addition to this amount contracts are authorized to be entered into, subject to future appropriations by Congress, as follows: By the District of Columbia act, $100,000; by the fortification act, $300,000; by the naval act, $37,000,000; in all, $37,400,000.

THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] explain why the Democratic Party has piled up expenses so enormously during this session of Congress. We have been waiting a long time for this explanation from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Only this morning have we been able to find out, according to the gentleman from New York, it is due to "an increase in the population," not to the desire to create offices at all. Oh, no; nor to the insistence upon vast expenses for Government-ownership propositions, not at all. It is due to "the increase in the population." That is a new one and a good one, Mr. Speaker, and I trust the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], who is to answer the gentleman from New York, will explain it a little more fully when he comes to take the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I have not approved of most of the legislation that has been passed during this session of Congress. I think we have had entirely too much legislation. Sometimes it has seemed to me that this Congress has wasted its time, although every Member of it has worked hard, in addition to wasting the public money and increasing the public taxes. As a rule I have opposed the general course of this Congress. I believe that its legislation, generally speaking, has been vicious and hurtful to the country, and that there will be an accounting by the people in November next. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Personally, however—for we have spent nine long months here together—I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the Speaker of this House has presided over it with rare courtesy, and that our compliments are due to him. I appreciate also the courtesy of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and while it has not been the privilege of the minority to meet often with him in conference during this session of Congress, nevertheless in those few brief moments when we have had an opportunity to get together, he has been as civil and courteous as a gentleman could be. [Applause.]

I want also to join with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], who has just paid tribute to the Republican leader of this House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The Republican floor leader is unquestionably the foremost parliamentarian of his time. [Applause.] He is a hard worker, too hard a worker some of us on this side of the House believe, and as we all of us feel in our hearts that higher honors are soon in store for him, we trust that his brief vacation may be one devoted to healthful recreation in that beautiful garden of his in Chicago, so that he may come back refreshed, with a keenness of tongue and a punch to his elbow that will be effective next year when the Republican Party again undertakes to regulate properly the affairs of this Government. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Personally, Mr. Speaker, no Member appreciates the confidence and the friendship of the Members upon the other side more than do I, and if at times shafts have been passing hither and fro across the aisle, so far as I am concerned, there has been no bitterness, no spirit of malevolence, naught but kindness in all that has been said. It has been "give and take" in the fairest sense. If you have stood for your party or your State, it has been according as your lights directed you, and so it has been with me. From Mississippi or Texas or Pennsylvania, we have simply stood our ground, doing our duty as we saw it, and I hope it shall so continue to be. I have not objected to a Member from Texas defending Texas, nor one from Mississippi defending his State, if he thought it proper to do so. Any one of us would be unworthy of membership in this House if we did not do our best to truly represent those who sent us here. There is no occasion for bitterness or malice to mar our daily proceedings. Now, let it go at that. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has invited a controversy this morning by attacking the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] and I want to say to him, because I have not the time to answer him at length, that the crux of that speech, as I understood it, was that Cleveland H. Dodge, a personal friend of the President, was not only in the munitions business, dealing with the armed forces of Mexico—the armed banditti that were coming over the border—but he was also one of the most liberal contributors to the Wilson campaign fund. That seemed a fair matter for criticism on the part of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG]. We can not be expected to overlook these things. We have observed in the appointment of ambassadors, that men who were contributors to campaign funds have been in favor with this administration from the highest down. This is fair material for a discussion of this kind. If men who contribute to campaigns are given high place in the Democratic Party, it is important. The people ought to know it. And if they are making money out of munitions or the raising or lowering of embargoes that is news that Congress ought to have.

But, Mr. Speaker, what I rose to say is this: In the RECORD of this morning the distinguished and eloquent gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] has inserted a speech on the eight-hour law. He has undertaken to defend that law. He has undertaken in this speech to attack Members upon this side of the House who have spoken against the methods by which the eight-hour law was forced down the throats of the Members of Congress. He speaks somewhat by way of apology for the President, and relieves him from total responsibility for the passage of the Adamson law. He indicates that there was some personal responsibility for this measure.

On September 1 I read into the RECORD from his speech of July 15, 1916, this statement:

> Mr. ADAMSON. Four months ago when the clouds gathered above the horizon the Republican leader and I investigated to see whether there would be any strike. I will not say where we went, but we were assured by the representatives of the employees that there would be no walkout and they did not mean to stop the wheels, and the Interstate Commerce Commission did not favor any investigation, and I concluded that no action was necessary and dropped the subject.

Whereupon Mr. MANN, the gentleman on this side referred to, said:

> I hope the gentleman will not put me into that agreement.

Mr. Speaker, partly on the strength of that statement of the gentleman from Georgia, I contended that this whole strike legislation was "set up" on the House. I repeat that charge now, that it was brought in here as a political dodge, as a campaign measure, and that the gentleman from Georgia, whether he did it intentionally or not, was the instrument of a shrewd political dictator, who saw what he thought was an opportunity to win 400,000 labor votes. He drove this House into a humiliating position, forcing it to accept dictation the like of which has never been submitted to in this great body before.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] in his extension of remarks this morning says:

> The strike has been fomenting for four or five months——

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not. The gentleman from Georgia continues:

> One Republican leader on the floor, versatile but sensational—

And I presume in this he refers to me, although I am not a leader—> has three or four times referred to the fact that I was considering that strike four months ago, and one or two newspapers have seen proper to take up his wonderful deliverance as evidence of political design in the matter. It is true that four months ago my attention was called to the impending strike—

Mr. Speaker, I can not in the time I still have at my command go on with citations from the gentleman's speech.

Mr. ADAMSON. It will improve the gentleman's speech if he will continue to read from mine.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman admits that the railroad men were called in by the President, that they did not want eight-hour legislation. The gentleman admits——

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, I insist I made no such statement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman admits, inferentially, my charge that the American Federation of Labor is against the enforcement of an eight-hour rule by legislation. He says the railway brotherhood chieftains declared they did not want it. I quote from the gentleman's speech:

> They did not even then ask for legislation, but there were others of us who did realize what a calamity it would mean to have a strike.

The gentleman realizes that the President has put his foot in it and that the shoe pinches. The Democratic Party, which thought it had made a ten-strike in "saving the baby's milk," at 7 o'clock a. m. on Labor Day, by the hasty passage of this remarkable law——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania (continuing). Is hearing from the newspapers of the country and particularly from the newspapers of the South. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, from the Manufacturers Record, of Baltimore, a publication devoted chiefly to southern development, I have made these extracts showing the sentiment in the Southern States on the President's makeshift eight-hour law. Bear in mind that these comments come from Democratic sources:

[From the Manufacturers' Record, Sept. 7, 1916.]

THE RAPE OF THE NATION'S HONOR—WHAT SOUTHERN PAPERS SAY OF THE SURRENDER OF PRINCIPLE AT THE BEHEST OF FOUR MEN.

The honor of the Nation, the welfare of democracy, the stability of our Republic have been bartered for an imaginary present ease. Congress has yielded to the bulldozers. But the country's situation will be like that of the man who once puts himself into the hands of blackmailers, for then he finds that it would have been better to have tied a stone around his neck and jumped overboard, for henceforth he has ceased to be a man; he is but the servile, abject, cowardly, cringing semblance of a man, dominated by those who once have been successful in blackmailing him.

For honest and legitimate labor the Manufacturers' Record has the highest respect. It would seek for the largest pay and the shortest number of hours compatible with strength and with work and the highest advancement of humanity, but for men who dare, as the leaders of the railroad brotherhoods did, to bulldoze the Nation by threatening starvation unless their terms were granted, it believes that no denunciation can be too strong, for these men, using the power of the hundreds and thousands of good, honest men back of them and abusing that power—for we are sure many members of these brotherhoods would not uphold them—have wrought for the Nation and for themselves not wisely but disastrously. These men have sowed in the hearts of American people a hatred to labor unions, a hatred as great as that expressed by President Wilson when, in 1909, he wrote: "I am a fierce partisan of the open shop and of everything that makes for individual liberty." And yet these men are not deserving of condemnation one-tenth so bitter as are the men who, without even a struggle, yielded the Nation's honor and voted as these men dictated.

These labor unions have made the people of this country determine that this Nation shall not be ruled by organized labor any more than by organized capital. They have sown the seed of discord which will ripen into a bitterness that will know no end until the evil that has been done has been destroyed and until it shall be made known throughout the length and breadth of the land that no organization can, by the power of threats, the promise of votes, or for other things, trade away the Nation's independence.

The question has not been settled. No great economic or ethical question is settled until it is settled right. The labor unions have lost the friendship of millions who had believed that they were doing some good and who, unlike President Wilson, were not "fierce partisans of the open shop," but henceforth the man who will really lead in following President Wilson's desire to be a "fierce partisan of the open shop" will find that he has a big majority of the American people back of him.

The papers of the country are discussing these questions with unwonted vigor. While some of them have been willing to seek domestic peace, regardless of the sacrifice of honor and principle, many others are vigorous in their denunciation of this policy. From a few Southern papers, in order to show the vigor with which many of them are denouncing the surrender of Congress, we are taking a few extracts. Many of them are strikingly strong. The Baltimore Sun, for instance, one of the most ardent supporters of the Democratic Party and of the administration, one that was a leader in demanding some congressional action, seems to have caught a new vision of the subject, and on Monday last, among other things, said:

"Like dictators, they established themselves in the Capitol, and at the point of the strike bayonet forced Congress to obey their orders. * * *

"They carried their defiance of public opinion so far as to announce immediately after the passage of the emergency measure by the Senate that they would not rescind the strike order until the bill became a law with the President's signature attached. And the extraordinary spectacle was presented Saturday evening at the Capital of this country of the President of the United States having to beg the big railroad chiefs, through his Secretary of Labor, to call off the strike before his actual signature was appended to the measure, and to accept his word of honor as a gentleman that he would sign it without fail bright and early Sunday morning."

Other papers are equally as vigorous and show that they have clearly sensed the significance, the real meaning, of this momentous hour in the life of the Republic.

—

[From the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle, Sept. 3.]

IS THIS GREAT REPUBLIC OF OURS DRIFTING ONTO THE ROCKS?

That piece of political perfidy which was enacted in the House on Friday and in the Senate of the United States on Saturday—in answer to the defiant demand of certain railroad brotherhoods, which stood, "stop watch in hand," as one Senator aptly expressed it, threatening to tie up every railroad in the country unless Congress came to time with a Federal statute providing for an "8-hour day with 10 hours' pay" without arbitration—may serve to stave off an immediate clash with a certain element of organized labor, but as sure as the sun shines it will rise again to plague this Government and its people from the highest to the lowest.

Nothing more revolutionary has been done in any civilized country, with the possible exception of Mexico, since the French Revolution itself. And we have made much the same sort of history in America this past week as heralded the "reign of terror" which preceded the French Republic. Let us not forget it, for inasmuch as history has repeated itself so far, history will repeat itself still further—unless perchance enough strong men arise to hold back the storm.

For what has happened—this cringing sacrifice of principle to expediency—the country has President Wilson to thank, for it was he who first sought to make political capital out of this national crisis, or, else, was too pitifully weak to display the strength of a strong man in a great emergency. And a pliant and suppliant Congress—fed to mental obesity out of the "patronage" spoon—was only too easily coerced into following the President's lead.

So we have the spectacle of the Government of these great United States, with their 100,000,000 of people, surrendering abjectly, with eager haste, to the uncompromising, unarbitrable demand of an army of only 400,000 men—and these armed only with the ballot.

Is this the place among the nations of the earth that the American Republic has struggled 140 years to attain? If so, may God have mercy on its future. For, as the Manufacturers' Record so well says:

"By the side of this question, that of the tariff, which has seemed supreme in importance, or that of 'preparedness,' vital to the Nation's existence, almost seem to sink into insignificance, for what is the use of trying to save a country from poverty or to save a Nation from destruction if the Nation is composed of a hundred million people who are willing to sacrifice principle for temporary convenience, or who are willing to be blackmailed into yielding principle because of the threat that they will be made to suffer financially if they do not do so?"

Alas! it is the most shameful surrender of principle that has ever yet stained our country's history. There was in it none of the "spirit of '76," when a mere handful of American colonists fought for eight long years the greatest nation of the earth to throw off the yoke of "taxation without representation." There was in it none of the "spirit of the sixties," when this young Nation split in twain and spilled the blood of its countless thousands rather than either side should surrender "principle to expediency."

It is, indeed, an invitation to any foreign foe to make upon us at will lesser or greater demands, believing that we have grown so bloodless as to be willing to surrender almost any principle without resistance. For if an unarmed army of 400,000 men within our borders may make a President of the United States tote and fetch and a Congress kneel and obey, what might not an army of 4,000,000 men hope to accomplish?

But the deed is done, so far as it is within the power of Congressmen and Senators and a President to do; one and all, either so enamored of politics or so cowed by fear of political consequences, as to supinely yield to a few organized-labor "brotherhoods" the right to rule or ruin the country.

For, mind you, this shameless surrender does not stop here. It is, indeed, but the entering wedge. Others are but waiting to be heard from. And why not? Why should a law be passed fixing an "8-hour day with 10 hours' pay" for one class of citizens—and these already by far the best paid in their calling—without extending it to all classes? The men in the mills, on the street cars, the clerks in our stores, the laborers in our fields, the very servants in our families, will be fools, indeed, if they do not come forward to claim their share in this "new civilization."

Only the Supreme Court of the United States—whose members are chosen for life and who are, therefore, independent of the "political effect" of their action—remains to say whether or not the Constitution of these United States can be rewritten by the President and Congress thereof. It alone may forestall the impending revolution, unless, perchance, the people themselves—the unorganized, untrammeled voters of the land—take it into their heads to turn out of office every man who thus reversed the fundamental principles of a democracy and delivered over the government of the majority to a ridiculous minority, and thereby save the Republic to their children and grandchildren.

Unless either the people or their courts undo this revolutionary legislation—this "stand and deliver" mandate of the buccaneer brotherhoods—then, indeed, is this great Republic of ours drifting onto the rocks.

—

[From the Baltimore (Md.) Sun, Sept. 4.]

BROTHERHOODS WILL HAVE REASON TO REGRET ARBITRARY AND ARROGANT COURSE.

We all rejoice to-day that the brotherhoods' bludgeon has not been brought down crushingly upon our heads; but while thankful for our escape from the vicious blow, we are in no mood to kiss the hand that threatened to smite us. Frankly, we believe the brotherhoods will have reason to regret the resentment which their arbitrary and arrogant course has provoked. Public good will is an asset which they can not afford to throw away, and they may find that, while temporarily triumphant, they stand to lose more in popular sympathy and support in the long run than they have gained for the time in wages. * * *

Like dictators, they established themselves in the Capitol, and at the point of the strike bayonet forced Congress to obey their orders. * * *

Obviously Congress can not afford to leave the matter as it stands at present. In the circumstances it was forced to surrender in order to protect the life of the country. With a pistol at his head a man is glad enough to save himself by any means in his power. But the interests of society and the dignity and self-respect of the Government demand that no such humiliating incident as this shall be permitted to occur again. * * * At least 80 per cent of the American people want a definite assurance that they will not again be subjected to the compulsion of brotherhood threats whenever the members of the railroad unions take it into their heads to make a new demand. They chose their time well this year, when the menace of a strike was peculiarly serious to both business and political interests. If no further legislation is passed, how can the country know that the same thing will not occur again two years hence or four years hence?

The Government of the United States is founded on the principle of a square deal for everybody. There can be no privileged or favored classes under it without weakening its foundations. Popular wrath against corporations was aroused to fever heat a few years ago because that principle was violated in favor of capital. But favoritism in any form is repugnant to the American sense of justice, and tyranny is as abhorrent when exercised by the union as when exercised by the corporation.

The insolent and dictatorial attitude assumed by the brotherhood leaders in connection with this strike business has disgusted all fair-minded men. They carried their defiance of public opinion so far as to announce immediately after the passage of the emergency measure by the Senate that they would not rescind the strike order until the bill became a law with the President's signature attached. And the extraordinary spectacle was presented Saturday evening at the Capital of this country of the President of the United States having to beg the big railroad chiefs, through his Secretary of Labor, to call off the strike before his actual signature was appended to the measure, and to accept his word of honor as a gentleman that he would sign it without fail bright and early Sunday morning.

—

[From the Newport News (Va.) Daily Press, Sept. 1.]

"IS PEACE SO SWEET AS TO BE PURCHASED AT THE PRICE OF LIBERTY?"

Suppose the stockholders of the railway systems of the United States had banded themselves together and served notice on the Interstate Commerce Commission that unless they should be allowed to raise their rates on 10 days' notice, they would tie up all the railways, cut off the food supplies of the cities, throw out of employment not only railroad employees, but the employees of all industries, bring countless thousands to the very verge of starvation and precipitate a national calamity (to use the words of the President), would Congress have rushed through pell mell a bill instructing the Interstate Commerce Commission to yield to the demands of the railroad owners? * * *

We are told that Congress has acted in the interest of peace. But is peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of liberty? And does this submissive action of Congress tend to bring stable peace? Is it not an incentive to agitation? Is it not an invitation to every other vote controlling organization to raid Congress and make selfish demands? Nay, is it not pandering to the selfishness of an organization which threatened to paralyze the transportation facilities of the country with its Nation-wide results? Is it not confession on the part of Congress that a fraction, and a small fraction, of citizens have it in their power to bring disaster upon the entire country?

These are questions for the people to consider in serious meditation. It is a crisis in the Nation's affairs. We are brought face to face with the question whether the whole people or a small fraction of the people rule Congress. It is time for the people to ask themselves whether or not Senator TILLMAN spoke the truth when he said that Members of Congress are servile to organized labor.

—

[From the Macon (Ga.) Daily Telegraph, Sept. 3.]

OF DEEP, WORLD-WIDE SIGNIFICANCE.

The situation is about like this: The brotherhoods have won a victory in that on a threat to lay down their work and starve the Nation the lawmaking body of that Nation has hastened to enact a law forcing the men who supply the money to the pay rolls to pay out each month just what the brotherhoods, the workers, demanded at the first they should be paid. (The modifications from the original demands are slight.) The railroads are given to understand future legislation may see to it they are kept from actual loss by provision for rate increases.

The two strongest brotherhoods have won in the most epoch making coming to grips between capital and labor the world has ever known, greatest because one must judge by the significance of the political victory the workers have achieved. The telegraphers and shopmen will necessarily be next. In view of the victory of the brotherhoods, already given what they asked, brotherhoods that needed it far less than the next two or three to come for their meed, it is ridiculous to say the move will not be made. They have a right to want a law giving them what they want, and as they can tie up the country with the proper support from other unions, who in turn will be wanting to come for their "cut-in"—they will get that law in good time.

In the passage of time all classes of railroad employees should have their demands secured by law and the railroads compensated by further rate increases.

From the railroads to the telegraph companies, to the great industrial producing corporations, such as the United States Steel Corporation, the great flour mills, the packers, the lumber producers—all separate industries, with great classes of employees, who could speedily organize, and certainly should do so without delay in light of what the two railroad brotherhoods have achieved—is but a short and logically natural step. The question of right or wrong, of whether they are entitled to what they ask for, will not enter into the question at all; necessity will make its own law; expediency will mold the policy of the moment, just as it has done in Washington the week so shortly come to an end. In turn those classifications of industry not organized as the railroads are, will be forced to, and the extra cost of production passed on in agreed-upon and adhered-to extra charges to the consuming market. * * *

If this brotherhood of man, politically called Socialism, is not a good thing, if it is what the majority of Americans believe it to be, then the races of the future will write the names of Woodrow Wilson and CHARLES ADAMSON and FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS * * * well, as the men who put through a freak and anarchistic bill during a certain panicky period in the Nation's industrial unrest called the Adamson bill, a law that the Supreme Court promptly relegated to the limbo where it belonged.

One thing or the other, but whichever way one of the most remarkable, most vital pieces of legislation ever enacted in the history of the earth. Its final disposition will mark the choice at the forks in America, and eventually for all the world, one way or the other.

[From the Greensboro (N. C.) Daily News, Sept. 2.]

WILSON'S INVOCATION SHOULD HAVE BEEN "GOD HELP THE REPUBLIC."

Mr. Wilson, before surrendering to the single-bore opportunists who are managing his campaign should rather have pronounced this invocation: "God help the Republic."

The Daily News once more feels itself undone. Upon more than one occasion this paper has sought to support the President, only to find that he had changed his mind or his position, sometimes overnight. Only yesterday we recorded an earnest desire to support Mr. Wilson in this crisis, and we ventured the opinion that the press generally would be glad to do so. But we likewise expressed the hope, despite reason and experience, that Mr. Wilson would stand by himself. It was a work of supererogation.

We are profoundly sorry that Mr. Wilson could not have seen his way clear to do the American people the justice to believe that if he addressed to their sense of fairness an earnest and sincere appeal for support he would have received this support in abundant measure.

The Daily News wishes to say here that it has no desire to do Senator SIMMONS an unkindness. We approved without reservation the stand the Senator had taken, but we disclaim any desire to embarrass him. We withdraw the indorsement.

It may be that the Senator, in seeking to give his support to the program which the President appears to have advanced as a feeler, said things he will want the public to forget, since the issue was allowed finally to revert to the realm of practical politics. We shall not, therefore, recall, to his possible discomfort, that in trying to support the President's short-lived program he made to the discussion a real intellectual contribution.

As we see the Adamson bill, it is outrageously unfair to the railroads. It assumed, in the first place, the essential dishonesty of the managers in their claims that the roads could not meet the increased charges. It denied to the railroads their day in court by abrogating the principle of arbitration.

It is unfair to the brotherhoods, whatever they may think of it for the moment. It is a temporary settlement. The legality of the act is certain to be challenged, and it may be found that the brotherhoods have been effectually, if unwittingly, gold-bricked. It would have been far better to have permitted the Interstate Commerce Commission to have impounded their pay, pending prompt and honest investigation of the merits of their case, and then to have secured a just as well as an enduring decision. It would have been infinitely better to have secured a decision which the public knew to be right and proper.

It may be that in time the companies could afford to pay the men more than is contemplated in the present political adjustment, and this future fairness and justice would have been assured to the brotherhoods under the legislation proposed by the President and abandoned under pressure from misguided labor leaders and nervous politicians.

The next time the brotherhoods foregather in Washington on such a mission they may encounter some statesmanship. It would have been vastly better for all concerned to have settled the controversy right with the public knowing it to be right, than to have settled it with Washington trembling from fear of possible political reprisals.

The Adamson bill may impose hardships upon, as it discriminates against, the thousands of men employed by the railroads, but not included in the membership of the brotherhoods. It discriminates against a class within a class. There is no equable distribution of benefits.

[From the St. Louis (Mo.) Globe-Democrat.]

"MOST PUSILLANIMOUS ACT IN HISTORY OF AMERICAN CONGRESS."

The passage of the eight-hour bill is the most pusillanimous act in the history of the American Congress. We are unable to recall a single instance when the legislative body of the United States Government so abjectly surrendered its right of deliberation as it has done in this case. Urged to immediate action by a frightened Executive, it has rushed through legislation of the most radical and revolutionary character, legislation that is probably, if not certainly, unconstitutional, without the slightest effort having been made to weigh its justice or injustice, without the least consideration of its possible consequences. It is probably true that by this act a public calamity has been temporarily averted; but that does not alter the fact that it has been done under duress, that the great Government of the United States has raised the white flag, without even a show of resistance.

We say this in no spirit of opposition to the principle of the eight-hour day. Quite the contrary. But the right or the wrong of the application of that principle to the railway trainmen is at least a debatable question. It may prove to be beneficent in its operation, but Congress does not know this. Nor does Congress know that it will prove most disastrous in its application. It is a technical matter, as to which the ignorance of Congress is as profound as that of the public generally. Congress has made no effort to inform itself. It has not attempted to investigate the merits of the case. It has thrown up its hands. The provision for a post-mortem inquiry is without significance. Whatever may be the report of the commission, the eight-hour law will stand undisturbed by Congress. That is a kind of legislation that is practically impossible to repeal in a democracy. The railroads may be bankrupted by the act, the public may have to pay tremendously for its maintenance, but it will continue in force, unless the courts declare it unconstitutional. That the courts will do so, because of the wage section, is quite probable, but that prospect does not relieve the Congress of the responsibility for whatever consequences may come from the establishment of this precedent of hasty legislation under compulsion.

[From the Richmond (Va.) Evening Journal, Sept. 4.]

A PITIFUL SURRENDER.

Taking dictation from Chairman ADAMSON, of the House Interstate Commerce Committee, that the eight-hour, higher-wage bill demanded by the President should not be changed by the dot of an "i" or the cross of a "t," the mighty United States Senators, although whining and fretting like restive children in a nursery, swallowed the brimstone and treacle diet furnished by the dominie of their party. Without debate, without information or facts to guide their conduct, the "conservatives" of Congress abjectly acquiesced in the legislation thrust upon the country by the threats of a few men, representing less than one-half of 1 per cent of the population, aided and abetted by the President of the United States. The alternative, an amendment to the conciliation and mediation board Federal statute, they abandoned, although its passage, with the emergency clause, would have stopped the proposed strike. It was a complete surrender of power, dignity, and constitutional authority, the most inexcusable breach of trust the country has witnessed in several generations.

In the first place, the bill is a makeshift, a lame crutch, at best. As Senator KENYON, a good friend of labor, declared: "It is a fraud, a sham, a humbug," and he voted against it because Congress has had "no opportunity to consider the effects or to investigate the facts upon which to legislate for a proposed 10-hour pay for an 8-hour day." In emphatic language he said: "The verdict of the future, especially labor itself, will, in my judgment, verify the statement that the best friends of labor to-day are the men who oppose the passage of the bill." Senator UNDERWOOD'S amendment authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix wages of the employees of the interstate roads, a logical sequence to the present bill, was defeated, both the Virginia Senators negativing it by their vote; they also voted in favor of the bill, as did Representative MONTAGUE, in the House.

It is a pitiful surrender of the national lawmaking body. United States Senator BORAH tartly observed: "If, indeed, we are met here with a demand which we can not postpone, which we must execute without information, and, most of all, which we propose to execute without information, then, indeed, the spirit of the fathers has departed and the halo which has hung about this Chamber through more than a century past will soon be dissolved."

When told that the bill he had ordered fastened upon the country was ready for his signature, Mr. Wilson is reported to have said, "It is the climax of a very happy day." But not for the country.

[From the Asheville (N. C.) Citizen, Sept. 3.]

AN ENGAGING SPECTACLE.

As matters now stand, there is the possibility that the trainmen will lose what they temporarily gain by legislation in the court findings to the effect that the eight-hour bill, as passed yesterday, is unconstitutional because it is class legislation. Whether the law is unconstitutional or not we are not prepared to say, but prominent lawyers in various sections of the country are reported to have stated that the bill would not stand the test in any court. However, all this is beside the question at present in view of the very welcome fact that there will be no strike in the immediate future. In any event, future generations, as well as the present generation, will look back with mixed feelings on the spectacle of the national lawmaking body of a great world power breaking its neck to pass legislation in order to save the country from a calamity that would wither and blight its commerce and industry.

[From the Staunton (Va.) Daily Leader.]

"FRAUGHT WITH INJUSTICE ALL THE WAY THROUGH."

The President is acting on the theory that it is better to settle the impending strike wrong than not to settle it at all. If Congress acts on this view, it will commit a grave mistake. It were far better to have the contest and fight it out before the public than to commit an injustice either to the public or to the railroads and their owners, for the temporary advantage of a truce which can not be lasting peace unless at the cost of great injustice to vast interests.

The President assumes—and he is trying to bring Congress to the same way of thinking—that the eight-hour day is inevitable; that it is right, and that now is the time to fix it on the railroads of the country for all time. That is an assumption that it would be difficult to prove.

See what the eight-hour day is going to bring if it is forced on the railroads. There is confessedly the necessity of increasing, because of it, the wages of the men.

That money must come from somewhere. Railroad earnings are already too small to pay interest on the investment and can not for long come out of present earnings. The only source, then, is the people; the rates will have to be increased; the President looks to their being increased, and they will be increased.

An increase in the rates means that transportation of all American products will be more costly. This will react on every class of citizens. The farmer will be less able to compete with other nations in the sale of his wheat, corn, and cotton abroad, because it will cost more to get it abroad. The manufacturer will meet the same difficulty with his manufactured products. It tends, just to the extent of the increase, to cut Americans out of the markets of the world, where competition was already before the war very keen, and will again be very keen. It is a serious matter.

This leaves out of consideration the increasing disparity that will thereby be caused between the pay of the trainmen and other classes of railroad labor, and makes it increasingly difficult for these other classes ever to expect any amelioration of conditions. The thing is fraught with injustice all the way through.

[From the Tampa (Fla.) Morning Tribune.]

HOW CLEVELAND SETTLED IT.

When Grover Cleveland was President a railroad strike covering the West and Southwest was instituted. It grew out of a strike of the employees of the Pullman Co., the railroad employees refusing to handle Pullman cars in sympathy with the Pullman strikers.

Almost immediate resort to violence on the part of the strikers followed. Trains were seized, others wrecked, and the strikers seemed determined to take the law into their own hands and stop at nothing. Chicago was the center of the strike troubles, and the governor of Illinois, Altgeld, happened to be in sympathy with the strikers. He did nothing toward checking or punishing the daily acts of violence, which menaced property and life. At this juncture President Cleveland intervened, because of the interference with the mails. His Attorney General, Richard Olney, sent the following orders to all district attorneys:

"See that the passage of regular trains, carrying the United States mails in the usual and ordinary way, is not obstructed. Procure warrants or any other available process from the United States courts against any and all persons engaged in such obstructions, and direct the marshal to execute the same by such number of deputies or posses as may be necessary."

Disorders were not stopped by this plan, and Gov. Altgeld joined the disturbers in defying the Federal authority. No other remedy appearing in sight, the President ordered Federal troops to Chicago. This stopped the disorder forthwith, and in comparatively short time the strike was at an end. Later appeals to the highest courts sustained the action of the President. The Supreme Court held that the President is justified in "direct interference to prevent a forcible obstruction" of interstate commerce and the transportation of mails, and that a court of equity has a right to issue injunctions "in aid of the performance of such duty."

[From the Jacksonville (Fla.) Times-Union.]

DISGRACEFUL ACT, UNPARALLELED IN AMERICAN HISTORY.

Congress has just passed an act that, so far as we can recall, is unparalleled in American history. It was a disgraceful act. Congress represents the United States of America—a Nation with more than 100,000,000 inhabitants, the wealthiest and most progressive Nation on earth, and one of the most powerful. In behalf of that Nation Congress surrendered to the demands of a comparatively small percentage of the men engaged in transportation without investigation and without consideration.

There was no reason to believe these demands were just. When the demands were made the railroads proposed to leave them to arbitration, preferably the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, a body which was better posted than any other tribunal that could have been secured as to the facts illustrating the justice or the injustice of the demands. This the trainmen refused, and demanded unconditional compliance on the part of the railroads, calling a strike in case their demands were not complied with. * * *

The debate in Congress indicated the belief that the demands were unjust, but because of the inconvenience and suffering the men who made the demands were able to inflict on the people and the fact that they were determined to inflict them, Congress surrendered hurriedly and abjectly. We do not believe the American people approve of this sacrifice of national honor. We do not believe that they wish this Government held up by a handful of men. We believe they would much rather have submitted, if necessary, to the loss the strike would have entailed upon them than to have had the Government set the precedent of surrendering to the demands of a small class, not because they were just, but because if the men making them were not propitiated they could and would bring disaster.

[From the Charlotte (N. C.) News.]

DEMOCRACY ON TRIAL.

The spirit of rebellion is still rampant. The dominant determination that the issues between the railroads and their employees should not be submitted to arbitration—the only sane and sound and ultimately effective method of settling every dispute—is still a contention, unharmed and untouched, as militant as it was that moment when the railroads refused to grant what their employees demanded and the employees refused to work unless their mandates were obeyed. We have not arrived anywhere. We have not moved in any direction. The only good that has been done is negative. Congress has simply smoothed over a temporary period of probation what must be ultimately determined once and for all, what shall be the basis of settling the issues arising between capital and labor. Hitherto we have been disposed to believe in and accustomed to the practice of settling such matters by a neutral board. Now we pass up this method—the only method that precedent has furnished us—and seek some other arbitrary and empirical process. We have gained nothing. The principle that is behind the disturbance arising between the trainmen and their employers has not been vindicated or adjudged culpable. The issue is unmolested.

Why not go to the marrow of the situation, why not apply the surgical instruments, why not cut the old sore wide open and find out where we stand as a Nation of sovereign citizens, believing in the ultimate dominance of democracy and continuing in the faith that this is a land that is unyielding to any other faith than that there shall be enjoyed by all "equal privileges and special favors to none"?

The trainmen are not on trial in this controversy; neither are the railroads of the United States. Democracy is the defendant at the courthouse.

[From the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle, Sept. 1.]

MADE "AN IMPOSSIBLE PROPOSITION THROUGH NO COMMENDABLE MOTIVE."

As indicating a state of affairs in this country that should not be possible in any country which assumes to be governed by law and constituted authority, it may be fairly said that not even an impending declaration of war would create more excitement and uneasiness than has been occasioned by the threat of four railroad brotherhoods to tie up every railroad in the United States unless the latter accede to the former's demands for "an eight-hour day," but which in reality means a wage increase of from 20 to 25 per cent. * * *

Unfortunately, however, it can not be said that the public sentiment of the country so fully indorses the President's method of avoiding such a strike, for, reading between the lines, it has been impossible to avoid the conclusion that he could not, or did not, lose sight entirely of the politics of the situation. Instead of doing what he could have so easily and justly done, by calling both sides to arbitrate the whole question at issue, he simply demanded that the railroads accede to the chief demand of the brotherhoods and leave the balance for further "investigation and adjustment"—there being little else to adjust after the main issue of an "eight-hour day with 10 hours' pay" was settled in the affirmative.

Such a condition was so revolutionary—for it would have fixed industrial conditions in this country for all time; inevitably extending to all other lines—that the railroad officials simply could not accede to it, even under the practical threat of confiscation of the properties which they represent.

Thus balked in this effort to make for himself an enormous amount of political capital at the expense of the railroads of the country, and inevitably out of the shippers—for it is understood that the President even went so far as to virtually promise the railroads "compensations" for this concession—he, forthwith, fell back upon Congress with a proposition for fixing an eight-hour day by statute, and also for a form of compulsory arbitration designed to cover such cases in the future as well as a plan for compulsory service whenever the necessity arises.

Thus it seems to us, he has made a bad matter worse; for, after making an impossible proposition in the first place—and through, we fear, no commendable motive—he next proposes a "remedy" for the future that can be in no way pleasing to the very people he started out to please.

Verily, he seems to be no more of an adept at adjusting great railroad problems than he has proven himself to be in settling our troubles with Mexico, into which he has sent two armies into that unhappy country—with no other alternative than to withdraw them without causing the flag to be "saluted," in the first place, and without "capturing Villa," in the second place.

[From the Greenville (S. C.) News, Sept. 4.]

UNDER WATCH AND PISTOL.

One hundred million American citizens, who had most at stake, were not consulted by their representatives in the Congress of the United States who Saturday surrendered their legislative power to organized railroad labor in this country. The people of the Nation have not passed upon the merits of the brotherhood demand for an eight-hour "basic day" as the measure for fixing wages, which is equivalent to a demand for higher wages; but they have witnessed the method employed in the hold-up, and stamp upon it the seal of their severest condemnation. Threatening 100,000,000 men, women, and children of the United States with starvation and America with commercial and industrial war, railroad labor, holding a watch in one hand and a pistol in the other, has said to Congress: "If you don't give us what we want by Monday morning, we'll blow the business of this country to pieces, stop the United States mails, paralyze the railroads, and let the pepole starve."

As the New York Times has said, railroad labor has blackmailed the whole Nation under the threat of a strike, extorted from a Nation's Legislature a special act granting the demands of the brotherhoods without giving time to inquire into its justice or practicability, put upon the country an "intolerable humiliation," reduced the American people to "a condition of vassalage," since they have not been permitted to enact laws that freely express their will, and have been held up and forced to instant compliance with the terms imposed upon them by the leaders of organizations representing only 400,000 people. Never before has the Congress been forced to make laws "under the threat of a small part of the people to do immeasurable and irreparable injury to the others. If such an outrage can be put upon us unresisted, we have lost our republican form of government."

Moreover, the storming of the Capitol was adroitly timed. In the midst of a presidential campaign, the brotherhoods sprang their unreasonable and extortionate demand, and menaced the closing months of the most successful and peaceful administration that the country has known in 50 years with national disaster and ruin.

The country has paid dear for this "peace at any price." A most dangerous precedent has been established. How will another group of men, representing other vital interests and possessing like power, confront Congress with a like demand? Where will this policy of surrender end? What has become of "the rule of reason" which is supposed to govern the settlement of economic questions in this Republic? What has become of our sacrosanct doctrine, hallowed by the fathers, of "equal rights for all and special privileges for none?" Is the constitutional process of deliberate legislation to be subverted by a form of mob violence? Is this a government of law or a government of men?

Force has invaded and dominated the legislative and executive departments of the Republic, but, before the third, railroad labor must obey the command, "Stand back!" From Congress temporary triumph has been won, but the final arbitrament of the question must come from the highest tribunal in the world, the Supreme Court of the United States, to whom no man, no class, no power, no privilege dares say, with watch in one hand and pistol in the other, "Stand and deliver!" Exalted above politics and unmoved by the fate of political parties, the judiciary will say whether or not this legislation violated the Federal Constitution by discriminating against a class of American citizens, whether or not by confiscation it deprived American citizens of their property without due process of law, and whether or not the Congress is vested with power to impair the obligation of contracts and destroy the freedom of contract by fixing the wage which any person shall pay another.

The still, small, but mighty, voice of justice is yet to be heard. The American people have yet to render their verdict.

[From the Chattanooga (Tenn.) Times, Sept. 1.]

"THE HUMILIATION IS COMPLETE."

The picture presented to the American people in our news columns of yesterday morning was: The heads of the four brotherhoods of trainmen who issued the strike order sitting on a joint throne with arms folded and their eyes blazing a consciousness of power, while the President, the head, and the Congress, the representative of 100,000,000 people—men, women, and children—are prone upon the ground, kowtowing to royalty, pleading for the poor concession of a postponement of the misery, the suffering, the loss, and the peril the "king" is about to impose upon an apparently helpless country! The humiliation is complete when the answer comes from the dictators, "Nothing doing; we can not—which means will not—recall the order, and unless the President, the railroads, and the millions of laboring men and the other millions of innocent citizens grant immediately our demands the catastrophe must fall, and the consequent paralysis of all the business and industry of the country must follow, together with all the consequent distress and human suffering that waits upon it! * * *"

The Memphis Herald, a stanch believer in organized labor and a defender of trades unions, says:

"The announcement sent out to let the strike take place Labor Day is a shame and a sin upon the hard-working class, whose principles are upright and honorable and who would never sanction throwing a whole Nation into distress. Labor Day should not be disgraced by imposing upon it a movement that hurts every other nation and makes a nation suffer. The brotherhood is emboldened because of its great strength. It has asked no aid from organized labor, because it has the arrogance to believe itself bigger and more powerful than all the other opposition combined.

"Now that it has made its pronunciamento, not looking or caring for the consequence, let public sentiment speak out—let the word go to the President from every nook and corner—'Down with the tyrants who show no mercy to the power that created them.'"

[From the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser, Sept. 2.]

PRESIDENT WAS UNFAIR.

The men, on the other hand, win almost a complete victory in the proposed legislation. The President sided with them quite openly and frankly. He advocated arbitration, but he dropped his insistence for arbitration in the face of the men's refusal to accept it. In his address to Congress the President had some excellent things to say of the principle of arbitration. He still hopes to see it established sometime in the future. But he refused to insist upon it in the pending controversy. He told Congress, "It has been rendered impossible by the attitude of the men."

He refrained from telling Congress why the President of the United States gave in on that principle, when he could have demanded legislation from Congress for arbitration, as he demanded legislation for the eight-hour day.

He was altogether much harder upon the railway managers than upon the employees. He said with some severity of the railway executives, "They have thought it best, if they should be forced to yield, if they must yield, not by counsel, but by the sufferings of the country." Inasmuch as the issue was precipitated not by the railroads, but by the men, who are threatening to strike, this was unfair. This and other utterances made it plain that the President's sympathies were definitely committed to the men.

—

[From the Greenwood (S. C.) Daily Journal.]

"IT IS TIME THAT A HALT WAS CALLED."

As we see it, certain men in the employ of the railroads who are already overpaid are demanding unreasonable concessions from the roads. The rank and file of the employees are not raising any trouble, and they will be in no way benefited by anything that may be granted the unreasonable crowd who are out to wreck and ruin.

It seems that the roads have gone just about as far as they are able to go, and we believe that this thing has got to be settled at some time, and the sooner the better. The people of the entire country will have, at last, to bear the burden that these strike makers are trying to place upon the roads. This is fully understood, and public sentiment will place the responsibility where it properly belongs. Samuel Gompers and his crowd have oppressed the country long enough. It is time that a halt was called. We have no sympathy whatever with Congress in passing a law to gratify people who are showing themselves to be entirely unreasonable. They are for self and have no regard for the common welfare of the country. They are just as little concerned about their fellow laborers as they are for the men who are higher up.

—

[From the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle, Sept. 2.]

A SHAMELESS SURRENDER OF PRINCIPLE TO EXPEDIENCY.

Clearly it would be just as lawful for Congress to fix the wage scale—by providing "8 hours' work with 10 hours' pay"—for railroad clerks, stenographers, auditors, etc. A proposition so manifestly absurd that no one would think of proposing it.

Of course, such a law won't stand. It is not intended to stand. It is merely a play for time—until after the national election. Politics—simple, but not pure.

A shameless surrender, rather, to the purely selfish demands of a body of men who are supposed to control some 400,000 or more votes.

How much better and more like organized government would it be to meet such issues fairly and squarely, and settle them on their merits, without regard to the "political exigencies" of the case.

Well may it be asked, Whither are we drifting? Oh, perhaps, "plunging" would be the better word.

—

[From the Chattanooga (Tenn.) Sunday Times.]

"THE PUBLIC WILL NOT SOON FORGET IT."

The brotherhoods are responsible not for the peace that is to follow, but for the conditions that rendered the passage of this act imperative, as the Congress apparently believed. They have employed the power they temporarily had of the giant to the uses of the tyrant. They refused arbitration when, as a matter of fact, it was not the eight-hour day at issue, but wages. The brotherhood chose to approach the American people with one proposition to which society in the main gives sanction, the eight-hour day, when they meant an entirely different thing, a thing they sedulously concealed from the public—an increase of wages. They were likewise guilty of a breach of fairness in issuing the strike order even while they were conferring with the President, who was led to believe that there might be a plan of reaching an amicable adjustment of their differences. In defiance of the sentiment for arbitration and regardless of the obligations they were under to frank and open treatment of the President and the public, the brotherhood heads arrogantly announced that unless the Congress passed the law they demanded the strike and all its attendant distress and suffering to the people would be inaugurated. They have bludgeoned Congress to do what they wanted by means of their threat to subject the people to the unspeakable peril their proposed strike would entail, and the public will not soon forget it.

—

[From the Newport News (Va.) Daily Press, Sept. 2.]

CONGRESS TERRIFIED BY LABOR VOTE.

After such a speech as that by a distinguished Member of the United States Senate, and one of its oldest Members, it is small wonder that organized trainmen felt sure that they would get out of Congress practically all that they demanded. And it was even so. The trainmen stood by with a club, while Congress rushed the Adamson bill through, and the strike was averted. Congress was terrified, it appeared, by the threat of the trainmen to tie up the railroads and starve the country to death. But it is not the strike per se that has terrified Congressmen; it is the labor vote in the November election. "The Congress of the United States trembles," says Senator TILLMAN, "every time the labor unions frown." And he might have added, "especially about election time." We take it that the Senator knows what he is talking about. Certain it is that Congress rushed through this eight-hour law pell mell, while the trainmen's union stood by with a threat.

—

[From the Florida Times-Union, Jacksonville, Fla., Sept. 4.]

WHO MAKES THE LAWS?

The power of the Executive to dictate decisions to the courts has not been publicly claimed in England or the United States since a king lost his head to maintain it. Roosevelt extended immunity but was driven finally to explain his motives in palliation of the crime. Will Congress allow a Democratic President to claim it, to exercise it, and to defend his right to such power without rebuke? He is entitled to his opinion as to the desire of the public to see the eight-hour day adopted and to pay for the cost of an experiment to be made for the benefit of special interests, but can he enforce on others an agreement with him? Can he grant permission to tax every consumer in the country for the costs of an experiment he might be induced to recommend?

—

[From the Roanoke (Va.) Times.]

"ARE THE PEOPLE PROUD OF THEIR LAWMAKERS?"

Not shorter hours but higher pay was what the brotherhoods were seeking. Let there be no illusion about that. On the surface they have won a victory. That much is to be conceded. But whether the bill that passed the Senate yesterday will stand the acid test of an investigation by the Supreme Court into its constitutionality is another question, and one concerning which there are two opinions.

"Hands up!" cried the brotherhoods, in effect. And the Congress, having for a precedent the example of no less illustrious a personage than the President of these United States, promptly made haste to hold up both hands in token of unconditional surrender.

Are the people proud of their lawmakers?

—

[From the Greensboro (N. C.) Daily News, Sept. 1.]

"MR. WILSON WAS DICTATORIAL AND OPINIONATED."

We think the President erred in rendering the judgment, as the representative of all of the people, in the early hours of the deliberations in behalf of the eight-hour day. His decision was prejudicial to one side in the controversy and sought to close the case with respect of the cardinal, controverted issue. Such disputes can not be settled in the atmosphere of the strike and the walkout. * * * And then, when the presidents and managers failed to accept his fiat, the President straightway visited his condemnation upon them. Mr. Wilson was dictatorial and opinionated. It is a Wilson weakness. It is a fault and a weakness that has more than once driven Congress to the point of open rebellion, and may yet do so. Every railroad manager who failed to accept the White House verdict became at once a sort of Huertista, to be pursued relentlessly to the end of time. If the President, by taking an early stand for the basic eight-hour day, sought to so strengthen himself with the operatives as to be able to deal with them later on, the strategy failed, for the men promptly turned a deaf ear to his appeal for the rescinding of the strike order, while brotherhood officials lost no time in taking a stand against certain features of his legislative program. * * *

—

[From the Memphis (Tenn.) Commercial Appeal.]

WILL BROTHERHOODS ALSO ATTEMPT RAPE OF THE JUDICIARY?

The four brotherhood chiefs took unto themselves the power of the executive and the power of the legislative body of this Republic.

It remains to be seen whether they will take unto themselves the power of the judiciary, or whether the judiciary restores to the executive and to the legislative branches of the Government that which they never should have surrendered.

If this is to remain a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people, they have before them a problem of supreme importance.

It would have been better for the soul of the Republic if the brotherhoods had forced the railroads to grant all their demands rather than to use the machinery of the State to bring about the result achieved.

The question is not one of wages, eight hours, or unionism.

There ought to be unions among skilled laborers; the right to freedom implies the right of organization. But the passage of any law which in such cases as this is a trial and verdict without hearing evidence is foreign to the genius of the Constitution.

—

[From the Richmond Virginian.]

"WILL REACT SERIOUSLY."

We shall be surprised if the American people, when they shall have the opportunity to consider the methods resorted to by the representatives of the railroad brotherhoods in this matter, do not express very warm resentment.

At least there is to be no strike. No babes will die for lack of milk. No children will freeze over a handful of coals this winter. No men will tramp the streets with pinched faces thinking of fireless, moneyless, foodless homes, where the mothers are trying to still the clamor of half-famished little ones. Our great country is to remain prosperous and grow on to greater heights of prosperity—but who will come next to our Capitol and say, "Unless you give us what we want, and now, we will tear down your great business structure, whatever be the damage and human suffering?"

We do not believe that organized labor as a body indorses such methods. In fact, we fear the arbitrary attitude of the representatives of the brotherhoods will react seriously against the interests of the great mass of working people in America, who themselves constitute the great majority of the consuming public.

—

[From the Macon (Ga.) Daily Telegraph, Sept. 2.]

A BIGGER PROBLEM OPENED UP.

The trouble is temporarily averted, so far as tying up the railroads is concerned, but only to that extent. A bigger problem than ever has been opened up.

—

[From the Richmond (Va.) Evening Journal, Sept. 2.]

BETRAYAL OF PUBLIC CONFIDENCE.

Yielding to threats made by four men, the Congress of the United States, coerced by the President of the United States, is about to enact the eight-hour-day law for the benefit of a comparatively small percentage of the people of the United States.

It is a shameful state of affairs, all the more reprehensible because unnecessary. Without at all contending that the eight-hour day is an unreasonable demand, we are impelled to the conclusion that the manner in which it has been forced on the country establishes a dangerous precedent. It is the stand-and-deliver argument to which the President has succumbed, with the dominant party in Congress subservient. * * * It is a terrible betrayal of public confidence, a rank injustice to the whole people.

[From the Houston (Tex.) Daily Post, Sept. 2.]

EXECUTION FIRST, THE TRIAL AFTERWARDS.

It is as if a court had first executed a prisoner and tried him after the funeral.

There was no investigation of the merits of the controversy between the railroads and the men. There was no debate in the House, and there will be none in the Senate. The railroads are to be compelled to stand and deliver, and the people are to be compelled to stand and deliver, and it is the Government that will hold the gun in their faces while a Nation's pockets are rifled of $60,000,000, according to Mr. Lovett. * * *

If Congress is acting with a sense of the dignity of this Nation, with wisdom, with courage, with even-handed justice, and with intelligence, it will be fortunate. It takes the leap in the dark, however, because it admits it doesn't know what it is doing.

If Congress is blundering, and impartial inquiry will show it, it will have saved the Nation nothing and will have put a disgrace upon the Government that is almost beyond forgiveness.

Because it has set the precedent and established the principle of execution in advance of the verdict, and the verdict in advance of the testimony.

The people would have been braver than that, even though courage might have imposed sacrifices. They were powerless. Their spokesmen, forgetting the high obligations they had assumed and the heavy responsibilities intrusted to them, ingloriously surrendered.

It now remains for the future to reveal the consequences.

[From the Asheville (N. C.) Citizen, Sept. 3.]

SETS A NEW PRECEDENT.

Congress has toed the mark on many important matters when President Wilson demanded, and we presume that the national legislators were as anxious to avert the strike as was the Nation generally, being not unmindful at the time of their political future. We do not know what effect on industrial affairs this new precedent will have, but we would not be surprised to see other labor difficulties of national scope pushed up to Congress for settlement.

[From the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser, Sept. 3.]

ARBITRATION IS DEAD.

Again Congress, led by the President, has ignored the principle of arbitration. Arbitration as a means of settling industrial disputes is dead for the time being. Congress has established a precedent whereby any well-organized minority of citizens can compel it to pass legislation without study, without consideration, and without regard to the other side of the controversy.

[From the Richmond (Va.) Evening Journal, Sept. 1.]

"FLIMFLAMMING THE PRESIDENT."

* * * In other words, the brotherhoods have succeeded in running a huge bluff on the President, to which Congress is asked to subscribe, regardless of the protestants. This may be justice, but not of a good brand. Peace so secured is too dear to be appreciated.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I want two minutes to reply to some of the misstatements made by the last gentleman who had the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] is now recognized.

Mr. ADAMSON. I understand there is objection on the other side, which is as cowardly as it is unfair.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, can not the gentleman from Georgia, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the author of this bill, be permitted to have two minutes to reply to the attack made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman occupied three pages of the RECORD this morning, and I was trying to answer him in 10 minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Let it go. My speech is in the RECORD of yesterday and knocks the bottom out of all these statements.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I had no chance to reply to the gentleman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Ohio [Mr. ALLEN] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

By unanimous consent, Mr. OLIVER, Mr. LONDON, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. TAVENNER, and Mr. FARR were granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on House bill 407, the stock-raising homestead bill, which was received from the Senate a short time ago and which is now on the Speaker's table. There is not sufficient time left now in which to call up this bill and have the Senate amendments agreed to, and then have the bill enrolled and signed by the President.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. FITZGERALD, and Mr. MANN, the committee appointed to notify the President that Congress had completed its business, appeared at the bar of the House.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, your committee appointed to wait upon the President, in conjunction with a similar committee on the part of the Senate, and inform him that the House is ready to adjourn and ask him if he has any further communication to make, has performed that duty, and the President directs us to inform the House that he has no further communication to make.

APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, ever since the campaign of 1892, when they condemned and denounced the Republican billion dollar Congress, the Democrats have applied only one standard in criticizing Republican extravagances, and that was the size of the appropriations. Throughout the 14 years of Republican control of Congress, from 1896 to 1910, in Democratic platforms and speeches there has been this one refrain—the enormous size of the appropriation bills. That has been for them proof positive of Republican extravagance. They have never deigned to consider the purposes or the necessities for the appropriations. Mere magnitude has been their gauge, and has constituted in their eyes a crime.

Applying their own standard and logic the session just closing far surpasses in extravagance any predecessor. The total appropriations of this one session amount to $1,626,439,209.63. In addition the Executive is authorized to incur obligations for $231,945,275.20, so that the whole amount of appropriations and obligations amounts to $1,858,384,484.83.

The largest appropriations ever made in one session of a Republican Congress were $1,044,401,857.12 for the fiscal year 1910. This session exceeds that by $582,037,352.51.

According to the rule applied to us for 14 years by the Democrats, they have been extravagant far beyond all precedent. If we are extravagant, they have been profligate.

But, of course, the rule which the Democrats applied to us was unfair and hypocritical. It is only when those who have denounced appropriations merely because they are large make much larger ones themselves that mere size is a condemnation. It condemns either their appropriations or their previous attacks on us. They are either grossly extravagant now or they were trying to humbug the people when they so bitterly assailed us before. They are either extravagant now in expenditures or they were extravagant before in language.

Of the $1,626,439,209.63 of appropriations, $685,709,823.09 are for the national defense. I make no strictures on these appropriations, though the same amount of money might have been arranged to produce far better results. But it would seem that in a crisis, when such vast sums are suddenly concentrated upon one branch of the Government, it would be prudent to save in the other branches. That, at least, might be expected from a party of professed economists.

It amused me to hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] claim credit for his party exclusively for these liberal appropriations for the national defense. He knew and you know and the country knows that these appropriations were made, not voluntarily by that side of the House, but they were made under pressure from this side of the House. The niggardly appropriations which you originally proposed were criticized from this side, and we offered amendments increasing them which you persistently voted down, but when you found public opinion was behind us you gradually yielded and finally adopted what you originally scorned. But the increases originated from this side of the House, and it is as preposterous to claim that that side of the House alone is responsible for them as it is for the gentleman to claim that the present Post Office Department has been a business, nonpartisan administration. Of course, it is a Democratic Congress and you are technically responsible and can claim credit for all that has happened, but practically the Republicans are at least equally responsible for these generous appropriations for the national defense.

But though the President at the beginning of this Congress abruptly changed front, and in contradiction of his previous advice suddenly recommended larger appropriations for the national defense than had ever been made before, and though, during the session, as the popularity of such expenses disclosed itself, his judgment veered rapidly toward the popular side and his recommendations increased, so that he finally approved for national defense purposes, exclusive of deficiency appropriations, $638,939,174.51, while in December he had only recommended to Congress for these purposes $407,973,044.68, yet this has not deterred him from recommending at the same time larger sums for all the other branches of the Government than had ever been expended before. Not only are the Army and Navy bills the largest in our history, but he recommended larger sums for each one of the other general appropriation bills, with one exception, than had ever been made before. There was no more attempt to live up to the Democratic professions of economy when unprecedented sums were demanded for war preparation than there had been in normal times. Everywhere expenditures which when made by Republicans were called grossly extravagant have been grossly exceeded. At this session every appropriation bill for civil and military purposes alike is larger than ever before, except the pension bill.

Last year the Democratic Party was extravagant, according to their own standard. Yet the increase of the appropriation of money this year over last year is $511,502,197.61. The increase in the appropriations in money and contracts authorized this year over last year is $706,047,472.81.

The following table shows, in parallel columns, the sums in the appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1917 and 1916:

Appropriation Bill.	1916	1917	Increase.	Decrease.
Agriculture	$22,971,782.00	$24,948,852.00	1,977,070.00
Army	101,974,195.87	287,596,530.13	185,622,334.24
Diplomatic and Consular	4,061,280.91	5,355,096.65	1,293,815.65
District of Columbia	11,859,584.45	12,841,707.10	982,122.65
Fortifications	6,060,216.90	25,747,550.00	19,687,334.10
Indian	9,771,902.76	10,967,644.88	1,195,742.12
Legislative, etc	36,904,799.75	37,925,690.25	1,020,890.50
Military Academy	1,049,813.37	1,225,043.57	175,230.20
Naval	149,661,864.88	313,600,555.84	163,638,690.96
Pension	164,100,000.00	158,065,000.00		6,035,000.00
Post Office	313,364,667.00	322,937,679.00	9,573,012.00
River and harbor	30,000,000.00	40,598,135.00	10,598,135.00
Sundry civil	126,922,750.79	128,299,285.24	1,376,534.45
Total annual bills	978,722,857.79	1,349,808,769.64	377,120,911.85	6,035,000.00
Deficiencies	12,316,343.90	[1] 68,555,766.99	56,239,423.09
Miscellaneous	2,330,603.34	[1] 85,000,000.00	82,669,396.66
Permanent and indefinite appropriations	121,567,207.00	123,074,673.00	1,507,466.00
Grand total	1,114,937,012.02	1,626,439,209.63	517,537,197.61	6,035,000.00

[1] This sum is approximated.

Net increase 1917 over 1916, $511,502,197.61.

Statement of appropriations for national defense.

	1917	1916
Army appropriation act	$267,596,730.10	$101,974,195.87
Naval appropriation act	313,360,555.84	149,661,864.88
Fortification appropriation act	25,747,550.00	6,060,216.90
Military Academy act	1,225,043.57	1,069,813.37
Sundry civil appropriation act:
Armories and arsenals	4,685,405.00	653,600.00
Military posts	1,616,000.00	554,000.00
Military surveys	35,000.00
Panama Canal fortification	4,535,000.00	2,639,048.00
Deficiency appropriations, Military and Naval Establishments	46,770,648.58	4,786,757.99
National Guard [1]		4,000,000.00
National Guard camps	200,000.00
Nitrate plant	20,000,000.00
Total amount for preparedness for defense	685,709,823.09	271,399,497.01

[1] Included in the Army act for 1917 and carried as a permanent annual appropriation in 1916 and prior years.

Increase of 1917 over 1916, $414,310,326.08.

If there be eliminated from consideration in each year the sums devoted to national defense, it leaves for the ordinary civil functions of the Government $843,537,515.01 last year and $940,729,386.54 this year, an increase of $97,191,871.50, or 11½ per cent for a single year, and that at a time when we were compelled to make extraordinary expenditures for an emergency and the most stringent economy was imperative for current expenses. The Democratic Party assumed full control of the Government in the Sixty-third Congress in 1913. The last Congress in which the Republicans had full control was the Sixty-first, in 1909 and 1910. The total appropriations made by the Democratic administration in the Sixty-third Congress ($2,231,055,150.57) exceeded the total appropriations made by the Republican administration in the Sixty-first Congress ($2,054,584,510.90) by $176,470,639.67. That was an increase of 8½ per cent. Comparing the appropriations made at this session when the Government is controlled in all its branches by the Democratic Party, with the appropriations made at the corresponding session of the last Congress controlled by the Republican Party, fiscal year 1911, there is an increase of $598,537,580.45.

Eliminating in each of these years the amounts for national defense, there remains for the civil functions of the Government in 1911, the last Republican Congress, $783,754,214.54 and for this Congress $940,729,386.54, an increase of $156,975,172, or 20 per cent.

The appropriations made this year exceed the estimates of expenditures submitted by the administration by $152,581,401.47.

The estimates of this session are of course the largest in our history. They exceed the estimates of last year by $338,669,823.85.

Moreover, these estimates requested by President Wilson exceed the revenues which he estimates for the year in which they are to be expended by $182,857,808.16.

Opinions will differ as to where the cuts should have been made. There are innumerable small items of expense which seem of slight account by themselves, but which all unite to form the swelling and overwhelming flood of extravagance. I will suggest a few very large items, some of which in this time of stress might have been omitted or postponed or reduced:

New public buildings	$7,448,950
Furniture for buildings	775,000
Valuation of railroads	3,500,000
Reclamation projects	8,884,000
Alaskan Railroad	6,247,620
The increase over last year for rivers and harbors	10,598,135
To the States for roads	6,000,000
Rural credits	6,100,000
Shipping bill	50,100,000

A large part of the appropriation of this year goes to pay salaries. You will remember the platform on which this administration was elected declared, "We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people." The only offices which I have been able to discover abolished, by affirmative action, during the entire period of this administration were the five judges constituting the Commerce Court and the four minor places connected with the court. The places were by law of life tenure, and so as they could not be filled by "deserving Democrats" they were naturally regarded as useless and abolished.

During the Sixty-third Congress, covering the first two years of President Wilson's administration, pledged by its platform to reduce offices, the salary roll of the Government was increased by 7,033 statutory places, with salaries aggregating annually $7,769,585.12. This is the net increase. The gross increase was more than twice as large. And, in addition, lump-sum appropriations, used solely for the payment of employees, were increased $9,756,142.60, the number of employees and the rates of compensation being discretionary with the heads of departments. This would make the total net increase in number of offices at least 15,000. That payment out of lump sums is a system of employment which Congress for years had been endeavoring to diminish, because it engendered extravagance and favoritism. During the same period the net number of salaries increased reached 367, involving an annual increase of pay of $65,416.33. The 7,033 new statutory places do not include all the new employees under this administration, but only those for which the Sixty-third Congress was directly responsible. Many new offices come into existence every year without any affirmative action by Congress, and those I do not include. For example, the general law provides that when a city reaches a certain size it shall have letter carriers. Congress does not have to pass any new law creating them, and so that Congress is not responsible for them and I do not include them in the 7,033 new statutory places. Employees working on the Panama Canal are not considered at all.

It is impossible to segregate yet the new places created in this session, but they will certainly far outnumber those created in the whole of the last Congress. From the best information I can get I estimate the whole number of new offices since the beginning of this administration at from 35,000 to 40,000.

Among the new places created were 5, at $12,000 each; 6, at $10,000 each; 2, at $8,000 each; 1 at $7,500; 1 at $7,200; 7, at $6,000 each; 4, at $5,000 each; 3, at $4,500 each; and 4, at $4,000 each. At the present session, by special enactment, 4 more, at $10,000 each; 6, at $7,500 each; 1 at $5,000; and 3, at $4,000 each, have been created, and the multitude of others created since last December, in annual appropriation acts, in lump sums, and otherwise, at salaries varying from the paltry sum of $5,000 down, it will take time and research, after the session has closed, to determine—their number will run into the thousands.

One salary was increased from $5,000 to $12,000, 3 from $12,000 to $17,500 each, and one from $7,000 to $9,000.

In creating specifically so many places with unusually large salaries, opportunities for employment with convenient compensation at the discretion of the Executive have not been overlooked. The Federal Reserve Board is provided with a secretary, at $7,500; an assistant secretary, at $6,000; a counsel, at $7,500, a division chief, at $6,000; a private secretary to each of the six members of the board, at $2,500, together with attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, and other employees without limit, and at such rates of compensation as the board may choose to fix, all to be paid by the banks of the country, or rather by those who do business with the banks. All these were carefully exempted by law from the operation of the civil-service act, so that the spoils system might be exercised unhampered. When the President appointed the members of this board, who have all this patronage and who have such unbounded influence over the banking interests of the country, he took pains that they should all be Democrats and that there should not be a Republican on the board. The Federal Trade Commission, organized only a little more than a year ago, proposes in its first estimates to Congress to have 1 attorney at $10,000; 6 others, at $5,000 each; and 4, at $4,000 each; a clerk at $1,800 to each of the 5 members of the commission, and special experts, special examiners, special agents, clerks, and others with pay and allowances, amounting to nearly $300,000, and all exempted by special provision of the law from the civil-service act.

The Federal farm-loan act, in addition to four members of the board at $10,000 each, authorizes the appointment of a farm-loan register and innumerable other appointments, as the board may deem necessary, at such rates of pay as it may fix, and under this broad authority they have already appointed a secretary at $6,000 a year; and in order that deserving Democrats may not fail of the appointments, the law provided, like the others, that all should be employed without reference to the civil-service law. The act appropriated $100,000 for expenses of organization, and a further sum of $300,000 has been demanded of Congress for a year's support of this institution, and of that amount the sum of $100,000 has already been given. The balance will doubtless come later.

Under the act for the construction of railroads in Alaska, involving a total expenditure of $35,000,000, the President is given the broadest possible latitude in the employment of officers, agents, or agencies, and to fix their pay. The civil-service law does not apply to them. Accordingly, we find on the statement of proposed expenditures for the current fiscal year the salaries of three commissioners at $10,000 each and countless engineers and others whose pay for the year will run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars. And their salaries are not being paid from ordinary revenues, but in this year of crisis and emergency they "drain the substance of the people" through new and special and onerous methods of personal taxation.

The roads act authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons as he may deem necessary, without limit as to rate of pay.

The shipping law creates a shipping board with five members at $7,500 each, a secretary at $5,000, and authorizes it to employ and fix the compensation of such attorneys, officers, naval architects, special experts, examiners, clerks, and others as it may find necessary, practically all of whom, in the discretion of the board, are to be selected outside of the civil-service law. The bill appropriates $50,000,000, to be raised by the sale of bonds, originally authorized for the construction of the Panama Canal, but saved by Republican economy and never issued. How the mouths of the faithful must water at that prospect.

A tariff commission, which the President and Democratic doctrines have always held unnecessary, but which may prove a "good enough Morgan" until after election, will "drain the substance of the people" for six members at $7,500 each, a secretary at $5,000, and with power to employ and fix the pay of such experts, examiners, clerks, and others as it may find necessary. The secretary, a clerk to each commissioner, and all special experts are to be employed without reference to the civil-service law. The sum of $300,000 a year is allowed, and most of this will go to salaries.

The Mississippi flood-control act, which has passed the House but is pending in the Senate, authorized $50,600,000 to be spent within a possible period of five years, and will include the payment for services running into the millions of dollars. It did not neglect the opportunity to increase the pay of the four civilian members of the Mississippi River Commission from $3,000 to $5,000 each per annum.

Although to meet these enormous expenses the country has been burdened with new and burdensome taxes, yet they are proving insufficient, and bonds are to be issued to meet the deficit. That we are accustomed to under a Democratic administration. The last administration of President Cleveland met its running expenses by issuing bonds to the amount of $262,315,400. One of the loudest boasts of this campaign is that we have been kept at peace, yet now it is proposed to issue $130,000,000 bonds to emphasize the peace with Mexico and $70,000,000 more for the Shipping Board and the nitrate plant. That is more than was issued for the entire Cuban war. Fortunately there are available in the Treasury bonds which Republican economy provided. When we undertook the construction of the Panama Canal it was considered a project of such magnitude and perpetuity that it might properly be paid for by a bond issue and bonds to the amount of $375,000,000 were authorized. But up to March 4, 1913, when the Republicans went out of power, there had been expended on the canal $304,022,845.77, of which only $138,600,869.02 was met by the sale of bonds, while the greater part of the cost, $165,421,976.75, was paid out of the current revenues, and the bonds which might have been used were left in the Treasury. Now it is proposed in this time of boasted peace, to use these bonds to pay for the annual expense of the Government, which can not be met even by the increased income tax, the inheritance tax, the munitions tax, and the continuance of many features of the emergency revenue act.

This session of Congress has not failed to follow what has become the regular Democratic practice in neglecting to pass its appropriation bills before July 1, when the fiscal year ends, and so has occasioned embarrassment and expense to the departments. Last year Secretary Redfield complained of the injury to his department by this Democratic practice. This year it is Secretary Daniels who sends a special communication to Congress setting forth the damage it causes his department and begging for relief. But despite the well-known inconvenience and expense resulting from such delay, on July 1 of this year only 5 of the 12 general appropriation bills had become law—the diplomatic, the Indian, the legislative, the pension, and the sundry civil—while 7, including the largest bills, were in arrears and a temporary resolution had to be passed to allow the wheels of Government to run at all. Such is Democratic efficiency.

Thus the financial pages of this session have all the earmarks of a Democratic administration—appropriations enormously larger than ever before, no reduction in the normal routine expenditures, but on the contrary a general increase despite the pressure of special emergencies, an abnormal increase in the number of offices, in the size of salaries, and in the places which can be used as rewards for political work without regard to the civil-service law, and to crown all, a deficiency in revenues which must be supplied by the issue of bonds. Such are the ingredients of the traditional Democratic economy.

The following table shows the estimates submitted, a chronological history of each bill, the total appropriations made and contracts authorized at this session, and the appropriations of last year:

Chronological history of appropriation bills, first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress; estimates and appropriations for the fiscal year 1916-17; and appropriations for the fiscal year 1915-16.

[Prepared by the clerks to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House.]

Title.	Estimates, 1917.	Reported to the House.	Passed the House.	Reported to the Senate.	Passed the Senate.	Law, 1916-17.	Law, 1915-16.
Agriculture	$24,159,089.00	$24,501,093.00	$24,673,293.00	$23,028,820.00	$25,230,527.00	$24,048,852.00	$22,971,782.00
Army	150,931,483.47	(157,223,246.10)	(182,203,256.10)	(330,500,010.10)	(318,020,447.10)	1	101,974,135.82
		267,596,530.10	267,596,530.10	267,596,530.10	267,596,530.10	267,596,530.10
Diplomatic and Consular	5,426,698.70	5,483,246.66	5,068,346.66	5,230,096.66	5,301,096.66	5,355,096.66	4,061,280.01
District of Columbia [2]	15,473,676.34	11,894,737.34	11,931,817.34	14,952,092.96	15,827,734.72	12,841,737.10	11,859,784.15
Fortifications	23,305,123.80	21,997,050.00	22,368,050.00	25,120,110.00	26,295,110.00	25,747,550.00	6,033,216.49
Indian	10,175,036.66	9,350,646.66	8,961,437.66	12,077,187.44	11,996,786.44	10,967,644.88	9,771,892.76
Legislative, etc	39,749,377.25	37,601,539.25	37,616,049.25	38,196,762.25	38,209,062.25	37,925,080.25	36,004,780.75
Military Academy	1,422,775.77	1,218,804.57	1,218,804.57	2,238,528.57	2,238,544.57	1,225,045.57	1,003,814.57
Navy	217,652,174.24	241,371,858.59	260,891,961.34	315,720,516.54	316,726,516.54	313,909,577.84	149,661,893.88
Pension	160,565,000.00	158,065,000.00	158,065,000.00	158,065,000.00	158,065,000.00	158,065,000.00	164,100,000.00
Post Office [3]	316,264,879.00	321,352,979.00	321,399,979.00	322,905,679.00	322,915,679.00	322,937,679.00	313,364,667.00
River and Harbor	[4]44,376,710.00	37,808,410.00	37,808,410.00	40,889,955.00	41,723,935.00	[5]35,598,135.00	[6]20,000,000.00
Sundry civil	[7]141,181,110.93	127,237,221.24	127,540,651.24	128,246,445.24	129,657,186.67	128,209,285.24	126,022,758.70
Supplemental estimates	[10]112,000,000.00
Total regular annual appropriations	1,262,783,135.16	1,265,569,116.41	1,294,230,430.16	1,355,196,413.76	1,359,746,698.05	1,340,808,760.64	978,722,877.74
Urgent deficiency 1916, mail bags, etc		191,444.17	191,444.17	197,684.17	197,684.17	197,684.17
Urgent deficiency 1916, and prior years, general		12,372,304.50	12,372,076.92	13,523,247.17	13,526,247.17	13,442,807.17
Urgent deficiency, Navy, etc	[8]70,000,000.00	3,260,800.00	3,260,803.00	3,442,803.00	3,669,046.05	3,472,046.06	12,316,745.50
Urgent deficiency, Army		8,611,502.11	8,611,502.11	8,611,502.11	8,611,502.11	8,611,502.11
Urgent deficiency, Army and Navy		25,952,098.83	27,556,098.83	27,556,098.83	27,556,098.83	27,556,098.83
Deficiency, 1916, and prior years		14,326,272.53	14,352,069.11	15,467,908.60	15,741,870.54	[9]15,288,403.63
Total regular annual and deficiency appropriations	1,338,783,135.16	1,330,486,508.15	1,360,734,691.30	1,423,975,684.70	1,428,993,117.83	1,415,304,536.63	991,039,623.24
Miscellaneous						[11]85,000,000.00	2,793,807.91
Total, regular annual, deficiency, and miscellaneous appropriations						1,503,304,536.63	993,833,431.15
Permanent annual and indefinite appropriations	[12]135,074,673.00					[12]123,074,673.00	133,267,297.01
Grand total, regular annual, deficiency, miscellaneous, and permanent annual and indefinite appropriations	1,473,857,808.16					[13]1,626,439,209.63	[14]1,114,937,012.02

[1] The Army bill for 1917, as originally passed, was vetoed by the President on Aug. 18, 1916. The amounts of the vetoed bill are set forth in parentheses in order to preserve its history, but the amounts are not included in any of the totals stated herein.

[2] One-half of the amounts for the District of Columbia payable by the United States, except amounts for the water service (estimated for 1917 at $130,480), which are payable from the revenues of the water department.

[3] The expenses of the Postal Service are payable from postal revenues to the extent that they are sufficient therefor and the remainder is paid out of the Treasury. For the fiscal year 1917 the sum of $8,000,000 is estimated, under permanent annual and indefinite appropriations, as the amount required from the General Treasury to supplement the postal revenues.

[4] In addition to this amount the sum of $1,462,800 to meet contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements is included in the sundry civil estimates for 1917.

[5] In addition to this amount the sum of $1,482,800 is appropriated in the sundry civil act to carry out contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements for 1917.

[6] In addition to this amount the sum of $3,982,000 was appropriated in the sundry civil act to carry out contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements for 1916.

[7] This amount includes $1,462,800 to carry out contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements, and $27,535,469.11 for construction, maintenance, operation and fortification of the Panama Canal for 1917.

[8] This amount includes $1,482,800 to carry out contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements, and $21,335,000 for construction, maintenance, operation, and fortification of the Panama Canal for 1917.

[9] This amount includes $12,196,550 for construction of public buildings; $3,982,000 to carry out contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements; $19,573,048.30 for the construction, maintenance, operation, and fortification of the Panama Canal; and $13,530,000 for the Reclamation Service previously provided for under permanent appropriations.

[10] This amount is approximated.

[11] This amount is approximated, and includes $30,100,000 in the shipping act; $20,000,000 in the national defense act; $9,000,000 in the good roads act; $6,100,000 in the farm-loan act.

[12] This is the amount submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury in the annual estimates for the fiscal year 1917, reduced in stating the appropriation for 1917 by the sums of $4,000,000 on account of the repeal of the permanent appropriations for the Organized Militia and $8,000,000 for postal deficiency included in amount of annual postal appropriation act. The exact amount appropriated under permanent appropriations is not ascertainable until two years after the close of the fiscal year. This sum includes estimated amount of $60,727,000 to meet sinking-fund obligations for 1917.

[13] In addition to this amount contracts are authorized to be entered into, subject to future appropriations by Congress, as follows: By the District of Columbia act, $700,000; by the fortification act, $13,800,000; by the naval act, $209,453,325.20; by the river and harbor act, $2,287,950; by the sundry civil act, $5,107,000; by the deficiency acts, $506,000, and by the Sandusky, Ohio, public building act, $85,000; in all, $231,945,275.20.

[14] In addition to this amount contracts are authorized to be entered into, subject to future appropriations by Congress, as follows: By the District of Columbia act, $100,00[illegible] by the fortification act, $300,000; by the naval act, $37,000,000; in all, $37,400,000.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair declares the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress adjourned without day. [Prolonged applause.]

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17093) granting a pension to Herbert S. Coheley; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 8379) granting a pension to Ida L. Carter; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BENNET: Resolution (H. Res. 370) regarding inquiry concerning Ellis Island; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. GARDNER: Resolution (H. Res. 371) to appoint a committee to make investigation concerning the activities of the American Commerce and Protective Committee of the American Embargo Conference and similar organizations; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 17796) granting a pension to Ingoald Rugg; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17797) granting a pension to Patrick Harkin; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17798) granting an increase of pension to Michael Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. FARR: Petition of Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, in opposition to immigration bill; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, protest of Rev. A. Doster, of Scranton, Pa., against Great Britain's interference with American rights on sea and on land; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, memorial of Order of United Commercial Travelers of America, in favor of Federal aid and supervision of the highways of the country; to the Committee on Roads.

JAN 25 191[illegible]